'THE BEAT' KEYS BAND COMEBACK

Too Exciting for Negroes

[WHITE DECISION ON FRENCH IMPORT]

In Dallas, Texas, segregation is being carried to a very fine point.

The French film, "God Created Woman," (Kingsley) played there in several theatres, last in the Esquire, with no problems and no complaints. When it came to booking it into the Forest Theatre, a colored house, Dallas police stepped in and nixed the playdate.

The "unofficial" reason: "It's too exciting for colored folk."

Case may go to court. Both the Esquire and the Forest are operated by the Interstate circuit. Latter isn't eager for a brush with the law on that issue.

CBS Faces Engineer Walkout as IBEW Calls Strike Vote, Rejects 'Final Offer'

CBS faces a fullscale strike by technicians of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. A strike vote is being taken today (Wed.) by the dominant New York local of the union, and some union spokesmen feel that a walkout is imminent.

Yesterday, CBS and IBEW met in Washington and the web reiterated that the offers it made on March 17 were its absolutely final ones. These offers had informally been rejected by the major locals of IBEW in New York and Hollywood.

After CBS' refusal to make a new offer yesterday, New York Local 1212 called for a strike vote at the Hotel Diplomat here. The polls were opened at 4:30 p.m. yesterday and will remain open until 4:30 today in order to give the more than 800 N. Y. rank-and-filers full opportunity to cast closed ballots on whether to authorize a strike.

Hollywood local membership authorized a strike against the network last week.

IBEW negotiators and the heads of the various locals met Monday (31) in D. C. to discuss new demands in light of the disappoint-

Anti-Semitic Themes In Berlin Art House Chalk Fair-to-Poor Business

Berlin, April 1.

Berliners, who know something about anti-Semitism, were offered six films dealing with that topic recently. Presentation was under the heading of "Against All Racial Delusions" at the artie Filmbuehne am Steinplatz.

All of the six pictures were German-made. Included were: Richard Oswald's "Affair Dreyfus" (1930), Eugene York's "Moriturl" (1947), Herbert B. Fredersdorf and Marek Goldstein's "Long Is the Way" (1948), Fritz Kortner's "The Call" (1949) and Konrad Wolf's (East German) "Lissy" (1957).

According to Gera Gandert, who books the house, business was from fair to poor with the exception of "Dreyfus," which is a classic of the pre-Hitler era.

Bessie Love In Own Play About Actress

Perth, Scotland, April 1.

Former Hollywood actress Bessie Love, a resident of England for some years, has written and will have the lead in a new play, "The Homecoming," which will premiere April 21 at the Perth Theatre. She will portray a former Hollywood actress who returns to the U.S. with her daughter after a long stay in England.

Miss Love, who will be 60 in September, was born in Texas and was in silent pictures and early talkers, including the original "Broadway Melody" in 1929. She has appeared in a number of British films and on the London stage.

'Battle of B'way' Looms in Walters' Name Pitch Vs. LQ

Possibilities of a name war are imminent on Broadway despite the fact that it wouldn't be economically feasible during this recession period. Indications of the extent of the coming war are seen by the fact that Eddie Risman, general manager of the Latin Quarter, planed out for the Coast last week in search of names. He returned Monday (31).

Step was taken to counter the inking of Betty Hutton by Lou

SEE RECORD HOPS SPARKING RETURN

By ABEL GREEN

The rash of "record hops," emceed by local favorite disk jockeys, and the undeniable appeal of the latterday rock 'n' roll "beat," seems to have finally driven many a veteran in the music business to the conclusion that, unlike almost any other phase of show business—and, for that matter, any other business—experience in the music biz today may be a detriment. All the successful new exponents in the pop singles record field are on a Cloud 7, finely-attuned, direct-wavelength with "the kids."

The youngsters' tastes in today's dance styles, superinduced by the r&r beat, is the answer not only to the calibre of the pop single best-sellers, but to the fact that the independent labels seem to be monopolizing the current crop of hits. The major labels may have it all the way with the packaged goods, but they're way out in left field when it comes to the pop singles.

Coupled with this is a renaissance of the dance vogue which may ultimately bring back the dance bands, although current surveys still give the edge to the disks. That's the whyfor of the deejay record hops, at 50c-a-head, where the local platter-chatterer hires a hall and does nothing but turn the disks as the kids dance to them. One or two were unsmart and tilted the price and priced themselves out of business.

The kids dance to records in schools, at recess or after classes. They patronize the Friday night deejay hops. They love that "beat." The lyrics don't seem to mean a thing to them so long as the dance-appeal is there.

In fact there are two dance

Briskin To Top Columbia Prod.

Samuel J. Briskin, onetime executive-production head of Columbia Pictures under the late Harry Cohn, who was also the actual film-making topper, is slated to return to the studio in charge of all Col production. This was decided on in New York at an emergency board meeting presided over by the recently elected company president, Abe Schneider.

Mrs. Harry Cohn, widow of the founder-president of Col and the large individual stockholder, was to have made the Gotham trek also but is in Cedars of Lebanon, Hospital, Hollywood, for an emergency appendectomy. She is due to be discharged later this week. Al Hart, Beverly Hills banker and

U. S. Distribs End Boycott of Spain, Will Participate at San Sebastian

Madrid, April 1.

American film distribution majors grouped in the Motion Picture Export Ass'n have lifted the film embargo on Spain and have so informed government authorities here, in what is interpreted as the most promising move yet taken by MPEA to end the 30-month conflict with this country, prepare the immediate entry of limited Yank pix and reach a full-blown agreement for 1958-59.

Decision to terminate embargo was contained in a letter sent today (31) by Mediterranean MPEA rep Frank Gervasi to Spain's Director General for Cinema, Munoz Fontan. Action, letter explained, was taken as a gesture of friendship and goodwill from the U.S. motion picture industry to further cement Spanish-American relations in all economic, political and military sectors.

Yank embargo, invoked in Aug. '55, was retaliatory move against Spanish decree compelling all local distribs (U.S. branches included) to distribute one native film for every four imported. Embargo became a motion picture Siegfried Line of misunderstanding and recrimination between MPEA and Spain. Current bold removal of this rankling impediment by U.S. companies is considered a forthright mea culpa that can only have positive psychological and commercial repercussions in Spain.

Removal of embargo apparently establishes normal film ties while negotiations are pursued during the post-Easter period to finalize an agreement for the coming film year, effective next October.

Gervasi would not confirm or

St. Loo Closed-TV For SRO Champ Hoop Game

St. Louis, April 1.

With the third game of the St. Louis Hawks-Boston Celtics pro basketball championship series tomorrow night (Wed.) already a sell-out at the 9,200-seat Kiel Auditorium, Hawks owner Ben Kerner has arranged a closed-circuit television setup to take care of the overflow. Cameras will cover the game and pipe the action into the 4,000-seat Kiel Opera House in the same building.

Auditorium is scaled at $1.50-$2.50, while the closed-circuit at the Opera House will carry a uniform $2 tab. Large-screen setup is being installed by Teleprompters, while Sports Programs Inc., which pipes telecasts of the Hawks' road games into St. Louis, will handle the tv production.

As Church Nod, Bardot Run Ends Before Holy Wk.

Pittsburgh, April 1.

Brigitte Bardot's "And God Created Woman" (Kingsley) was pulled end of 14th week at Squirrel Hill Theatre, nabe arter, not as a result of any sudden drop in business but because Stanley-Warner circuit management didn't want to offend religious groups by playing it through Holy Week.

As a matter of fact, the Bardot blockbuster was still doing highly profitable trade, and could have probably stayed around for a lot longer, when the engagement was terminated. Stanley people had received many protests about "Woman" when it originally went into the Squirrel Hill right before Christmas, but ignored them at the time. However, the Holy Week

Name Orchestras For Dawn Patrol Dansants Vs. Juve Delinquency

Chicago, April 1.

Booking offices have had mounting queries from around the country in recent months for name bands to work early morning dances as a further means of curbing juvenile delinquency. Requests come mostly from civic and school heads supervising youth recreation projects.

Dances are usually 1 to 5 a.m. weekend affairs, sometimes coupling additional entertainment. How receptive bands are to such bids generally depends on convenience of the date in terms of travel and prior commitments. One agent here says there's no problem, for instance, where a band's doing a one-nighter and can follow that night with anti-delinquency dansapation in the same or some reasonably nearby town.

Money's good, too, for combatting delinquency, so agents and their AFM'ers are happy to have the fringe market blossoming.

Eglevsky on Tomboys' in Ballet

Americans Must Eventually Sponsor the Art—Doesn't Make, Does Attract Effeminates

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, March 25.

Andre Eglevsky blames the lack of a serious attitude toward ballet by the American Government for homosexual element in that art in the United States.

Moscow-born Eglevsky, rated the leading male dancer of the U. S. and one of the greatest in the world today, told VARIETY that the Government's failure to subsidize a school of ballet and thereby offer security has led to American companies being forced to accept many homosexuals.

"You must take whatever you can get," declared Eglevsky, here with the New York City Ballet on an ANTA-State Dept. tour of Japan, Australia and Manila.

"But," he noted, "ballet will not make a man effeminate. He is that way from before. What draws these people to ballet? The make-up, costumes and public admiration. But ballet does not make a man that way," Eglevsky insisted. "I've known a lot of actors and singers who are homosexual," he offered.

The most discouraging note, as Eglevsky sees it, is the dancer who is obviously effeminate to his audience. "Anytime you can tell a man's private enthusiasms on stage is wrong," he stated. "You create art on stage. A dancer is not only to dance, but an artist. If you should do something that projects

U.S. Navy Gets Into Carib Steel Band Act

San Juan, April 1.

Not only are oil firms in the Carib area subsidizing steel bands, but the U. S. Navy has one too. It's a pet project of 10th Naval District Commander Rear Admiral Daniel V. Gallery, who was inspired at last year's Trinidad Carnival to start the sailor's steelmen combo.

For its first birthday, a 33 LP Decca recording with 12 numbers by Admiral Dan's Pandemoniacs will be released next month (17). Outfit is entirely made up of Continentals as the stateside Americanos are known locally), and is the first aggregation of its kind.

ART COHN'S WIDOW COMPLETING TODD ODE

Hollywood, April 1.

Original copy of Art Cohn's "The First Nine Lives of Mike Todd"—together with "irretrievable" notes—was on plane which took both the showman and his Bossworth to their fiery deaths, but another copy with 90% of the manuscript has been found in late author's library.

Book will now be completed by widow, Marta, former San Francisco newspaperwoman. The ending, which Cohn couldn't find during his life and which had held up publication, wrote itself in tragic crash. Random House will publish.

It was feared at first that only copy of tome, on which Cohn had worked for two years and one-half, was on plane and consequently destroyed.

Ford If-Pledges $10-Mil to N.Y.'s Culture Center

Ford Foundation has given an additional $10,000,000 to the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. The pledge brings to $12,500,000 the total that the Foundation is contributing to the cultural center in the Lincoln Square redevelopment on Gotham's West Side. The total gift is the largest ever made by the Foundation to any institution for a cultural purpose.

FF will pay $7,500,000 to the Center when its campaign has raised $45,000,000. Foundation will give remaining $2,500,000 as matching funds on a one-to-five ratio for contributions received after the Center has raised $60,000,000. Center's total of announced gifts to-date amounts to $25,050,000.

Vic Meyers, Ex-Music Man, Heading for Congress

Seattle, April 1.

Vic Meyers, who hit the political trail, after a career as bandleader becoming lieutenant-governor and presently secretary of state of Washington, has thrown his hat into the ring for Congress.

He's on a Democratic ticket, seems sure to be nominated; likely to be elected, as he is a great vote getter—outside of Seattle. Third district includes Olympia, the state capital, where Vic now lives.

Meyers was lieutenant governor for 20 years.

Dino's 120G Russo Sale; Pans Par

Rome, March 25.

Dino DeLaurentiis today confirmed reports that he's sold the rights to "War and Peace" to Soviet Russia in a deal just concluded. Sale price, he said, was "about $120,000."

Negotiations were handled through the Italian legation in Moscow. It's known that Russia is also planning a version of this classic.

The Italian producer took time out from his recent chores on "The Tempest" to point out that though his recent differences with Paramount were healed (Par has healthy investment in "The Tempest"), he still felt that the Yank distributory has "improperly handled" the pic "Peace" in the U.S. market. Instead, says DeLaurentiis, the roadshowing of "10 Commandments" got the big attention.

With proper handling, he adds, "Peace" could have grossed "two or three times as much" in the U.S. He cited its great b.o. in Italy, France and Germany where he estimates combined returns to date already are past the $6,000,000 mark.

MET'S HINES FILLS IN

His Opera About Christ Playing Church Circuit

Atlanta, April 1.

When tenor Jussi Bjoerling was stricken and hospitalized in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and could not fill his Atlanta All Star Concert Series finale date, basso Jerome Hines, an Atlanta favorite, was rushed into the breach by Manager Marvin McDonald.

Hines gave Atlantans a warmup of what they can expect when he comes back for Metropolitan season here in May and to sing Mephistopheles role in "Faust."

Hines planed out Wednesday (26) for New York for a performance at Met in "Faust" Friday (28) night and to appear at a N. Y. area church in his own opera based on the life of Christ Sunday (30).

Plans are under way to bring the Hines Christ opera to Atlanta in September, 1959.

They Nude What They Wanted

Artists Equity Revives 'Altogetherness' at Ball, But Too Late for B.O. (Body-Ogling)

By JOE COHEN

No nudes is not good news in art circles, especially where the bal masques are concerned. Attendance was down at both the major affairs in New York, the Artists Equity Ball, held Friday (28) at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, and the Art Students League opus the week before. As against last year's AE event, the 2,200 attendance this year was off by about 1,000, and the deficit, generally, was in the $25 department, which was in the reserved section, entitling a purchaser to a spot at a table. The trouble, it's now believed, was in the fact that nudes were discouraged last year, and that error came home to plague the grosses this season.

As a result, Artists Equity, in effect, told all the revelers to come back, all is forgiven. The grapevine prior to the ball seemed to indicate that the shirtless ones would be welcomed, and at the ball itself, the organization went all-out by permitting nudes in the costume parade and even awarded major prizes to both males and females in thin pelts. The second prize, for example, was one of the best nudes of all, a "Spectre a Rose," femme bedecked in white body makeup throughout, with only a few strategically placed sequins and a single rose in front. There were several nudes in the first 10, both male and female—a complete reversal of form of previous years. The boxoffice build-up for next year by such action is seen as being tremendous.

The costumes generally were kept in check by a faulty theme, Americana, which restricted the

LAMBS SPRING GAMBOL HONORS R. W. DOWLING

Robert W. Dowling will be guest of honor at this year's Lambs Spring Gambol on Saturday, May 10, at Waldorf-Astoria. The club is honoring him "because of his devotion to the theatre, the actors and all that our great profession stand for," William Gaxton, shepherd of The Lambs, said in a letter to members. "All over this country, particularly in the metropolitan area, there are monuments, in the form of theatres, that tell the story of this great man."

The Lambs will also present special awards to Victor Borge, Maurice Chevalier, Cecil B. DeMille, Irene Dunne, Conrad N. Hilton, Clare Booth Luce, Helen Menken and Adolph Zukor for their efforts on behalf of the American theatre.

The Actors Fund of America and The Lamb Relief Foundation will participate in the proceeds. Mickey Alpert is chairman of the entertainment committee of the Gambol.

'Father of Blues' Just Misses His 'St. Louis' Biopic

Like Jerome Kern, William Christopher Handy, who succumbed to pneumonia and uremic poisoning last week at the age of 84, never lived to see his biopic, Paramount's upcoming "St. Louis Blues." Kern also never lived to see Metro's filmization of his songs and career under the title of "Till the Clouds Roll By." As in most such instances, the film title is borrowed from one of the subject's standout pop song hits, viz., "Three Little Words" (Kalmar & Ruby), "Rhapsody In Blue" (Gershwin), "Night and Day" (Cole Porter), "Best Things in Life Are Free" (De Sylva, Brown & Henderson) etc. "Alexander's Ragtime Band," was not an Irving Berlin biographical—any analogy was of a most loose nature.

In Handy's case, at the all-industry dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., last November, the blind composer, a cheerful guest of honor despite being wheelchaired on the dais—a condition of quite a few years—declared himself that Nat King Cole's personation of him would be not only his "proudest achievement" but "would be forever a monument to my race."

"Seeing" his biopic is not as

50G Anonymous Grant To Manie Sacks Memorial

Philadelphia, April 1.

An anonymous grant of $50,000 has been made in memory of Emanuel "Manie" Sacks to the Albert Einstein Medical Center by a lifelong friend of the late vice president of the Radio Corp. of America and National Broadcasting Co.

Sacks was formerly a member of the board of trustees of the Einstein Center. Paul J. Johnson, president of the center, announced that the gift would be used to set up a special closed-circuit television facility and a special classroom in the new Medical Surgical Bldg., now under construction.

The money will purchase tv equipment and facilities, including cameras and monitors for classroom use to enable doctors to observe closeups of vital surgery and hear the surgeon's commentary, Johnson said.

Why Keep Whipping Theatre Screens?

Showman Asks If J. Edgar Hoover of FBI Owns A TV Set—Cites Hammer Fiend in Parlor

Hollywood, April 1.

Samuel Arkoff, v.p. of American-International Pictures, chided J. Edgar Hoover, chief of FBI, for requesting the Hollywood motion picture industry to softpedal crime and completely failing to mention television for glorifying criminals in their programs.

"We're tired of motion pictures being used this way," he said, in a reply to G-man's protest in a letter to MPAA prexy Eric Johnston that films were hero-izing criminals.

"Hoover has ignored the tv industry that comes into your parlor," he told newspapermen here. "If the FBI is legitimate in its complaint that gangsters are glorified in films, let them go to the homes and do something about the television screen."

He cited as an example a recent Tab Hunter tv subject, in which actor as a juve delinquent hammered two women to death. This, he said, has not caught the FBI's attention.

However, he added he's sure that Hoover is "sincere" in his pitch to the motion picture industry and probably hasn't yet gotten around to the parlor medium. "Perhaps

Justice Will 'Talk' Iffy Okay of NT's Film Handling

Los Angeles, April 1.

National Theatres has been advised by Dept. of Justice of its willingness to explore a modification of the consent decree to permit its engagement in domestic distribution of a "limited number" of NT-produced films.

Providing, it was pointed out, NT "will surrender pre-emptive rights to other exhibitors."

NT's consent judgment restricts it from participating in domestic distribution except on court order. Circuit last October requested a modification of the judgment, including its right not only to engage in production and distribution but also the right to exhibit such films in its own theatres.

FILM CLASSICS DRAG ON

Defunct Since 1951—Seek New Path To a Settlement

Creditors of Film Classics, a distribution outfit defunct since 1951, have been directed to show cause before N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Joseph A. Gavagan on April 11 why attorney Stanley L. Gluck should not be named assignee for benefit of claimants as replacement for the late Irving Kaufman.

Following the hearing it's expected that the court will order Kaufman's estate to turn over $16,996, representing the balance of monies due FC creditors, to Gluck. Law firm of Gainsburg, Gottlieb, Levitan & Cole will probably be named to handle any legal proceedings on behalf of the assignee.

Max Arnow Rejoins Col

Hollywood, April 1.

Maxwell Arnow, who left Columbia Pictures two years ago to join Hecht-Hill-Lancaster as exec veepee, returns to Col tomorrow (Wed.) in a newly-created exec post.

Arnow, first addition to the newly-announced reorganization of the exec staff, will function in various creative branches of production, including important casting. During his prior 15 years' association with company, he was talent exec, a spot unfilled during his absence.

Popcorn & Passion

Memphis, April 1.

Jim Blevins, "Mayor of Popcorn Village" at Nashville came here to commission Elvis Presley just before he donned his khaki garb as a "kernel" of his Popcorn village staff.

Blevins and his Memphis rep, Tommy Baldridge, exec of the Variety Club, Tent No. 20 here, gave Presley a plaque and his "kernel commission" in a special stint held at the local club rooms. The Popcorn Mayor asserted award was made in recognition of a "survey finding that Presley's motion pictures sold more popcorn in theatres during 1956 and 1957 than any others."

Bank of America Folds Gotham Film Financing

Bank of America at the end of April will close its theatrical and television office in New York, with the department to be shifted to Los Angeles under the supervision of v. p. Francis Harwood. Peter W. Geiger, who headed the Gotham branch, is leaving bank's employ.

B. of A. opened the Manhattan office eight years ago for the purpose of playing off 30 features which had been acquired via foreclosure, including a package originally made by Enterprise Productions, now defunct. Distribution was taken over by General Teleradio for television and Favorite Films for theatrical reissue.

Residual rights recently were sold to Mundus Television Corp.

NEWMAN OF GOLDWYN'S STAFF TO JOIN WAYNE

Hollywood, April 1.

Robert V. Newman, vp of Samuel Goldwyn Productions for past seven years, has signed to head John Wayne's Batjac Productions, in an expansion of indie's operations. He assumes new duties probably in two to three months, after Goldwyn gets underway with "Porgy and Bess" around June 1.

Batjac's expansion, according to Wayne, will be in theatrical and vidpix production. Prior to joining Goldwyn, Newman was a Broadway producer, then Republic Pictures vp.

Frank Gervasi's recent visit to Spain from his (MPEA) Rome base has "untensed" the situation there somewhat and feeling is things may be headed back on the right track again.

PRESS OPINIONS ON FILM EXECS

Stockholders through the years have made suggestions concerning the operation of film companies in which they had holdings, of course. But now, more so.

This is indicated by several film execs, who stated the investors in motion picture securities are keeping a closer watch on the industry because of the current box-office unsteadiness and, in a couple of instances, passed dividends.

A specific case is provided by an investor who himself is involved. He's David Unger, who owns fairly substantial blocks of stock in several film corporations.

Unger this week related how he pressed Paramount on the matter of buying top story properties, including novels and plays. He said he complained to the Par management that Par let "get away" such works as "Diary of Anne Frank," "The Nun's Story," "Rally Round the Flag, Boys," "On the Beach," "The Scapegoat," etc.

Unger states that he's now had word from a couple of Par execs of a change in policy. Par will bid actively for important novels and plays, he was told, and the policy of placing a ceiling on purchase prices has been abandoned.

The stockholder said he's not so "egotistical as to believe that I was the one who got them to change the policy." But he does believe his prodding "brought the matter of such a policy change to a head."

BRITAIN'S CANNES ENTRY

'Orders To Kill' (Lion) Gets This Year's Nod

London, April 1.

"Orders to Kill" starring Paul Massie, Eddie Albert and Lillian Gish has been named as the official British entry for next month's Cannes Film Festival. The film, which is released overseas through Lion-International, had its West End preem last week. It is an Anthony Asquith-Anthony Havelock-Allan production.

In addition to the sole official British entry, the Cannes authorities are expected to invite another British pic to be screened at the fest.

Zinsser's Swan Song as a Critic: 'I'm Glad to Get Off Jumpy Seat'

Star Gets Measles

Hollywood, April 1.

Something new hit at Hollywood film last week. A film had to halt production due to its star coming down with an attack of measles.

Star was Susan Hayward, in Figaro's "The Barbara Graham Story." Due to her being in virtually every shot, director Robert Wise was unable to shoot around her and shuttered production.

New York Herald Tribune film critic William K. Zinsser declared himself elated and very much relieved last week over his promotion to the editorial page of the paper. He had been the reviewer for the Trib for three and a half years and is succeeded as acting critic by Paul V. Beckley.

Zinsser said he had originally taken the reviewing job for one year only, but had agreed to stay on at the urging of the paper. Last summer, he tried to leave the job. He is writing a book, "Seen Any Good Movies Lately?" which will relate his experiences as a critic and his impressions of Hollywood. Doubleday will bring it out in the fall.

Zinsser's remarks counterpointed the impression in New York film circles that he was "pushed" out as a consequence of some very tough reviews he'd written. His latest involved "South Pacific." However, he wasn't alone in that one. The Post also lambasted it, and Time Magazine this week gave it a rough going-over. Earlier, Zinsser had written one of the most cutting reviews of "A Farewell to Arms."

Zinsser emphatically denied that the tenor of his reviews had anything whatever to do with his joining the editorial page. "This is a promotion for me," he said, "something I've wanted a long, long time." He said he regretted to

Cost of New Coin Still Stymies A Loew's Divorce

Loew's Inc. and the Dept. of Justice are undertaking a new approach to the problem of splitting the corporation's production-distribution division from domestic theatres and dividing the approximately $30,000,000 indebtedness between the two surviving companies.

Tentative formula had been worked out but subsequently became regarded as imposing too much of a hardship on the film division because of a downturn in the profit-&-loss column. Under this arrangement the film end was to assume $25,000,000 of the indebtedness and the theatre department the balance.

Basic problem also stems from the fact that the borrowing carries an interest rate of 2.9% and in taking new money, which would be necessary upon the divorcement to retire the old loans, the rate could about double that rate.

In past there were occasional queries from the Loew's side about the possibilities of averting the split, this on the grounds that, for example, Paramount had re-entered exhibition and United Paramount was back in production. D. of J. turned a deaf ear on this idea, it's understood, for the reason that no company has gone back into a pre-divorcement field on any extensive basis.

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Remains Strong; 'Kwai' No. 1 for 3d Week, '80 Days' 2d, 'Run Deep' 3d, 'Snow White' 4th

Additional strong product, some just spotted in a few key cities this week, is giving the national cinema scene a rosier hue. Pix, which figured substantially in the Academy awards, are being helped this year more than ever before. Improved weather in many sectors also was a plus factor.

"Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) is b.o. champion for third week in a row, this time soaring on the basis of numerous Oscars to nearly $600,000 gross in some 24 keys covered by VARIETY. In virtually every city, excepting those in which it already was capacity, biz is soaring ahead of last week.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) is pushing up from fourth place of a week ago to second place. "Run Silent, Run Deep" (UA), out for first time this stanza, is landing third money, and is likely to be heard from much more.

"Snow White" (BV) (reissue), with a boost from many vacationing kids is climbing to fourth spot. "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) is moving up to fifth place. "Brothers Karamazov" (M-G) is finishing sixth.

"Witness for Prosecution" (UA) is copping seventh position while "Teacher's Pet" (Par) will be eighth. "God Created Woman" (Kings) is taking ninth money. "Peyton Place" (20th), long high on the list, rounds out the Top 12.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama), "Raintree County" (M-G) and "Farewell to Arms" (20th) are the two runner-up films.

"South Pacific" (20th), which has been virtually capacity since it opened in N.Y., started out great in Chicago, its second playdate. "Merry Andrew" (M-G), bigger in second week than opening round at N.Y. Music Hall, is rated lusty in Balto and bright in Washington.

"Long, Hot Summer" (20th), torrid in Chi, looms big in Cincy and sock in L.A. "Paris Holiday" (UA) is rated brisk in L.A. "Marjorie Morningstar" (WB) is rated stout in L.A.

"Man in Shadow" (U) looks fairish in Providence. "Saddle Wind" (M-G), mild in N.Y., is slim in Portland. "Cowboy" (Col) is okay in Omaha.

"High Cost of Loving" (M-G) looms nice in Chi. "Ft. Dobbs" (WB), mild in Minneapolis, shapes nice in Providence.

"Gervaise" (Cont), nice in Balto, is good in N.Y. and Chi. "Bonjour Tristesse" (Col), fancy in Toronto and good in Boston, looms slow in Omaha and L.A. and St. Louis.

"Tarnished Angels" (U) looks fairish in Cincy. "Big Beat" (U) is okay in K.C. "Sayonara" (WB), helped by Academy awards, is great in Omaha, hefty in Louisville and great in L.A.

Dan O'Shea Out As RKO Pres.; Part-Time Aide

Daniel T. O'Shea, who became president of RKO in 1955, this week relinquished the job but will remain with the company on a non-exclusive basis. An attorney, O'Shea henceforth will function as an aide to Tom O'Neil, president of the parent RKO Teleradio, representing him in product negotiations.

O'Shea, whose employment contract as chief exec had more than two more years to run, said the change in status was made at his own request. He previously was president of David O. Selznick's Vanguard Films and a v.p. of Columbia Broadcasting.

New move is seen as further reflection of the lessened role RKO is taking in the film industry. Although continuing its sales functions in the foreign market, the company's administrative work and physical film handling abroad last week were taken over by the J. Arthur Rank organization.

John B. Poor, key figure in RKO Teleradio, this week was named top exec in the RKO film company subsid with the title of general manager. Appointment came in the wake of Daniel T. O'Shea's bowout as president.

Poor was president of the Mutual Broadcasting division of Teleradio until board chairman Thomas O'Neil disposed of this property last year. The 42-year-old exec has been a v.p. and director of Teleradio since 1956.

20TH-FOX BUYS NOVEL

Not-Yet-Published Novel and Flop Play Set

"The Lost Country," novel by J. R. Salamanca to be published this fall by Simon & Schuster, has been bought by 20th-Fox for $50,000 plus percentage. It's a story about an adolescent boy and how he finds himself.

Another purchase involves the comedy, "Plaintiff with a Pretty Hat," by Margaret and Hugh Williams, which Paramount acquired in London. Play was put on in Palm Beach, Fla., and flopped, but may arrive on Broadway this fall.

CORPORATE WEB BEHIND RKO THEATRES TAKES WIZARDRY EVEN TO DECIPHER

Rarely if ever has a show business enterprise become envolved in such a corporate mishmash as RKO Theatres, which is among the five top national chains. It looks now to be tucked in within the fold of List Alden Corp. That's the official title, presuming that the various stockholders will approve everything at a meeting April 11.

Observers not privy to the innerworkings of the stock deals involving RKO et al., are a little bit baffled. The circuit had been controlled by RKO Pictures which, in turn, had Howard Hughes at the helm. Albert A. List, textile manufacturer and financier bought out Hughes' interests in the circuit and the corporate complexities have grown ever since.

List started thing rolling by an amalgamation of his outside holdings with the exhibition outfit. This placed RKO under the same aegis as the USF-Aspinook Finishing Division, which concerns itself with the textile finishing business; Triplex of America Division, manufacturer of aluminum pistons for the automotive and diesel engine industry; warehousing through the Otis Terminal and Railway Warehouses, Cleveland, plus interest in oil and gas properties and various real estate and other investments.

Enter Alden Corp.

Early this month, the official word was flashed that a deal was set for Glen Alden Corp. to take over the business and assets of List Industries—theatres, textiles, oil and all. The Alden company, which is headed by Francis O. Case, deals in anthracite coal basically and in the past few years spread out with the acquisition of the Mathes Co., which manufactures and sells air conditioning equipment and heat pumps, and Ward LaFrance Truck Corp., which manufactures and sells fire trucks.

Stockholders of both corporations at the aforementioned April 11 meeting will be asked to vote on a reorganization that provides for the transfer of the List assets to Alden, on the basis of five shares of Alden for every six shares held of List.

Adding to the complication is the fact that a subsidiary of List Industries, in the fall of 1957, bought and still owns about 38½% of the stock of Alden. Also, not long ago List worked on a deal providing for about $20,000,000 in new financing from a group of banks. This deal was on the brink of the official announcement stage but suddenly disappeared and nothing's been said about it since.

48.4c Per Share

List in 1957 had consolidated income of $2,037,769, or 48.4c per share, before special items and $1,540,461, or 36.6c per share, after special items. Previous year's net was 37c per share before special items and $1.04 per share after special items. Not explained: "Special items."

If the get-together goes through, the present owners of List Industries will be owning approximately 76½% of the List Alden shares and, as previously noted, the new corporation will apply for listing on the New York Stock Exchange.

Through it all, Sol A. Schwartz is continuing as president of RKO Theatres.

Semenenko Piles Up WB Holdings

Serge Semenenko, first v.p. of the First National Bank of Boston, continues to build up his holdings of Warner Bros. stock. Having recently acquired 23,500 shares, he now has bought an additional 56,000 shares of WB common. This brings his total holdings to around 185,000.

Last December, Semnenko, a leading voice in the Warner management, sold 80,000 shares in a capital gains move to a syndicate headed by David Baird. Word was circulated at that time that he intended to re-purchase the stock.

John L. Warner, WB prexy, still is the major shareholder in the outfit.

Lou Costello Solo

Hollywood, April 1.

Lou Costello will make his film bow solo sans former partner Bud Abbott in an indie tentatively tagged "The Giant Woman," a fantasy science-fiction film. Pic marks his return to screen after two-year absence.

Packaged by Famous Artists, feature will be made by DRB Productions, firm in which Costello is partnered with his manager, Eddie Sherman, and special effects men Jack Rabin, Louis Dewitt and Irving Block. Budgetted at $700,000, film rolls in June. No release set yet.

Odell: No Fears About Tax End Of Todd Setup

"Mike's as clean as a whistle tax-wise."

That was the reaction last week of Herman Odell, the late Mike Todd's attorney and also v.p. of Michael Todd Co. Inc., to reports that the income tax people were checking on Todd's income and expenditures over the past couple of years.

"We've nothing at all to fear from the Internal Revenue department and our Washington people tell us that no such investigation has either been ordered or is going on," Odell stated.

Todd's will is to be probated in N. Y. this week, when Michael Todd Jr. arrives from the Coast. Court will appoint an executor who then will establish Todd's assets. Reports that have appeared re the latter are inaccurate, said Odell.

He estimated that between $200,000 and $300,000 already had been spent on preparing "Don Quixote," which was to have been Todd's next film project, but said the picture definitely would not be made.

Odell confirmed the VARIETY story last week re the division of the profits on "Around the World in 80 Days." Story said that Todd had sold 10% of the net to the Columbia Broadcasting System, another 10% to United Artists and 25%—up to $500,000—to Mrs. Lorraine Manville-Baxter who had invested $1,829,000 in the picture. She recoups the coin before she starts sharing in the profits. "80 Days" is two-thirds paid off but is $2,100,000 short of going into the black.

PARAMOUNT PLAYING NEW FILMS BY EAR

Barney Balaban, Paramount president, and other top-level homeoffice execs returned to New York this week after a series of Coast meetings on a new production schedule which, it was said, will represent expanded and more ambitious efforts. However, all concerned declined to give any details.

That the company would embark on a more elaborate program than in past had been indicated previously. This still prevails. Apparently, though, the uncertainties involved in lining up production values are such that the Par officers are refraining from any announcements.

It was stated, significantly, that Par is convinced of a growing market potential for top features and in line with this will give new emphasis to big-budgets. At least, that's the way things are in the broad blueprint stage.

Back in Gotham with Balaban were George Weltner, global distribution head; Paul Raibourn, v.p.; board chairman Adolph Zukor and ad-pub chief Jerry Pickman.

Joanne Woodward Tops Within Trade, Is Vox Pop Next?

Academy Award to Joanne Woodward last week, for her performance in "Three Faces of Eve," had 20th-Fox figuring that it not only would help "Eve" and her upcoming "The Long, Hot Summer," but also that it would catapult the actress into popular stardom.

While Miss Woodward had long been recognized as a very capable actress, she's hasn't yet caught the popular fancy to the point where her name has become a top marquee attraction. Yet she is one of the new, young faces on which Hollywood is betting heavily. 20th thinks the Oscar award will spotlight Miss Woodward as a unique and appealing new personality, aided by her sock performance in "Summer."

All things combined, 20th expects that the Woodward Oscar will mean about $2,000,000 to the company. That's not only counting in her enhanced popular appeal, but also the lift for "Three Faces of Eve," which has had a disappointing playoff despite good reviews.

New York Sound Track

Arthur Freed, producer of "Gigi," when asked whether he had made an offer to Lerner & Loewe on their "My Fair Lady": "What's there to offer?" he cracked.

Reason for Mike Todd's insistence to convoy some Hollywood pals to New York, on his illfated flight to the Friars Club dinner scheduled in his honor, was a natural desire to "dress" to dais. Absence of so many personalities and pals in Florida and California, on nitery and other commitments (such as Milton Berle, Joe E. Lewis, Eddie Fisher), made the showman anxious to "import" other names for the event. As was publicized he wanted Kirk Douglas and Joe Mankiewicz, for example, to accompany him from the Coast; also Todd hoped to pick up Jack Benny in Kansas City, where latter was doing a concert with ex-President Truman in behalf of the K. C. Symphony.

Loew's prexy Joseph R. Vogel, who hasn't been able to take a vacation because of the company's corporate and financial problems, finally took a week off. He returned from Florida over last weekend . . . Syd Stogel appointed unit publicist for "The Naked Maja," which is being filmed in Rome . . . Title theme music of "Run Silent, Run Deep" will be released by Decca Records . . . "The Immortal," first novel by BMI publicity director Walter Ross, issued by Simon & Schuster this week. Metro has the film rights . . . Producer Sy Gomberg and director Jack Shor in from the Coast in connection with their new Universal picture, "Kathy O." . . . Universal's insurance manager Benjamin Lorber re-elected president of the Jewish Community Council of Perth Amboy, N.J. . . . Jamed Card, curator of motion pictures at the George Eastman House in Rochester, is the first American film historian to be elected a vicepresident and member of the board of the International Bureau of Historical Research. Bureau is sponsored by the International Federation of Film Archives with headquarters in Paris . . .

French producer, Paul Graetz, has acquired Andre Maurois' "The Titans" for filming. French title of the book was "Les Trois Dumas" and it's a massive tome . . . 20th's new title for "The Hell-Bent Kid"; "From Hell to Texas." Stars Don Murray and Diane Varsi.

Comes Academy Awards time and the Harvard Lampoon puts out its own traditional awards looking the other way. This year, the salt-and-pepper list is a little longer than usual. Rock Hudson (in "Farewell to Arms") emerged as the worst actor and Kim Novak (in "Jeanne Eagels" and "Pal Joey") as the worst actress. It's in the extraneous awards that the Lampoon outdoes itself. There is the Janos Kadar award, for instance, to Tyrone Power "for his superlatively impotent performance in 'The Sun Also Rises.'" Then there's the Elsa Maxwell award "Given for the first time in 37 years to 'The Bachelor Party' as the most unattractive social event of the season." Pat Boone got the Suzy Parker award for "the most inauspicious male debut in 'Bernardine.'" And Miss Parker in turn got the Pat Boone Award for the inauspicious femme debut in "Kiss Them for Me." The Gloria Swanson award for The Most Unexpected Comeback went to James Dean in "The James Dean Story."

Walter Winchell still feudin' with Hecht-Hill-Lancaster's "Sweet Smell of Success," which concerned a vicious columnist and a parasite pressagent. WW on Monday (31) itemed the entry as a "$2,000,000 fiasco" which has given rise to the rumor H-H-L "may divorce." Rumor has been around, true. "Success," brought in at a negative cost of slightly over $2,000,000, will have a net loss of over $400,000. Burt Lancaster and James Hill joined Harold Hecht at the latter's Coast home Sunday night (30) in hosting a social for visiting United Artists execs.

Davi March, with plans to produce four gangster films this year, hops from L.A. to Washington, in mid-April to huddle with J. Edgar Hoover, who recently indicated concern over rash of such biopix . . . producing team of Guy Madison-Helen Ainsworth has hit temporary hitch in unit's plans to produce two pix this year in Spain, due to Spanish government's refusal to accept payment in British pounds and holdout for American dollars . . .

Canada's Liberty Mag won its gamble in putting Alec Guinness, "Academy Awards' Unknown Star," in "River Kwai" uniform, on its April cover. It hit the stands March 27, Oscar Day. Profile inside, by Flora Rosa, says Guinness has a parrot, Percy, that recites "with grisly retchings," Hamlet's soliloquy "Oh, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!" That wasn't in the Satevepost profile.

Film labs in a price-cutting war with some offering as much as 12% below normal scale . . . Harry Belafonte left for the Coast yesterday (Tues.) to do studio work on his "End of the World" film. It'll costar Mel Ferrer and Inger Stevens. Location work was done in New York.

Martin Rackin and John Lee Mahin purchased Harold Sinclair's Civil War yarn, "The Horse Soldiers," as first on their new indie program . . . producer Sidney Harmon set a May 1 starting date for Negro film version of "Anna Lucasta," to star Sammy Davis Jr., and Eartha Kitt for United Artists release . . . Milo Frank will produce "The Millionth Man" for his second Metro producer chore under newly-signed pact . . . Roy Rowland Productions has been officially incorporated . . . Ritco Productions Inc. has been formed, prexied by William D. Coates and with actor Forrest Tucker as majority stockholder.

"Das Wirthaus im Spessart" (The Tavern in the Spessart), Kurt Hoffmann's "romantic gangster" film, is the official German entry for the Cannes Festival in May. Film has been classified as "especially outstanding" by the German Film Classification Board, meaning that German theaters which show it receive some special tax reductions.

Probable French entries for coming Cannes Film Fest, May 2-18, are between Jacques Becker's "Montparnasse 19," Jacques Tati's "Mon Oncle," and Roger Vadim's "The Night The Sky Fell In" (Col) with Brigitte Bardot. England's entry will be "The Key" (Col) and Italy's "Fortunella" with Giuletta Massina. Probable jurists are Russo director, Sergei Youtkevitch, Italo scripter Ceasare Zavattini, German director Helmut Kautner, Hispano director Ladislao Vajda, Yank director Billy Wilder and Frenchman Bernard Buffet; the artist, film critic Jean De Baroncelli and playwright Marcel Achard. The latter will probably be jury prexy.

VARIETY review of "The Young Lions" last week (19), going by credits provided by 20th-Fox, said Liliane Montevecchi was making her debut in the picture. Miss Montevecchi has appeared in several prior films, notably "The Living Idol," "Meet Me in Las Vegas" and "Sad Sack."

Time captions this item "The Voice of Authority" in the current issue: "'Hollywood at last has made a motion picture about a newspaper and newspapermen that is thoroughly authentic and technically perfect from the newspaperman's point of view.' Thus wrote Norton Mockridge, city editor of the N.Y. World-Telegram & Sun last week in a full-page ad for 'Teacher's Pet' in the trade journal Editor & Publisher."

VARIETY's March 26 issue obit on William K. Hollander, retired ad-pub chief for the Balaban & Katz circuit in Chi, overlooked at least two other prominent alumni— Chi Tribune columnist Herb Lyon and the late Jimmy Savage. Latter was 19 years under Hollander before switching to the Tribune to start its "Tower Ticker" pillar, which now carries the Lyon byline. Lyon spent 11 years with B&K.

LABOR 'FISTS ACROSS THE SEA'

Publicists Hold Their Drumfire

The Screen Publicists Guild, a union of homeoffice pub-ad staffers, called off a planned demonstration against Warner Bros., Columbia, 20th-Fox and Universal when the film companies, according to an SPG spokesman, displayed a "slightly more favorable attitude" in talks for a new contract.

The demonstration was scheduled for Thursday (27) after three meetings with representatives of the four film companies. "We were getting absolutely nowhere," declared the spokesman. At the urging of the members of each unit, he said, plans for a demonstration were set. The film companies and Broadway theatres at which films of these companies were showing were notified that the demonstration would take place.

However, at the urging of the management representatives, leaders of the SPG prevailed upon the membership to delay the demonstration until it could be determined what the new attitude of the four companies would be. The new meetings with the film companies, the SPG spokesman said, revealed a slight break in the previous adamant attitude of the management negotiators.

The SPG is primarily concerned with strengthening the security clauses in any new contract that is signed with the film companies. The union's main objective is to prevent the wholesale firings of pub-ad staffers which has taken place recently as part of the drastic economy programs instituted by the film companies.

Contract talks have been deliberately opened early although the present two-year agreement does not expire until April 11. In addition to WB, Col; 20th and U, the SPG also represents pub-admen at United Artists and Metro. Talks with the latter two companies will be held separately since their pacts expire at a different time. In addition, the present UA contract already has a security clause.

BOS CROWTHER PEERS INTO FILMS' FUTURE

Albany, April 1.

Bosley Crowther, N. Y. Times film critic, predicted that the motion picture industry and particularly the exhibition end will survive with fewer but better pictures. And these pictures, he added, would have the firm support of "a discriminating and selective audiences—a thing we critics have long waited to see come about."

The Times reviewer gave a 65-minute analysis of the state of the film industry in an address at the Albany Institute of History and Art Thursday (27) entitled "What You Don't Know About the Movies."

If by some chance the present-day type of theatre does not survive, Crowther anticipated that another type would develop—perhaps one connected with Churches, schools and other places where people congregate.

Despite the hold tv has on the public's time and interest, Crowther did not believe that the American people wanted to stay at home all the time. Crowther assigned to television the "non-discriminating" group, those who formerly attended regularly the "B" and "C" pictures shown in theatres.

Discussing Hollywood's casting of "old timers" opposite femmes who could be their daughters or granddaughters, Crowther declared their portrayals of leading and romantic roles constituted "anomalies, contradictions and inconsistencies."

The audience for "a picture that people want to see is larger than ever," Crowther pointed out, but it is highly selective. He cited the grosses chalked up by such films as "The 10 Commandments," "Sayanora" and "Peyton Place."

Yates' Battle Hymn of Republic: TV, Rentals, Lab—But No Theatres

The obit on a picture company virtually was formally written in New York yesterday (Tues.). Republic's foreign offices all are closed, theatrical production has ceased, the United States offices have been cut from 36 to 19 and "the sooner we close all of them the better," said Rep president Herbert J. Yates.

Yates made the statements at Rep's annual meeting of stockholders and it came hardly as a surprise. Rep has been veering toward television activity for some time, this including the rental of studio space on the North Hollywood lot to tv telefilm producers and the laboratory work on tv pictures. Theatrical production and distribution have come to an end, so far as Rep is concerned. Company's remaining domestic releases will go through franchise holders, similarly as in foreign.

Yates had no easy time at the stockholder session; the barbed questions that might be expected came in abundance. How come, he was asked, in the 1955 annual statement he announced that Rep was set to spend big sums on theatrical film-making when in 1956 he told stockholders that theatre earnings had been trending off for four years. Yates' answer was that several film companies were experiencing an economic downbeat.

What's My Salary?

Republic's president Herbert J. Yates was asked at yesterday's (Tues.) annual meeting of stockholders the amount of his remuneration in 1957. Chief exec paused, consulted the stockholder proxy statement and then answered, $150,000. It seemed curious to some investors that Yates found it necessary to look to the records to ascertain his payoff.

Prez. in reply to another query, said the post-1948 library, which is available to television, was not set for immediate sale because (1) perhaps Rep is asking too much money and (2) television interests don't have the cash on hand.

Tell us about the pictures made in the last two years which starred Vera Ralston (Mrs. Yates) and which were produced by her brother, Rudy Ralston. Yates responded he didn't have the record at hand and, furthermore, these were made by Joseph Kane with Rudy Ralston as an associate. Yates conceded that Rep guaranteed the financing.

Meeting was held after minority stockholder Charles Reader failed in a court action to delay it. Plaintiff, following the conclave, said he's going ahead to seek to examine the Rep books and obtain a list of other stockholders. This, of course, indicates another stockholder suit but Reader stressed he's not aligned with Joseph Harris who's currently suing Yates for alleged failure to fulfill a stock sellout commitment. That the two were in the same camp had been indicated earlier.

At the outset of the session, stockholder rep George T. Vogel asked that the meeting be called

Rome Holds Back On U. S. Licenses; See Pact Breach

Rome, April 1.

The Italians are holding up the rest of the American companies' seasonal import permits, numbering about ten licenses, pending determination by the Foreign Trade Commission on whether or not the remaining permits are to be charged to next season's quota.

Move, it's felt, is aimed at giving ANICA topper Eitel Monaco a stronger position in his upcoming meeting with Frank Gervasi, Mediterranean manager for the Motion Picture Export Assn. Meet is skedded to take place here Thursday (3).

As interpreted here, the Italian move in blocking issuance of the licenses is contrary to the Italo-Yank agreement.

The Italians have made it plain they'd like the American companies to stop laying off Italian employees as they close branches, but it's denied that an official protest in this connection has been sent to the American Embassy here.

BRUNSWICK, N.Y., FAILS TO EXCLUDE DRIVE-IN

Albany, April 1.

Town of Brunswick, near Troy, lost its fight to prevent construction of a drive-in by James Giordane, of Troy, and James H. Connell, of Wynantskill, last week. The Appellate Division, Third Department, unanimously upheld the action of ex-Supreme Court Justice Christopher H. Heffernan, acting as an official referee, in granting an injunction restraining the Town from barring the automobiler.

Giordane and Connell contended that after they acquired property and made plans, the Town passed a zoning ordinance expressly prohibiting a drive-in theatre. The Town claimed that a zoning ordinance, previously enacted, generally barring such an outdoor operation.

The Appellate Division, in its opinion, said that the later ordinance, specifically prohibiting drive-ins "is an attempt to zone the town against drive-in theatres," without complying with the requirements of the Town Law.

Brunswick failed to comply with this statute, the court ruled, in that it requires the appointment of a zone board, holding of hearings and the filing of recommendations.

Columbia Studio Outlook

Hollywood, April 1.

Columbia Pictures, which will produce "only a limited number of productions" under its new policy of "United Artists" operations, will streamline (i.e. cut down) studio departments in changeover to the new format, according to prexy Abe Schneider. This new policy, he reported, "had been determined after discussions with Harry Cohn prior to his death."

Indie units headed by George Sidney, William Goetz and Sam Spiegel, Schneider disclosed, are to be expanded under new program, "and there are a number of other deals under consideration."

The Sam Katzman unit, said Schneider, "will be moved over to the main lot and the Sunset Studios will be available for rental to television producers or independent producing theatrical pictures."

Schneider said some functions of Screen Gems also will be merged "to effect economies as well as more efficient operations." Aim of the overall changes, he declared, "is to have resources, facilities and manpower at our studio which will make it more attractive to independents than any available elsewhere."

Executives of Columbia earning over $500 weekly reportedly will be asked to take a voluntary pay cut of 10%. It's stressed that contract employees will be asked to do so purely in the interest of the company, with the proviso that the cuts will be restored as soon as the company is in a better financial position.

Similar requests have been made of top-salaried employees in the past at 20th-Fox and Metro when those companies faced adverse economic conditions. The slices were eventually restored.

Money Talks IA New York Hands Out of Strike

A last-minute offer by the film companies of a $5.25 per week across-the-board wage hike averted a strike of 2,100 homeoffice white collar employees. The offer came at 5:30 p.m. Thursday (27), one hour before the scheduled general membership of the white collar union was set to vote on a walkout.

At the meeting, officials of the Homeoffice Employees Union, Local H-63, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, recommended that the offer of the film companies be accepted. Earlier, the union leaders had indicated that they would ask for a strike. The meeting had been called originally for the authorization of a strike after Richard F. Walsh, IA prexy, had given permission that a vote be taken. Final details of the settlement were worked out by Walsh with the film companies negotiators in last-ditch talks.

The $5.25 across-the-board increase, plus some minor fringe benefits, constitutes a 7¾% boost for the white collarites. The union's original package would have represented 9½%.

The new pact is a two-year deal, starting Jan. 1, 1958. However, the wage increase is retroactive to Sept. 1, 1957, expiration date of the previous two-year contract.

Fringe benefits obtained included a three-week vacation after 14 years instead of the previous 15 years and severance pay for a maximum of 12 years service instead of 11 years.

Promise Boycott of O'Seas Music

Brussels Free Trade Unions HQ Asks Members To Shun AFM-Ducking Sound Tracks

Brussels, April 1

International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, a worldwide "secretariat" for mutual assistance among anti-Communist labor movements, has lined up behind the American Federation of Musicians in its present strike against the major Hollywood film studios.

Representatives of European and American unions meeting at the Confederation headquarters here sent promises of support to the AFM. Hollywood strike involves 400 musicians and is now in its fifth week. Secretariat will ask all member groups to boycott any sound track recording intended for American films, which would ordinarily be handled in Hollywood.

Meanwhile, and a separate matter, the delegates here are working out organization details for the "founding congress" in October of this year at Paris which will bring the International Entertainment Workers Federation into being. Latter will span musicians, actors, vaudevillians, film, radio and television crafts.

UNION ROW OVER JOHN PAUL JONES

Hollywood AFL Film Council is planning organization of a nationwide consumer boycott against the Warner Bros. release, "John Paul Jones," protesting the filming in Spain of the Samuel Bronston production. Notice to this effect was served Sunday on Warners. Council also will lodge formal protests with President Eisenhower and U. S. Congress against U. S. Navy cooperation in production of picture.

"We do not think the American public will approve the photographing in Spain of the signing of the American Declaration of Independence and other historic American events, especially when such foreign production deprives American craftsmen of sorely needed work," said the Council.

Spokesman for WB pointed out yesterday that company "has nothing to do with producing 'John Paul Jones,' but merely has arranged to distribute the picture. We distribute many pictures produced all over the world."

A spokesman for producer Samuel Bronston rejected Monday (31) a union charge that the film "John Jaul Jones," now locationing in Spain, was depriving American craftsmen of "sorely needed work."

Attorney Irving Margolies, who put the "John Paul Jones" package together, also countered the Hollywood AFL Film Council's charge that the picture would show reproductions of Independence Hall and the signing of the Declaration of Independence, shot in Spain. He said Bronston planned to go on location in Philadelphia and in Williamsburg for these scenes.

(Unions in France and Britain are reportedly ready to reta iate via a boycott of Hollywood films that reproduce foreign landmarks in Coast studios.)

Among other American scenes to be filmed in Spain is a ballroom sequence, supposedly laid in Virginia, in which 150 Spanish women will portray early-day Virginia belles.

Council pointed out it isn't protesting the filming abroad of scenes legitimately laid abroad. In addition to asking all labor organizations throughout the U. S. to urge members to withhold patronage from pic, Council also said matter is being brought to attention of patriotic groups.

Action against "Jones" is the second such action taken by the Council, the first having been against Albert Gannaway's "Daniel Boone," on the same basis, since later pic was shot in Mexico. Council claimed this pic was later withdrawn from release because of boycott.

The Council said it planned to organize a national consumer boycott against the picture, which is to be distributed by Warner Bros. though the company has no financial interest in it.

Producer's rep pointed out that the film was employing some 38 technicians and actors on the Spanish location. Apart from that, he said, it wasn't a question with this film where it'd be shot, but whether it'd be made at all. Budget is $3,500,000 and the major companies refused to finance it. "This project has been kicking around for some 20 years, with no one willing to tackle it," he said.

Bronston finally managed to finance the film independently, with some of the top financial families—the Nelson and Lawrence Rockefellers, Pierre DuPont III, C. D. Jackson, formerly of Time Inc., and advisor to President Eisenhower, Stuyvesant Pierpont, the Charles Dana family and others—making available the coin in both dollars and lira and pesetas.

Availability of the Italian and Spanish currencies alone made it necessary to shoot in those areas, it was explained. Picture will be done in the Technirama (Technicolor) process and stars Robert Stack, MacDonald Carey, Charles Coburn and others.

At a suitable interval after World War I, Universal made and cleaned up with "All Quiet on the Western Front," presenting the German view of war. Unavoidably the question now arises, and indeed Universal's own publicity poses the thought, has the same author, Erich Maria Remarque, done as much screenwise for World War II? The answer can only be no.

"A Time to Love and a Time to Die" is not so broad a canvas. It is less a panorama of the battle horrors of war, though these are implicit, than a poignant telling of the anguish of being in love while civilian bombings rage, and decency is held hostage to vicious character traits. In unfolding the Remarque novel as a motion picture, producer Robert Arthur and director Douglas Sirk have been long on "heart" and "sentiment" and the result, in entertainment, is a bitter-sweet love story.

As a love story, Universal has an appealing entry. Along the way the film contains much that is informative about German suffering during the Hitler fiasco. There are glimpses of the lecherous life of a weakling party official and a sadistic monster who describes his techniques in operating a concentration camp. The picture informs the Americans that there were privileged V.I.P.'s who "enjoyed" the war, that illegal luxury cafes functioned in the midst of austerity, that not everybody suffered in like measure (though the luxury speakeasy is bombed and destroyed —depriving the local elite of their rendezvous).

The story is somewhat slow in development. Orin Jannings opens his screenplay with the hero (John Gavin) on the Russian front under the cloud of defeat in 1944. The wretchedness of modern war, the compassion and pity felt by the better type of German soldier in contrast to the malice and murder in the hearts of the zealots is established before the boy gets his long-delayed furlough and goes off to his native town, only to find his home in rubble and his parents disappeared—though not, it later is stated, dead.

Nearly all the action comprises the experiences of the furloughed soldier: with the townspeople, the Nazis and the Gestapo as counterpoint to his budding romance and hurry-up marriage to the girl (Lilo Pulver) and the denouement comes back at the Russian front. All of this is quite tender, very human, and makes the point that nobody escapes in modern war.

Will American audiences like this film, to be released in July? One supposes that they will. There will be a special appeal to German-Americans. Everyone will be struck by the resemblance of civilian life in Germany to the sufferings in Britain. The woman's angle has been underscored so this is a war picture with strong family and he-she angles. That may be considered a boxoffice value.

Dubious factors are the lack of names. Only the face of Keenan Wynn in a small role (a bon vivant whose stay in a military hospital is due to gout) is notably familiar to American film patrons, the two leads may well get a leg-up careerwise but neither John Gavin nor Lilo Pulver can be considered of boxoffice value in the U.S. Their performances, under Sirk's guidance, are extremely likeable.

This release stands or falls for the American public as romance. (Europe's victim nations may be something else). Its merits are basic humanity. The soldiers are plausible, most of them decent. One poetic type commits suicide for very horror when forced to execute Russian civilians, including a cursing girl. Remarque makes clear the thesis that these Germans were guilty chiefly in not opposing the Nazis, in excusing their deeds as done under orders. The Nazi party functionary (Thayer David) has an automatic gate to close his conscience but is not a bad fellow and honestly wishes to share his black market luxuries with his old school chum, the soldier on furlough.

Orin Jannings has translated German character dialog into American idiom and something unconvincing lurks in many of the speeches. They sound just too Yankee on occasion. While director Sirk, born a Dane but film-educated in the old pre-war Ufa, catches much of the "Deutsch" quality he may have overplayed the gaiety-in-spite-of-all sequence which is so large a part of the footage.

Author Remarque has turned actor to play a German high school professor, released from a camp but still suspect. He does well enough as a thespian, though it adds nothing to realism to intrude this kind of stunt.

On the broad count what emerges in this film, shot mostly overseas, is touching drama of believable folk. One likes many of the characters, believes in the situations and senses the tragic, insane waste of human values. But in the end there is a certain "detachment," almost like scientific observation. This spells the difference between a good and a great "movie."

Plainly Universal has a job of hard sell facing it. At 133 minutes, without stars, the stress must fall on theme and author. It seems fair to pronounce the script inferior to the direction and the acting. Russell Metty's photography in Eastmancolor (Pathe) and the CinemaScope sweep add strong pictorial values. The spectators sense of "presence" should be strong and the technical credits rate spotlighting.

Running through the script are hints of German sensitivity and shame for the hate they have inspired in other nations and their need to explain to themselves the rise (by public assent) of the Hitler hoodums. In the end Gavin kills a fellow-German intent upon slaughtering three Russians caught hiding in a barn. He releases the Russians who are puzzled by his quixotic generosity. One of the Russians proceeds to shoot him dead and the picture ends with the idealistic German boy dying, the letter from his bride falling from his hand and floating off in the spring thaw of a brook—reminiscent of the death scene in "All Quiet."

The film may be remembered more for types than performances. There is a mad air raid warden (Alexander Engel), a Jew hiding in a Catholic church tower (Charles Regnier) and a Teutonic hellion (Dorothy Wieck, remembered from long ago in "Maedchen in Uniform").

Historically, it is to be noted that the Germans are treated very compassionately, that the villainy of their baddies is more suggested than central. Remarque condemns the system rather than the people, their pliability rather than their culpability. This will hardly please those who have blamed the whole Prussian credo from Von Clauswitz to Bismarck to Ludendorff to Hitler. Be that as it may. "A Time to Love and a Time to Die" rejoices in the conviction that human beings differ little from uniform to uniform. The film carries a sometimes acute "shock of recognition" in its resemblance to the conditions and types on "our side." (Several recent U. S. films, including "The Young Lions" have been literal about Noel Coward's sarcastic "Let's Not Be Beastly To the Germans." In this Hollywood has gone along with John Foster and the market.)

All in all, Universal has a strong romance against war's background. The picture fails of "sensational," but has no need to apologize. This is a picture of considerable distinction. Land.

Red Cross' New 3-Reeler

Three-reel film, depicting Red Cross Disaster Services in action and sponsored by Radio Corp. of America, had its first showing last week at Torrington, Conn.

Many scenes of the 27½-minute picture were shot in Torrington following the disastrous flood there in August, 1955. Film also contains many scenes of the wreckage left in the wake of tornados and hurricanes.

Film was produced by Wilding Pictures and directed by Arthur Wright. It's in 16m and will be available soon for free at Red Cross chapters.

Robinson-Basilio Fight
United Artists release of Leslie Winik production. Narrated by Jimmy Powers. Running time, 18 MINS.

The motion pictures of Ray Robinson's victory over Carmen Basilio for the middleweight championship have been edited to a sharp 18-minute reel of exciting fisticuffs. For those who witnessed the closed-circuit telecast, with its somewhat unclear and dark images, the fight pictures will prove an eye-opener.

The telecast may have provided the overall action, but the clear films of the bout sharply outline each punch and reaction. Basilio's closed eye is unmistakingly seen in the pix.

The pix have been edited so as to include the rounds that provided the most action. These are 1, 3, 5, 9, 10, 11, 13, 15. The final round, during which both fighters were exhausted, is reprised in slow motion. Many of the actions missed in the closed-circuit telecast, such as Robinson's unintentional clout of the referee, are presented sharply in the pix.

The films were produced by Leslie Winik for the International Boxing Club. United Artists, which is releasing the films, has set an initial print order of 850 and anticipates a total of 7,000 bookings. N.Y. News sport columnist Jimmy Powers provides the narration. It's short and to the point. Holl.

Orders to Kill
(BRITISH)

Excellent psychological study of the mind of a wartime killer; lack of star names may make it less easy to sell to public than pic merits.

London, March 25.

British Lion release of an (Anthony Havelock-Allan) Lynx production. Stars Eddie Albert, Paul Massie, Lillian Gish, James Robertson Justice. Directed by Anthony Asquith. Running time, 111 MINS.

Yet another British film turns to war espionage as its theme. Though the subject is getting a shade threadbare, "Orders To Kill" stacks up as one of the best in the stable. A more star-studded, cast might have been useful for bringing in patrons. But this is such a satisfying and intelligent picture that word-of-mouth recommendation should insure it a brisk boxoffice reception at discriminating houses in Britain and the U.S.

"Orders" gets away to a flying start because of a firstclass, adult and observantly written screenplay by Paul Dehn. It is clear that the writer, director Anthony Asquith and the players were in complete harmony. The main fault is that it slightly falls apart towards the end. More ruthless cutting in the last 20 minutes or so would have been useful.

Adapted from an original by Donald C. Downes, the yarn has Paul Massie as a grounded Yank flyer switched to espionage on a special job. The chore is to kill a small-time Paris lawyer who is suspected of double-crossing France by selling out radio operators to the Nazis.

Massie approaches the job with tremendous enthusiasm as he trains for this legalized murder. Not till he gets to Paris, meets his victim and gets to know and like him does his stomach begin to turn at the task ahead of him. But he does the job reluctantly and then goes on a mighty binge, broken up at the thought that he might have murdered an innocent man. It turns out that he has.

As the sensitive killer Massie enjoys a well-written meaty role. He is a young newcomer to films, under contract to Metro and Ealing, and looks to be a winner. His performance in this film is over-studied but he admirably suggests the transition from the carefree officer who approaches his mission almost as a lark to the uneasy, conscience-stricken killer.

There are also half a dozen other sterling jobs of acting. Eddie Albert, as an understanding officer; James Robertson Justice, as a trainer-commander who approaches the job of teaching Massie to kill with a breeziness that masks his real feelings; Irene Worth, as a French resistance agent, and Leslie French, as the victim, are all outstanding. There are neat cameos provided by veteran Lillian Gish, as Massie's mother, and Miki Iveria, as his childhood nurse.

Desmond Dickinson's photography matches Anthony Asquith's shrewd, imaginative direction. "Orders to Kill" may have come a little too late in the British film war cycle to make full impact, but it is a production of which all concerned can be proud, despite a few loose ends which may puzzle the earnest filmgoer. Rich.

Gideon's Day
(BRITISH—TECHNICOLOR)

Slick combo of director, star and scripter provides satisfying Scotland Yard yarn which offers good boxoffice prospects.

London, March 25.

Columbia release of a John Ford (Michael Killanin) production. Stars Jack Hawkins, Dianne Foster. Directed by John Ford. Screenplay, T. E. B. Clarke, from novel by J. J. Marric; camera, F. A. Young; editor, Raymond Poulton; music, Douglas Gamley. At Gaumont Theatre, London. Running time, 91 MINS.

Joanna Delafield	Dianne Foster
Kate Gideon	Anna Lee
Sally	Anna Massey
Simon Farnsby-Green	Andrew Ray

Kirby	Derek Bond
Mrs. Kirby	Grizelda Hervey
Det. Sergt. Liggott	Frank Lawton

Sergeant Golightly	Michael Trubshawe
Rev. Julian Small	Jack Watling
Rev. Mr. Courtney	Henry Longhurst
Sir Rupert Bellamy	Michael Shepley

Ethel Sparrow	Maureen Potter

Screenwriter T. E. B. Clarke first earned applause for his police screenplay, "The Blue Lamp." Now, with his adaptation of J. J. Marric's novel, "Gideon's Day," Clarke returns successfully to crime, with the spotlight on Scotland Yard. Film offers nothing new, but the combo of Clarke, director John Ford and actor Jack Hawkins makes a solid team and an orthodox, but expert film, which promises satisfying boxoffice results.

This merely purports to be one busy day in the life of a C.I.D. chief inspector and it turns out to be quite a day. He accuses one of his sergeants of taking bribes. A pay snatch ties up with the killing of the sergeant in a hit-and-run car crash. A murder in Manchester has a maniac killer headed for London, and it all finishes up with a safe robbery which involves another slaying. During this time (and in between routine duties), the cop finds himself held up by a killer and shot at by a robber, pulled up for a traffic offense and "in dutch" with his family for not remembering to bring home some salmon and for being too late to attend his daughter's first concert. All in all, quite a day.

Hawkins has played this type of role so often that he could probably do it blindfolded. And it is a tribute to him that he can hold the interest with such a run-of-the-mill character. Apart from his own skill, he is greatly indebted to writer Clarke, who has made the character of Gideon a likeable one, completely credible and with many wry touches of comedy which Hawkins tackles with zest. He is also surrounded by some firstrate thesps who bring a touch of distinction to routine parts.

Among such characters are Frank Lawton, John Loder and Nigel Fitzgerald, as Scotland Yard cops; and Michael Trubshawe as a comedy sergeant. Young Andrew Ray also scores heavily as an overzealous, young policeman who runs in a murderer in between handing out tickets for speeding offenses to Hawkins and the Chief of Scotland Yard. Cyril Cusack, Derek Bond, as the bribed dick; Jack Watling, as an ex-Commando vicar; Ronald Howard, as the pay-snatch criminal, and Laurence Naismith, as the maniac murderer, also contribute greatly to the authenticity of the goings-on.

On the femme side, Dianne Foster, Grizelda Hervey and Anna Lee also take their respective opportunities with verve. Marjorie Rhodes, as the mother of a murdered girl, gives a particularly touching cameo. Anna Massey, one of Britain's up and coming young actresses, has little chance with the small, expendable role of Hawkins' teenage daughter.

Ford, four-time Academy Award winner, is unlikely to add another to his bag with "Gideon's Day," but he has directed with a nicely blended sense of drama and comedy. F. A. Young's color lensing is top drawer. The Scotland Yard and domestic interiors and the London locations cannot be faulted. Altogether, a more than useful tribute to the work of the police and another proof that crime doesn't pay. Rich.

Girls On the Loose

Routine crime yarn okay for smaller program situations.

Hollywood, March 20.

Universal release of Harry Rybnick-Richard Kay production. Stars Mara Corday, Lita Milan, Barbara Bostock; costars Mark Richman; features Joyce Barker, Abby Dalton. Directed by Paul Henreid. Screenplay, Alan Friedman, Dorothy Raison, Allen Rivkin; story, Friedman, Raison, Julian Harmon; camera, Philip Lathrop; editor, Edward Curtiss. Previewed March 19, '58. Running time, 77 MINS.

Vera Parkinson	Mara Corday
Marie Williams	Lita Milan
Helen	Barbara Bostock
Lt. Bill Hanley	Mark Richman
Joyce Johanneson	Joyce Barker
Agnes Clark	Abby Dalton
Doctor	Jon Lormer
Danny	Ronald Green
Mr. Grant	Fred Kruger
Joe	Paul Lambert
Cigarette Girl	Monica Henreid

"Girls on the Loose" is the story of a $200,000 payroll robbery committed by five young women and the effect, both psychological and actual, of the crime upon them individually. An indie produced by Jewell Enterprises for Universal release, film fits into the smaller program category as a routine entry.

Action is principally devoted to distaffers, with a single major male character in for romantic overtones. Opening is reminiscent of the Brink's case, with the femme holdup artists here all dressed alike in masculine attire and rubber masks. Boodle is buried in the woods, then the various reactions set in.

Gang, led by Mara Corday, a ruthless nitery operator, consists of her sister, Barbara Bostock—innocently involved as driver of the getaway car—Lita Milan beauty shop worker; Joyce Barker, masseuse; and Abby Dalton, employee of the company robbed. When it's apparent latter is cracking, she's murdered by gang leader. An attempt is made by the masseuse to murder the young sister, but at finale she's the only one left alive, the others meeting violent ends by each others' hands.

Cast, mostly unknown with exception of Miss Corday, performs creditably in stock characters. Mark Richman, as a detective investigating apparent suicide of first of the five to go, is in for romance with Miss Bostock. One of the weaknesses of the Harry Rybnick-Richard Kay production is lack of any police work on the holdup to give suspense, a quality Paul Henreid overlooks, too, in his direction. Miss Bostock also is in for one production number, warbling "How Do You Learn to Love?" She also sings "I Was a Little Too Lonely."

Technical credits are okay, headed by Philip Lathrop's camera work. Whit.

The Proud Rebel
(COLOR)

Fine heartwarming film for family audiences especially; Alan Ladd and Olivia de Havilland for marquee dressing.

Hollywood, March 29.

Buena Vista release of Samuel Goldwyn Jr. production. Stars Alan Ladd, Olivia de Havilland; costars Dean Jagger, Davis Ladd; features Cecil Kellaway, James Westerfield, Henry Hull, Dean Stanton, Thomas Pittman, Eli Mintz, John Carradine, King. Directed by Michael Curtiz. Screenplay, Joe Petracca, Lillie Hayward; original, James Edward Grant; camera (Technicolor), Ted McCord; editor, Aaron Stell; music, Jerome Moross. Previewed March 28, '58. Running time, 100 MINS.

John Chandler	Alan Ladd
Linnet Moore	Olivia de Havilland
Harry Burleigh	Den Jagger
David Chandler	David Ladd
Dr. Enos Davis	Cecil Kellaway
Mirm Bates	James Westerfield
Judge	Henry Hull
Jeb Burleagh	Dean Stanton
Tom Burleigh	Thomas Pittman
Gorman	Eli Mintz
Carpetbagger	John Carradine
Lance	King

Warmth of a father's love and faith, and the devotion of a boy for his dog, are the standout ingredients of this Samuel Goldwyn Jr., production, which emerges as a truly heartwarming film. With names of Alan Ladd and Olivia de Havilland for b.o. lure release seems a cinch to score strongly with public and trade, if well sold.

Goldwyn the Second establishes himself firmly as a producer of substance in this third effort of his, in which he skillfully blends the best elements of poignant drama and exciting melodrama into a suspenseful and fast-action post-Civil War yarn. Michael Curtiz, too, has achieved fine feeling in his direction of the Joe Petracca-Lillie Hayward screenplay, based on an original by James Edward Grant, and is backed by some of the finest color photography of the year, Technicolor-lensed by Ted McCord.

While an interesting story is presented, it's the characterizations that hold forth most strongly, topped, perhaps, by the very appealing performance of David Ladd, star's 11-year-old son who plays Ladd's boy in the pic. Young-

DID OSCAR GET MESSAGE OVER?

BIZ SEEN SURE TO STAY SPONSOR

By GENE ARNEEL

Comment of film officials closely associated with last week's Academy Awards television program, indicated odds-on that the industry will continue sponsorship of the Oscar airer in the future.

Many key men apparently were satisfied with the results, believing the show on Wednesday (26) night was a colorful entertainment for the public and gave the industry new stature at a time when it's particularly needed.

Opinion was general that the Jerry Wald production got across the message that the trade itself bankrolled the presentation as a "public service." (At the outset of the program George Seaton, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, announced there would be no commercials.)

Several N. Y. film execs said their non-industry friends commented re their awareness of the absence of old Oldsmobile commercials and were impressed with this fact. Film men themselves praised enlistment of so many stars.

Plaudits were not coming from all precincts, however. The consumer press in many areas rapped the show on the charge that it was frequently listless and lacking the ingenuity of which Hollywood should have been capable. This downbeat attitude was taken, for example, by the N. Y. Times and Daily News. (VARIETY's review in the tv section herewith.)

One critical distribution rep put it this way: "A lot of the industry is congratulating itself on doing a big job. Actually, these are the same people who voted to pay for the program and they're now deluding themselves into thinking they did the right thing."

Some execs privately queried by a reporter thought the institutional idea a good one but made the point that the program, with its audience of over 60,000,000, would have been ideal showcasing for new product. Excerpts of upcoming theatrical productions are given as an entertainment segment of commercial shows, such as Ed Sullican's, it was noted. Same could be done on the Oscar airer without detracting from the "public service" values. "This is the kind of thing that sells tickets," said one source.

Oscarcast Not Too Hurtful In Minneapolis

Minneapolis, April 1.

Although the theatres here plugged it on their screens well in advance for the first time and some of them even called attention to it in their newspaper ads, the first Academy awards show televised by the film industry itself apparently didn't do much, if any more, boxoffice harm than its less publicized predecessors.

This, too, despite the fact that industry leaders here believe more people, paradoxically, were watching the telecast hereabouts.

Charles Winchell, United Paramount circuit president-general manager here, says "business was pretty good" at his three downtown firstrun houses. There was no apparent drop, either, at the Mann and Cinerama houses playing "Witness for the Prosecution," "Around the World in 80 Days" and "Search for Paradise."

If there was any b.o. suffering, it occurred in some of the uptown houses, it's believed.

The telecast was generally very well received and the recipient of much praise, but Minneapolis

Advertest: Oscar Whips Up Film Yen

By BOB CHANDLER

First research study made of the effects of last Wednesday's (26) Academy Awards telecast indicates that the Oscarcast did in fact stimulate interest in moviegoing among viewers. Study was made in interviews with 600 adults in the New York metropolitan area by Advertest Research Inc. of New Brunswick, N.J.

Of the 600 respondents, 57% saw all or part of the 105-minute telecast. To these viewers, question was put, "Did the program make you feel that you want to go out and see a new movie soon?," to which 63% replied "yes."

Those who answered "yes" gave reasons such as "seeing the old actors and actresses made me homesick to see a movie," "it made me realize that I haven't been to a movie in a long time, and that there are movies worth seeing," "it mainly made me feel that I had missed some pictures that were worthwhile seeing," "I mainly want to see the pictures that won awards," and "seeing the wide screen certainly impressed me—made me want to see a movie soon."

Seeking to pinpoint the reaction, Advertest then asked, "How likely do you think you will be to go to the movies during the next few weeks?" Of the viewers, 48% replied "very likely or somewhat likely"; only 38% of the non-viewers said "very likely or somewhat likely." Contrariwise, 58% of the non-viewers replied "somewhat unlikely or very unlikely," as compared with 50% of the viewers of the Oscarcast.

Advertest points out that "viewers, to a much greater degree, appear more likely to attend a movie within the next few weeks." Although it was not possible within the scope of this study to determine differences which may have existed among these groups before exposure to the program, there is a strong indication that the movie industry has at least made a start at recreating interest in its product."

Survey, before going into the effects of the Oscarcast, looked into moviegoing habits of its sample, and found that 59% of the respondents had not attended a movie at all during the past four weeks, 16% went once, 12% twice, 7% three times and 6% four or more times. Asked about the frequency of their film attendance compared with "three or four years ago," 58% of those questioned said they attend less often, 27% "about as often," only 6% more often. Advertest also asked who had seen the pictures nominated as best of the year. Only 36% had seen "Sayonara," 24% "Peyton Place," 8% "Bridge on the River Kwai" and 5% "Witness for the Prosecution." 48% had seen none of them. But 60% of those respondents who viewed the program said it made them more interested in wanting to see one or more of these pictures.

As to the Oscarcast itself, 68% of those who saw it found it "very enjoyable," 21% somewhat enjoyable and 11% "not at all enjoyable." Of those who saw the program, 73% watched all of it, 14% watched most of it and 13% watched only some of it.

Advertest, which does research primarily for television and radio, did the survey on its own but is distributing its results to some of the motion picture majors as well as NBC. The company (10 years this week) is now in the process of setting up a motion picture research division.

MANY ASK AIM OF OSCAR RITUAL

By FRED HIFT

Just what is the latterday aim of the Academy Awards show on television?

Question became pertinent in the wake of last week's televising of the Oscar ceremonies which, in the N. Y. trade at least, sparked extremes from "great" to "awful."

This isn't to mention the tv reviewers, several of whom really went to town on the show. Jack Gould in the N. Y. Times called it "a bewildering and saddening occasion." Both the News and the World Telegram said it was "dull."

Film people generally thought the awards show was better than last year, but many felt it could stand radical improvement and there was sharp and almost unanimous criticism of two aspects of the industry-sponsored program: (1) The scene between Mae West and Rock Hudson, which struck some as tasteless, and (2) The deliberate caricaturing of television's old movies via the Donald Duck bit.

There was comment also re the lack of competence on the part of several of the singers on the show and some felt the ceremonies stretched overlong. Show ran 105 minutes.

"It was like an out-of-town tryout for next year," commented one film industry observer. On the whole, the industry applauded the elimination of the commercial sponsor, though here and there was a comment echoing Bob Hope's "the industry's off its rocker" crack in connection with the televising of the awards which kept millions throughout the country glued to their sets.

Visiting in Manhattan last week, the J. Arthur Rank Organization's John Davis made it plain that he couldn't quite see the point. "You mean you're telling people to stay home and watch television?" he asked incredulously. In Britain, he said pointedly, the industry doesn't televise its awards, partly because they aren't that important, but partly "because we don't think it's a good idea."

Two main questions are being raised in the industry by the awards telecast. One is whether a show such as this shouldn't be used in some way to promote the

Japanese Actress' 30th Anni Oscar's Single Surprise

Hollywood, April 1.

For its 30th year of awards the Academy of Motion picture Arts & Sciences ran pretty much to expectations. One surprise was for "Best Supporting Actress" which went to the Japanese cutie, Miyosha Umeki.

The monumental mishmash over author! author! who was really the author? which marred last year's Oscar seemed momentarily in hazard of repetition but Carl Foreman cabled from London categorical denial that he screenplayed "Bridge on the River Kwai" and the award to Pierre Boulle was thus cleansed of suspicion.

Tendency of awards to "bunch" around a couple of top releases was again evident with Sam Spiegel's Columbia "Kwai" snagging seven Oscars and four going to Bill Goetz' Warner production, "Sayonara."

Twentieth-Fox garnered three wins, including a special honorary award to Charles Brackett. Metro ended with two and Paramount and Disney's Buena Vista one each. Columbia also copped an honorary

L. A. Area Hits New Peak; 'Sayonara' Giant 200G, 17 Spots, 'Snow White' Ditto 20, 'Marjorie' 18G, 'Paris' 14G

Los Angeles, April 1.

With two new bills accounting for $200,000 each, first-runs expect to hit an alltime high mark this week at boff $707,000. Of course, 26 nabes and 24 drive-ins are included in this total though the record figure shows 27 regular hardtops running up a smash $256,100, making 77 situations in all playing 16 programs with only four newcomers. Aiding this mighty gross are showings of the Basilio-Robinson fight pix and extra matinees for some houses.

Fact that school vacations have started and that Oscars accrue to several current films will help. "Sayonara," one of Academy winners, and "Snow White," showing in some spots with "Tammy and Bachelor," are landing $200,000 apiece, the former in 17 locations and latter in 20. For "Sayonara," it is the picture's first multiple house run.

"10 Commandments," too, in second week of first general run, looks to get great $108,400 in 14 situations. Among new bills, "Marjorie Morningstar" shapes stout $18,000 at Warner Beverly. "Paris Holiday," also a newie, is rated brisk $14,000 at Fox Wilshire.

Oscar-winning "Bridge on River Kwai" at Egyptian is feeling the effect of these honors by climbing nearly $6,000 to a terrific $25,500 in current (15th) frame. "Long, Hot Summer" is rated solid in third lap in four houses. "Teacher's Pet" also is hefty in second session at Hollywood Paramount. Two hard-ticket pix, "Around World in 80 Days" and "Seven Wonders of World," are looking for upped biz.

Estimates for This Week

Warner Beverly (SW) (1,612; $1.25-$2.40) — "Marjorie Morningstar" (WB). Stout $18,000. Last week, "Golden Age of Comedy" (DCA) (3d wk), $1,500.

Fox Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; 90-$1.50)—"Paris Holiday" (UA). Brisk $14,000.

Orpheum (Metropolitan) (2,213; 90-$1.50)—"Bitter Victory" (Col) and "Cell 2455, Death Row" (Col) (reissue). Handy $6,000. Last week, with Iris, Uptown, "Jet Attack" (AI), "Suicide Battalion" (AI) $13,800.

Downtown Paramount, Wiltern, New Fox (ABPT-SW-FWC) (3,300; 2,344; 765; 90-$1.50) — "Sayonara" (WB) (1st multiple-theatre run) and "Forbidden Desert" (WB). Great $53,000 or close. Last week, Downtown Paramount, New Fox with Ritz, "Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison" (20th), "12 Angry Men" (UA) (reissues) $10,200. Wiltern with Downtown, Hollywood, "Cow-

'Kwai' Great 26G In K.C., 'Beat' 9G

Kansas City, April 1.

"Bridge On River Kwai" at the Midland is giving the house one of its biggest opening weeks in years, the great take insuring a holdover. Other newcomers are moderate to slow. "Lafayette Escadrille" at Paramount looms light. "Big Beat" in four Fox Midwest houses shapes modest. "Last Paradise" in four Dickinson theatres is rated slow "Brothers Karamazov" is still okay at Roxy in fourth round. Weather is not much removed from wintry tenure as yet.

'Kwai' Whopping $25,000, L'ville; 'Sayonara' Trim 7G, 'Arms' $6,500, 4th

Louisville, April 1.

Giant standout locally this week is "Bridge on River Kwai" at United Artists. Hitting town with perfect timing, Academy Awards and advent of spring-like weather, all combining for something to shout about. "Sayonara" at the Mary Ann, another timely booking is doing okay at $1.25 top. This one played this same house for six weeks when first released. "Farewell to Arms" in fourth stanza at the Brown still is big.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.-Loew's) (1,000; 99-$1.45) — "Farewell to Arms" (20th) (4th wk). Big $6,500. Last week, $8,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 50-85) —"Jumping Jacks" (Par) and "Sacred Stiff" (Par) (reissues). Good $5,000. Last week, "Female Animal" (U) and "Escape in Japan" (U), $6,000.

United Artists (UA) (3,000; 99-$1.25)—"Bridge on River Kwai" (Col). Smash $25,000 looks sure. Long lines really have this big-seater jumping. Last week, "Saddle Wind" (M-G) and "Underwater Warrior" (M-G), $7,000.

'Brothers' Fat $15,000, Buff; 'Kwai' Great 20G

Buffalo, April 1.

Despite Holy Week, biz is holding very well here currently. City is loaded with weak newcomers and oldies. Standout is third session of "Bridge on River Kwai," which is whopping at Century and near second week's take. "Brothers Karamazov" still is fancy in second round at the Buffalo. Reissue combo of "House of Wax" with "Phantom of Rue Morgue" is fairly good at Paramount.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1.25) —"Brothers Karamazov (M-G) (2d wk). Fancy $15,000 in 9 days. Last week, $18,300.

Center (AB-PT) (2,000; 70-90)—"18 and Anxious" (Rep) and "Girl in Woods" (Rep). Perky $9,000. Last week, "Beautiful but Dangerous" (20th) and "Blood Arrow" (Indie), $8,200.

'Kwai' Record 35G In Mildish Pitt

Pittsburgh, April 1.

Holy Week is only separating the men from the boys. It's having no effect on "Bridge on River Kwai" at Harris, biggest blockbuster this house can remember, or the reissue of "Snow White" at Warner. Squirrel Hill pulled "And God Creaed Woman" at end of 14th sensational week rather than to incur the displeasure of religious groups by running it through the holy days. Elsewhere, however, the town's downright dull, with reissue of "Song of Bernadette" doing nothing at Fulton and "Darby's Rangers" drab at Stanley.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 99-$1.25)—"Song of Bernadette" (20th) (reissue). Can thank some of overflow from next-door Harris, or else it would be much worse than $4,000, which is lean enough. Last week, "Lady Takes a Flyer" (U), $5,500 in 9 days.

Guild (Green) (500; 99-$1.25)—"Please, Mr. Balzac" (DCA) (3d wk). Slim $1,600 or close. Last week, $2,100.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 99-$1.50) —"Bridge On River Kwai" (Col). Nothing ever like this one. Raves, word-of-mouth and, of course, all those Oscars all in its favor. Could easily hit all-time record of $35,000, which is fantastic this week. Have to stop selling tickets every night. Last week, "Beautiful But Dangerous" (20th), $3,000.

Penn (UA) (3,400; 99-$1.25)—

Detroit, April 1.

Downtown deluxers continue doing good biz this stanza with Academy Award hoopla adding cash to the good totals of three holdovers which figured in the Oscar derby. "Bridge on River Kwai" stays wham in third week at the Madison. "Witness for Prosecution" is enjoying a great second trial at the Michigan. "Raintree County" stays sturdy in sixth week at the Adams.

Newcomer, "Run Silent, Run Deep," is displaying sock results at the Palms. "Last Paradise" looks slow at the Fox. "Search for Paradise" is hotsy in eighth frame at Music Hall. "And God Created Woman" is drawing plenty of cash in 11th round at the Trans-Lux Krim.

Estimates for This Week

Sock weekend here proved a big booster for new fare, with a generally strong session in prospect. Awards, of course, kited the gross of "Bridge on River Kwai" to a big figure at Randolph where it is in its third stanza. "Teacher's Pet" looks giant on opening round at Viking while "And God Created Woman" shapes great in second frame in two arty houses. "South Pacific" is rated terrific in opening week at the Midtown.

Goldwurm's Monetary Union Idea

Application of his plan for a monetary and customs union to the American film industry was stressed in N.Y. by Jean Goldwurm, prez of Times Film. Goldwurm outlined his ideas in a recent full-column ad in the N.Y. Times.

Under his plan, the U.S. would join a monetary and customs union with other, friendly nations throughout the world. Since a monetary union would, according to his concept, eliminate all barriers restricting the free flow of currency among the union's participants, this would hold great benefits for the American film biz, doing away with blocked accounts, etc.

The customs union would go hand in hand with the monetary union and would have the effect of removing all tariff and customs barriers, allowing a free flow of goods among all member companies. Goldwurm acknowledged that all this would take years to accomplish. But, he held, "the time is ripe for a new approach."

There has been considerable reaction to the Goldwurm ad. He said last week that he hoped that Motion Picture Export Assn., headed by Eric Johnston, would take notice of the proposal and would get behind it. So far, there has been no MPEA reaction.

The monetary and customs union, held Goldwurm, would raise worldwide wage standards and would do away with American "foreign aid" loans.

See No British Cinema Tax Abolition But Trade Hopes for Concessions

London, April 1.

As the picture industry's campaign for abolition of the cinema tax reaches its climax hope is riding high that there will be a substantial concession in the April 15 Budget. In the final fortnight, the maximum pressure is being exerted on Parliament, press and public to insure a satisfactory outcome.

Informed political sources have it that there is little likelihood that the Chancellor of the Exchequer will concede the entire claim for tax abolition. This would cost the treasury some $80,000,000 per year. There is, however, every reason to believe that there'll be a substantial concession to the tune of $30,000,000 to $40,000,000.

Although such a decision would disappoint the industry, the additional revenue would be most welcome and would be a considerable help to many exhibitors and producers. It would not, however, be adequate enough to save a large number of borderline theatres from going entirely dark.

There is a school of thought among some M.P.'s that the Chancellor would be doing a smart thing by conceding the industry's claim for total abolition. Having done that, they say, the government could virtually wash its hands of the industry and compel it to stand on its own feet without seeking further governmental backing and protection.

The affairs of the film industry over the last years have taken up a considerable amount of Parliamentary time, and further legislation for the renewal of the Quota Act is due next year. Political advocates of total abolition suggest the Government would be on strong ground if it had met the claim to wipe the tax slate clean and from that point onwards left the trade to resolve its own domestic problems. Beyond continuing the basic quota protection and the National Film Finance Corp., there would, it's suggested, be little need for any further governmental action.

Cheaper Loans Helping British

London, March 25.

The reduction in the Bank Rate from 7% to 6% represents a modest aid to British producers. Normally production loans rank from 7% to 7½% higher than the official Bank Rate, depending on individual circumstances.

In any event, it is now almost certain there'll be an overall reduction in interest charges for production loans. But the official Government "squeeze" continues and production finance suffers accordingly.

In interest charges alone, the reduced Bank Rate will ease the load for independent British producers to the tune of several thousand dollars a year on an average-scale British film.

BRIT. LORD SEES CINEMA SURPLUS

London, April 1.

An official statement by a government spokesman in a House of Lords debate that "frankly, too many places have too many cinemas" has angered exhibitors throughout the country. The indies are particularly indignant. The issue is expected to be a top item on the agenda when the general council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. meets April 16, a day after the Budget.

Speaking for the government in the Lords debate last Wednesday (26), Lord Mancroft suggested that the exhibition industry must face the fact that it may have to reorientate itself in a world of changing fashions. Some very painful re-adjustment also was probably necessary in the seating capacity of a great many towns.

Lord Mancroft made this observation after commenting on changes in public taste and other calls on the "leisure pound." The plain fact was that the public was spending less on seeing films and more on other forms of entertainment. Tele might be the main cause of the drop in attendances, but there were several other competing candidates for the leisure pound. Among these he listed the do-it-yourself craze which not only claimed a share of the leisure pound, but also a great deal of the leisure time. He also referred to the "enormous popu-

'View From Bridge' Looms Paris Hit

Paris, April 1.

French legit season—a pathetically weak one where new native plays have been concerned—got another boost from abroad when Arthur Miller's "View from the Bridge" (Vu du Pont), adapted by Marcel Ayme, directed by Peter Brook (who also did sets) and starring Italian film star, Raf Vallone, moved into Theatre Antoine for what looks like a run.

"View" is full-length version of the second play on double-bill of same title which played Broadway three seasons ago.

Story tells of middle-age, Sicilian dock-worker living in Brooklyn and of his incestuous love for his teenage niece.

Industry Group's Confab With 200 MP's in Tax Fight Sets Precedent

London, April 1.

In a move unprecedented in industry or Parliamentary history, a number of top-ranking British film stars, together with a leading independent producer and a small indie exhibitor, addressed a meeting of more than 200 Members of Parliament in a House of Commons committee room to plead the cause for abolition of admission tax. According to veteran MP's who have been among the industry's stalwart supporters, they made a profound impression on rank and file members which, it is hoped, will be reflected in the Chancellor's Budget a fortnight hence.

The turnout represented almost one-third of the entire strength of the House of Commons and included representatives of the three main political parties. It developed into a frank exchange of views in which the industry spokesmen were able to counter allegations of extravagance and to refute statements made earlier in the week in the House of Lords that producers were not concerned at the strength of the domestic market. Indeed, Sir Michael Balcon, who spoke on behalf of film makers, digressed from his prepared brief to answer observations made in the Upper House on behalf of the government by Lord Mancroft.

The stars' meeting with MP's was virtually the final thrust in the industry's biggest-ever campaign for tax abolition. As Parliament goes into recess for the Easter vacation this week, there will be little more activity on the political front. And from now on, it's virtually a case of wait and see what the Chancellor will produce out of the Budget box on April 15.

10 Top Stars Head Group

The industry delegation comprised 10 front-ranking stars, plus Sir Michael Balcon, speaking for the production side. Acting talent was represented by Anna Neagle, Sir Ralph Richardson, Yvonne Mitchell, Dirk Bogarde, Kenneth More, Michael Redgrave, Googie Withers, John McCallum, Richard Todd and Nigel Patrick.

In addition, there was one indie exhibitor, T. B. Suttie of Carnoustie in Scotland, to advance the claim for the small theatre operator, who described himself as "very small fry, but a very, very important cog in the whole cinematograph wheel." He cited as a typical example his own company which ran three theatres in the East Coast of Scotland, which, for the year ended March, 1957, had a total loss, without allowing for depreciation, of around $2,400. Without allowing for returns from the sale of ice cream, etc., his loss would have exceeded $5,000. But in the same year, his company paid upwards of $14,500 in admission taxes.

On behalf of his fellow producers, Balcon frankly admitted the situation was very serious and made it clear that they had not turned up to squeal or indulge in self-pity. All they asked was the right to fight their competitors on even terms. Other facets of the trade's claim were outlined by the talent contingent and, in turn, they answered questions put to them by their political audience.

Another final phase in the industry's campaign has been the use of newsreels. Last week's topicals devoted considerable time and footage to advancing the claim for abolition, including interviews with Sir Alex B. King, the Scottish exhib who, for a quarter of a century or more, has been in the forefront of the industry's anti-tax agitation.

L. C. McKibbon city manager here for the Jefferson Amusement Co., has resigned his post due to illness and will go to his home in Alabama to recuperate.

He has been ill for some time and recently underwent an operation which will keep him from working for some time.

THE BRIDGE ON THE RIVER CINEMA

Last week's fevered festivities as the craftsmen of Hollywood voted a British star the best star and a Japanese supporting actress the best supporting actress had another melodramatic touch—a cable from an American writer in London cleared the way for a French writer in California to collect an Oscar for the screenplay of "Bridge On the River Kwai".

Again the moral has been made dazzlingly clear. The motion picture industry is a one world more and more — artistically and commercially. But these comments are about the commercial end and about the international buying and selling which grows increasingly vital to all—Americans, Europeans, Mexicans, Japanese.

The story of glamour on spooled celluloid — with insights into world studios, faraway theatres, native-style ballyhoo, international yarns, international casts, international sexpots and constant excitement—will be told in the next week's issue.

CONCERNING

"A FAREWELL TO ARMS"

One of the truly great pictures of all time is David O. Selznick's re-make of "A Farewell To Arms." This epic movie, starring Jennifer Jones, Rock Hudson and Vittorio De Sica, is superlative in every facet of production, from the exquisite photography of Alpine peaks, a stormy sea, terrorized troops in retreat, to the finished acting of the stars...

Ben Hecht is responsible for the screen adaptation of the novel, and in his customary uncompromising manner of writing, achieved a vibrant, dramatic, exciting, poignant screen play that is beautiful and touching...

Jennifer Jones as the British girl who bears a child for her American soldier registers one of the screen's outstanding performances in her labor scene at the hospital and her death shortly thereafter. Rock Hudson ensures his career, through this picture, as the screen's top-ranking leading man. There is great conviction to his acting. As usual, Vittorio De Sica responds to the dramatic demands and portrays with great finesse a caustic medico who takes lightly his amours.

The movie is superb fare in every facet of production and well worth the price of admission if only to view the gorgeous mountain scenes and terrain so thrillingly exhibited by the color and CinemaScope, pointed up by the fine music.

The picture is also a great credit to Director Charles Vidor, long recognized in Hollywood for his remarkable ability to handle huge groups of people —in this instance, armies on the march, on retreat, in battle—as well as the delicate scenes of a small boy on a street.

"A Farewell To Arms" will undoubtedly be a tremendous success, possibly greater, even, than Selznick's "Gone With The Wind." This is a wonderful contribution to the screen that you should see.

Maas Sees Pact 'More of Same' With Japanese

Tokyo, April 1.

Foreign Exchange Bureau of the Finance Ministry has started deliberation of the draft foreign currency budget for fiscal 1958 with bureau director Sakai and all section chiefs including Kyoichi Miyagi, chief of the Control Section and recently returned from London, in attendance.

For film imports, a budget of $4,431,500 was submitted by the Control Section for deliberation. Budget includes $2,788,000 for rental-base films, $108,800 for "flat" base films, $236,000 for tv films, $191,500 against the accumulated yen of British films and $138,000 for reserved expenditures.

Irving Maas, v.p. of the MPEA in Asia, told VARIETY that he hasn't seen Miyagi since his return but that he has gone over the situation thoroughly with Sakai.

As to the outcome, Maas said, "If I had to make a guess, I'd say it probably will be similar to last year, but we have no assurance of it. From the looks of things there probably will be no announcement before mid-April." Fiscal year begins April 1.

Regarding opposition U. S. film imports have received in current Diet session from Socialists, Maas commented, "We are a special target it seems of certain interests, this year more so than ever before. We have become a special object of attack. I think it's part of the general political harrassment of the Government. We are caught in the crossfire and are being kicked around for political purposes. They are leveling unfounded charges at us."

On the possibility of the MPEA making another loan to Japanese industry to unfreeze yen, Maas offered, "We are going to try to avoid making another loan."

Asked about an announcement that the Finance Ministry is studying adjustment of non-resident yen accounts as a necessary first step toward eventual use of the yen as a trade accounts settlement currency, Maas replied, "I don't know just what they're aiming for. It appears to be some scheme for using all of the non-resident accounts, but I don't think they can effect our position. The funds belonging to us are under remittance at some future point. I have no further information on which to base a conclusion to this story."

When the fiscal film announcements are made, Maas will leave for Manila and Taipei.

It's Fall in B.A.; Concerts Start

Buenos Aires, March 25.

Right now is the beginning of fall in this position of the globe and the Colon Opera House starts off with Juan Jose Castro symphony concert. Alterations of orchestral, ballet and opera works are lined up.

Viennese baritone Paul Schoeffler replaces Norman Scott as one of the soloists, for four opera performances, with Herva Nelli, Nan Merriman and Anton Dermota also present. Nan Merriman will give a couple of recitals and Pierre Monteux will later conduct up to four concerts.

Ballet performances, with Alicia Alonso and Igor Youskevitch, are booked.

Maestro Jacques Singer has been signed to conduct the Municipal Symphony Orchestra for 18 to 20 weeks.

The outstanding event this season will be performances by the New York Philharmonic, some time between May 28 and June 2, conducted by Dimitri Mitropoulos and Leonard Bernstein. Iriberri Concerts will represent Philharmonic per agreement with Robert Schnitzer, as liaison for U. S. State Dept. This is an arduous job, calling for skillful manipulation of dates to fit in concerts in Brazil, Uruguay, B. Aires, Mendoza, Cordoba, Tucuman and Rosario. A missed plane connection can involve the collapse of the schedule.

Symphonic Edinburgh

Edinburgh, April 1.

Five orchestras, three of them newcomers to the junket, are set to take part in this year's International Edinburgh Festival. Newcomers are the Royal Danish, Royal Opera House pitmen from Covent Garden, London, and the Vienna Symphony Orch.

The two other orchs are the Philharmonia and the Scottish National Orch.

Instrumental soloists will include Clara Haskil, Claudio Arrau, and Yehudi Menuhin. Victoria de los Angeles will appear with the Covent Gardeners.

800th Birthday Of Munich Spurs Show Biz Putsch

Munich, March 25.

Munich, Bavaria's capital and a city noted for fun, frivolity and entertainment, is making an extra-strong bid for the international tourists' trade and money this year with the giant celebration plans for its 800th birthday.

City has blueprinted a four-month entertainment schedule from mid-June to mid-October, opening June 13 with a candlelit night parade through the city streets, themed "800 Years of Munich," with floats and costumes depicting the various eras of city history.

The traditional Butchers' Jump and Coopers' Dance and another parade are slated for Aug. 24, and the enormous beer festival called the October Fest runs from Sept. 20 through Oct. 5.

The rebuilt Cuvillies Theatre has its grand reopening June 14 with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," and Shakespeare's "Macbeth" will be done at the Chamber Theatre June 20. Another June premiere will be Jacob Bidermann's "Cenodoxus," staged by the Bavarian State Dramatic Theatre at the Residenz Theatre. The Nymphenburg Palace summer cycle opens July 5 and on Aug. 10 the Munich Opera Festival starts its run until Sept. 9. Mozart's "Ascanio in Alba" will be premiered in the Cuvillies at the end of October.

The Munich Singers' Day is June 15, and the Munich Philharmonic will give six concerts during the lengthy birthday party. The Philadelphia Symphony makes a guest appearance June 30, the London Philharmonic conducted by Wolfgang Sawallisch performs Aug. 14, and Herbert von Karajan leads the Berlin Philharmonic there Aug. 28.

Works of young composers will be presented in an Aug. 18 concert. European youth orchestras guest during October, and the musical events wind with the Bach Days at the end of November.

DeLaurentiis Signs For 4 Film Co-Productions

Rome, March 25.

Dino DeLaurentiis has signed a four-film co-production pact with Germany's UFA. Italo producer, who just returned from a trip to Hamburg and other German centers, announced that two-German-Italian and two Italo-German pix will be made by his company in collaboration with UFA in the next few months. In addition, DeLaurentiis has bought release rights to a number of UFA productions for the Italo market.

Trend towards increased co-production with Germany is recent. Only three true co-productions have been made with that country in recent years, as against several hundred made, for example, with France.

Among other planned Italo-German projects is "Polikushka," from the Tolstoi story, to be made by Lux and Gallone Productions of Italy, together with CCC-Arthur Brauner of Berlin with an international cast. Rizzoli Films is also about to start a remake of "Resurrection," with Myriam Bru, as an Italo-German twin project.

SEMI-MOROSE REACTION BY IMPORTERS: SEE U.S. MAJORS FAVORED BY FRANCE

Backwash of Japanese Pix Week in N.Y. Likely To See Big Prod. Drive

Tokyo, March 25.

Japan film producers are holding their breath over possible action to counteract the unfavorable criticism handed the Japanese Film Week in New York pending the expected early return of Shiro Kido, film topper at Shichiku and president of the Motion Pictures Producers Assn. (Eiren), of Japan who was chief delegate at the fest. Gishin Ikeda, secretary-general of Eiren, said this country's producers have combed brief reports submitted by Kido, letters from actress-delegates and reviews in VARIETY, but are awaiting Kido's full report.

Ikeda termed the festival a "success." When asked to explain himself, he said, "I think it was better than not having a festival at all."

"But," he added, "we will now have to seriously realign our product to invade the American market." He said he had heard all about the overlength, slowness of action and bad titles of the films. He explained that the tardy tempo of the Japanese film is due to the slow ceremonious culture and way of life in Japan.

He said that he didn't think the majors here would produce pictures especially for the U.S. market, but would use more care in their selection. He said they are now basically chosen by the American distributors who either select the product from screenings while in Japan or receive a shipment and choose from it. Ikeda said that the fest, which is sponsored by his office, will have a third go-round next year although it might be presented differently.

French Film Industry's Brussels Pavillion

French film industry will have its own exhibit at the Brussels fair this summer, Jacques Flaud, head of France's Centre National de la Cinematografie, reported in N. Y. last week.

Pavillion will feature an unusual setup, with visitors walking around a gallery on the top of a circular structure and looking down to the floor in the center where a film showing a French production in the making will be projected from the ceiling.

After this lesson on how a film is made, one can proceed to the screening room to see the latest French pictures.

Barati Renewed in Hawai

Honolulu, April 1.

George Barati has signed a contract to continue as conductor of the Honolulu Symphony orchestra through August 1, 1960. Pact will take him through his 10th year with the Hawaii group, noted for the cosmopolitan racial ties of its membership.

Honolulu Symphony Society source said the contract renewal was voted unanimously by the board. Earlier reports that Barati and the board were having contract difficulties were branded "unfortunate rumors."

Barati leaves this week for a two-month tour of lecturing and conducting in Europe.

San Juan, April 1.

With 80% of tickets sold, Casals Festival hopes to exceed its 1957 gross of $100,000 in 12 concerts scheduled April 22-May 8 at the U. of Porto Rico Auditorium. Long-hair series draws worldwide audience and 1,000 of these island visitors bring nice business to the local inns over and above the concert take. They run the gamut from 2 to 12 sessions depending on their preferences or the time they can spend here.

Sessions this year stress Beethoven, Mozart and Brahms. Artists appearing with the 81-year-old cellist Pablo Casals include: Victoria de los Angeles, Mieczyslaw Horszowski, Eugene Istomin, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Alexander Schneider, Rudolf Serkin, Isaac Stern and the Budapest String Quartet. There is also a 60 piece orchestra.

Almost all featured soloists played at the 1957 Casals Festival in P. R. and at the annual longhair festivities at Prades, France, 1950-57.

Coincidentally with the Festival, the San Juan Ballet will show Paul Hindemuth's Designs and Devices and Manuel de Falla's El Amor Brujo which have been choreographed for ballet by Porto Rican dancers Arnold Paradorelli and Pedro Larca. The Belle of Loiza, a third selection, was composed by Jack Delano and choreographed by Ana Garcia, both of San Juan.

L. P. records of the 1957 Casals Festival were released by Columbia Records and Cook earlier this year.

Independent distributors of foreign, and particularly French, films now have something else to worry about. They've noted with concern the incentive held out by the French to the major companies who help French films both in the States and abroad.

Jacques Flaud, head of France's Centre National de la Cinematografie, last week met the majors' foreign execs and explained to them the basis on which he intends to allocate 40 French dubbing licenses for the year 1958-59. The 40 are part of the 110 permits that go to the Motion Picture Export Assn.

This year, for the first time, the French will do their own allocating of 40 licenses. Basis of who gets what will be of who does the most for the French.

Indies, already in a tough competitive struggle to scoop the cream off the French films, now fear that they may have to compete with the superior major buying power in acquiring the Paris product. They're already paying prices which, in their limited terms, are too high by comparison with the risk they must take.

Just what the French mean by "helping the French film" remains to be determined. It's assumed that this involves coproduction, the distribution of French films in the States and abroad, etc. French films had a record year in the U.S. last year, their earnings going up 90%. Flaud said last week that the performance of the French in the American market had improved. "It's not bad, but it's not good either," he commented.

French topper met the indies at dinner in Manhattan last week and outlined to them French plans for a limited producers representative setup within the framework of the French Film Office. As expected, the distributors made it plain that they didn't like the idea of any interference with the actual selling of the films. One reportedly said that, if and when the French told him how to merchandise his pictures, he'd simply stop buying French films. However, the French for the moment appear to have little inclination to go beyond representation on the post-sale accounting level. They may eventually hire an American distribution man to carry their plan further.

Flaud and Joseph Maternati, head of the French bureau in N.Y., last week also visited with Monsgr. Thomas F. Little, executive secretary of the National Legion of Decency. Many French films are in trouble with the Legion.

Flaud and Maternati went to Montreal over the weekend. Flaud returned from there to Paris to start negotiation for a new French-German film agreement.

First 'Opera Plane Tour' of Europe

Front-of-House-and-Backstage Visits—Some Bad Singing, But Buffs Take Buffeting

By TRUDY GOTH

I was shepherdess of what is believed to be the first "opera plane tour" to Europe. Mine was the task of guiding five ladies, one couple and a single gentleman—what a hero—from New York. The party of opera lovers came from California, Iowa and Connecticut. Before proceeding to Idlewild we lunched at La Scala restaurant on — naturally — spaghetti Caruso and scallopini Don Giovanni. We then flew to Zurich first hop and landed in Rome where the opera-going began.

"Boheme" at the Teatro dell Opera had Stefano and Rosanna Carteri and was conducted by Emidio Tieri. It was gala, the audience dressed the occasion and my charges were, and anybody would have been, impressed. After the performance we all went backstage. This was part of the promise, a practice repeated in all the cities. The package tour contract was based on front-and-back operatics. My little party was extensively photographed and interviewed—as a "first." The idea of an "opera plane" intrigued the Europeans. Admittedly we'd come a long way to hear singing.

The tourists were allowed to attend rehearsals in Milan, both in the main La Scala and in the Piccolo and ballet rooms. "Butterfly" was the performance we saw but not less momentous for the American buffs was the dress rehearsal of the brand-new T. S. Eliot opera, "Murder in the Cathedral." In this work Nicola Rossi Lemeni's rendition of the English cardinal stands forth as does the extraordinary scenery and stage direction of Margherita Wallman, perhaps the greatest authority on "contemporary" opera.

'10 C's,' 'Kwai' New Sock Aussie Hits

Sydney, March 25.

Sydney film biz is booming with "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) and "10 Commandments" (Par) the blockbusters. Former is playing three-a-day at the 1,250-seat Lyceum while the latter on two-a-day at the 1,400-seat Prince Edward, both in at upped admissions. Leroy Brauer, Columbia's Aussie chief, supervised a smash publicity campaign for "Kwai," with Joe Joel handling the top assignment for "Commandments."

The crix gave raves to "Kwai" but hopped on "10 C's" rather harshly. Panning has been no b.o. drawback.

Brauer has just returned here after signaturing top deals for "Kwai" in New Zealand. Pic shortly will go coast-to-coast at upped admissions.

Both "Kwai" and 10 C's" prove conclusively that there's nothing wrong with pix in this area, providing it's the fare the patrons want is playing.

Further proof of this in seen in 23 sellout weeks for "Around the World in 80 Days" (UA), with more to follow, and 22 weeks with "An Affair to Remember" (20th). Two other solid winners are "Admirable Crichton" (Col) and "Don't Go Near Water" (M-G).

IATSE FIGHTS 'LONELY' BOOTHS

Embassy, Frisco Woes Aired at Trial; Await Silent Partner Wobber's Views

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco, April 1.

Trial of the $8,000,000 antitrust suit against all major producers and distributors finally got off the ground last week, with the last session before Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy starting to produce meat of the plaintiffs' case.

Plaintiffs are Dan McLean and Leland C. Dibble, co-owners of the 1,400-seat, 51-year-old Embassy in downtown Frisco. Defendants are 20th-Fox, National Theatres, Fox West Coast, Columbia, Universal, Paramount, United Paramount Theatres, RKO, Warner Bros., UA and Loew's.

Suit, filed Dec. 29, 1950, claims the defendants refused Dibble and McLean all first-run product from Christmas Day, 1938, to date the suit was filed and all second-run product from Christmas, 1938, through March, 1947.

McLean testified he was a longtime showman with Fox, first as manager of the Grand Lake Theatre in Oakland, then as manager of Fox's El Capitan, Frisco, a top neighborhood house in Frisco's Mission District which during McLean's day featured vaudeville.

He said, under questioning by lawyer Robert Raven, that Dibble had contacted him in late 1938 and asked him if he's be interested in buying the Embassy and operating it as a first-run house. McLean testified Herman Cohen had run the Embassy as a first-run until mid-1938, when Cohen shut down the theatre and quietly put it on the market.

Dibble was the auditor and tax man for Herman Wobber, then general sales manager for 20th-Fox, and had worked for various Wobber interests for 20 years.

At the time Dibble approached McLean, Dibble was national manager of the Ten-O-Win Amusement Co., a theatre come-on game which McLean had invented and Wobber had purchased.

McLean said Dibble suggested they get Wobber to help on financing the Embassy takeover for two reasons:

(1) Wobber could help them get first-run product;

(2) Wobber might provide additional financing by which the two partners could build up "a little circuit."

Deal was supposed to have been a three-way split, with each partner getting a third interest. McLean said Wobber was "enthusiastic" and pointed out some theatres might become available because even then divorcement was in the wind. But Wobber a little later reversed his field somewhat and said the only way he could go into the deal was by having control of the Embassy. So, eventually, Wobber got a 55% interest, McLean a 25% interest and Dibble a 20% interest. McLean said Wobber told the minority partners that both he and Dibble would have to remain silent partners while McLean operated the theatre.

Down to Minors

McLean went ahead on this basis, he testified, and the deal was completed. Then he had to get product and, to his shock, found Wobber telling him that all 20th-Fox product was licensed to Fox West Coast for a long time into the future. A little further scurrying on McLean's part revealed that he could get no other first product—except Republic and Monogram.

"I went to work lining up Republic and Monogram," testified McLean, "and figured we could come out with a lower admission price."

But just when the deal was about set, McLean said, the Republic manager, Sid Weisbaum, called and said:

"Sorry. The deal's off. I can't sell you."

"Why not?" asked McLean, not unreasonably.

"I can't tell you," said Weisbaum.

So McLean went after second-run Frisco and, according to his testimony, found:

(1) All downtown Frisco second-run went to the Paramount-owned, Fox-operated State (then named the California) on a 52-day availability;

(2) All product, except Columbia's UA's and half of RKO's, went on a second-run neighborhood basis to Fox's Rialto and El Capitan, with the remainder going to the Nasser Brothers' New Mission—all this, said McLean, was part of the Fox second-run pool;

(3) When he went after third-run downtown Frisco, McLean discovered he could get it only on a 91-day availability, except that Loew's wouldn't sell him anything and UA was committed to W.L. Markowitz's Marion Davies Theatre (now the Esquire).

The result, McLean contends, is that he found everything playing on an availability of 71 days or better in Frisco was tied up by Fox.

Judge Impassive

That was as far as McLean got, and through it all Judge Murphy sat quite impassively—he's heard this before, in Sam Goldwyn vs. 20th-Fox, National Theatres and Fox West Coast.

Earlier witnesses, all called to authenticate documents (which are being wheeled into court by the bushel-load), included:

William Thedford, Fox West Coast's Northern California divisional manager; George Milner, Fox's chief booker in Northern California; Sam J. Gardner, Loew's district manager; Bob Coyne, Loew's local manager; Jack Erickson, 20th-Fox's district manager; Ugo Fratto, 20th-Fox's office manager; Barney Rose, Universal's district manager; E. H. Smyth, Universal's branch manager; L. E. Tillman, Columbia's district manager; Mel Klein, Columbia's branch manager; Jack Stevenson, Paramount's branch manager; M. S. Anderson, Paramount's ex-office manager; Albert Schmitken, Warner's district manager, and Joe Hanley, Warner's office manager.

Nub of the defendants' case, as advanced in opening arguments by lawyers Eugene Bennett (for Paramount, Warners, RKO, UA and Loew's), Macklin Fleming (for Columbia and Universal) and Arthur B. Dunne (for 20th-Fox, National Theatres and Fox West Coast), is:

— Embassy had a long history as a money-loser;

— Among the 10 major theatres on Market Street, Frisco's main drag, the Embassy was 10th in grossing history, ninth in assessed valuation, eighth in seating capacity—and oldest;

— Fleming pointed up a strong example of the Embassy's low-gross proclivities—in 1938, when Herman Cohen was operating both the Embassy and the UA, Cohen played six pictures at the two theatres day-and-date, and the Embassy did just half the business that the UA, only a block away, did;

— The histories of the defendants' runs and clearances in the 1930's were "perfectly normal" conditions for the times, according to Bennett.

Lively interest centers on this case because of the personalities involved. It's understood that Wobber, now semi-retired, is boilingmad at McLean and Dibble, feels they have crossed him. It's expected that his testimony may reflect this bitterness and that trial may bubble over into quite a personal feud, though it's certain that Judge Murphy, a stickler for court decorum, won't let this get out of hand.

ONE-MANNING IS EXHIBS' GOAL

Demands for a decrease in the number of projectionists manning the booths are arising throughout the country as hard-pressed theatre operators continue to fight the battle of the declining boxoffice and increasing expenses. In many situations, particularly in small town theatres and neighborhood houses, exhibitors are clamoring for a one-man booth operation instead of the present requirement of two. In addition, theatres in larger cities, where union contracts call for five men, there's a campaign on to reduce the booth operation to two men.

Projectionists unions, affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, are resisting all efforts on the part of theatremen to cut down the manpower. However, as a result of arbitration proceedings and curtailed operations, many theatres have been able to employ fewer boothmen. It's reported that many theatres are eliminating matinee performances to cut the expense of having two men in the projection booth.

In Philadelphia recently, the Boyd Theatre and a Fabian house, which formerly employed five projectionists, were able to cut down to two following a decision of a board of arbitrators. The local projectionists union selected a panel consisting of attorney Chauncey Howell and auditor Arthur Kallow. The theatres chose Allentown, Pa., attorney Isadore Rappaport and theatre operator-tradepaper publisher Jay Emanuel. Dr. Paul A. Pfretschner, a professor at Lafayette College, was picked as the fifth, impartial arbitrator.

Panel's Decision

After three meetings, the panel decided that the management was able to prove that there would be no danger to the public with a two-man booth nor would there be any violation of state or city ordinances that the booth be limited to two men with an extra man for relief. None of the men, it was pointed out, would be required to work more than 25 hours weekly and it would result in a substantial salary increase for those employed. It was further decided to give the displaced men six months severance pay. Emanuel, however, dissented and Rappaport agreed with him. Both dissenters felt that severance pay be given these men, but objected to the six-month payoff and proposed a three-month severance in the interest of a settlement.

No final decision has been made as yet on the proposal. There are some industryites, however, who feel that the final outcome of the Philly arbitration may set a precedent nationally since theatremen have been making numerous requests for a reduction of the booth personnel. Some theatremen have privately declared that more than two men in a booth in large theatres constitutes featherbedding.

AS AWARDS STAND, 20TH'S MAJOR BREAK

Fact that the "best picture" Academy Award went to "Bridge on the River Kwai" and the "best actor" Oscar to Alec Guinness for his performance in it, is seen at 20th-Fox as giving Joanne Woodward a clear field in immediate terms of exploiting the commercial values of her award.

The way 20th sees it, "Bridge" is playing off slowly. On the other hand, 20th has "Three Faces of Eve" and "No Downpayment" still playing off, and it has "The Long, Hot Summer" going into imminent release. Thus, reasons 20th, the main award impact will be carried by Miss Woodward.

Kid Stuff, Many Reissues, Prominent In Flow of Easter Screen Fare

As had been customary for holiday periods, the film companies are putting their best foot forward in an effort to capture the Easter trade. Product has been carefully selected to satisfy the taste of different segments of the population. Perhaps more than in previous years, there's a strong concentration on pictures that will appeal to the kiddie trade during the school vacation stanza.

Reissues play a predominant role in the kidappeal pix, but there are also several newies around that are seen as filling the bill. Among these are Metro's "Merry Andrew," a family-type pictures that will have same 280 dates during Easter week. In addition there's Buena Vista's "Old Yeller" and "The Missouri Traveler." BV is also banking on Walt Disney's hardy perennial, "Show White and the Seven Dwarfs," which has been booked for a substantial number of dates throughout the country.

Both major circuits in the N. Y. metropolitan area — Loew's and RKO and the chains that have the same product split—are offering a diversified program. Loew's in particular is making a strong pitch for the moppet trade. During the Easter period, it is offering three different programs, starting off April 3 to 6 with a Martin & Lewis revival by pairing "Jumping Jacks" and "Scared Stiff." From April 7 to 11, Loew's is coming in with a Shirley Temple reissue, "Susannah of the Mounties," and an all-cartoon feature reissue, "Gulliver's Travels." This package will be substituted for the weekend trade.

RKO is starting its Easter program with "Snow White," which opens today (Wed.) and runs until Tuesday (8). At 6 p.m. on April 8, the kiddie pic will be withdrawn and "Farewell to Arms" will be substituted.

Lettuce Trays

For the most part, each of the major companies has one or two picturess which have been designated Easter attractions. These pix will break in first-run situations in many sections of the country. In addition, there's a group of other films geared for first subsequent dates.

In addition to "Merry Andrew," which is Metro's Easter picture, the company has many bookings for "Raintree County," "The Brothers Karamazov" and "Saddle the Wind." Warner Bros.' holiday biggie is "Marjorie Morningstar," but "Chase a Crooked Shadow" and "Lafayette Escadrille" will also have a number of dates. 20th-Fox's bid for the holiday coin will rest with "The Young Lions" and "The Long, Hot Summer." "Lions" will be out in a number of pre-release engagements, with "Hot Summer" getting substantially more bookings. 20th will also be represented in a number of spots with "Cattle Empire" and in subsequent situations with "Farewell to Arms."

Gable, Lancaster, Hope

The largest portion of United Artists' representation will be with the Clark Gable-Burt Lancaster starrer, "Run Silent, Run Deep." Bob Hope-Fernandel's "Paris Holiday" will receive good exposure at same time. Additionally, UA's current hit, "Witness for the Prosecution," will have a substantial number of dates.

Paramount's main Easter attraction will be "Teacher's Pet," starring Clark Gable and Doris Day. Par, of course, will also be taking in coin with Cecil B. DeMille's "The 10 Commandments," which will have a substantial number of dates during Easter week. Another Par entry during the holiday period, particularly in the sub-runs, will be "Wild Is the Wind." In a bid for southern trade during the vacation period, the company will open "Country Music Holiday" in a number of situations in the South.

Theatre-Over-Shops

Montreal, April 1.

Montreal will soon have another new film house. It will be the city's first second-story cinema, with stores below.

A 750-seater east-end Plaza, owned by M. Custom, will show French-language and art films.

B's Out For Now —Sam Katzman

Hollywood, April 1.

Columbia has given Sam Katzman an okay to produce top-budgeted product after he wraps up a pair of low-budgets already in the works, it's disclosed here by the producer. Katzman, who had been in discussions with Paramount aneht a moveover to the Marathon lot, said Col prexy Abe Schneider and v.p. Leo Jaffe agreed with him that there is no market for "B" pix today.

While he didn't disclose exact budgets of the bigger pix planned, Katzman said "I can bring in one or six big packages, if they're the right ones."

"The B pictures are passe today, there just isn't enough market anymore. With blockbusters such as 'The Bridge on the River Kwai,' 'Peyton Place' and 'The Long Hot Summer' playing, they have no need for B's, so this type of picture suffers. But the situation will adjust itself and there will again be a market for the B—but not today," said Katzman.

Before moving into the higher-budgeted program, Katzman plans to produce "Juke Box Jamboree," and then a follow-up, not yet picked, to his "Going Steady." He has shelved all horror and gangster pix, meanwhile, he added.

Katzman said he couldn't state at this time how many A pix he will make. That depends on the properties acquired.

PROVIDENCE BLUENOSES MAY REACH TOP COURT

Each time a censorship case goes to the U. S. Supreme Court, the film censors stand a chance of having the legal rug pulled from under their feet. Another "test" now looms in Providence, R. I., where the French "And God Created Woman" has been banned. If Kingsley-International, the distributor, loses its case, the issue goes directly to the Supreme Court.

Another film case now pending, and due to be decided soon in the N. Y. Court of Appeals, is "Lady Chatterley's Lover," which the N.Y. censor refused to pass unless cuts were made. Again, it's Kingsley-International which is distributing. Ephraim London, who wrote the milestone "Miracle" brief before the Supreme Court, is the attorney in both instances.

In Philadelphia, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania will hear arguments on the appeal involving the banning of "God Created Woman" in several Philly houses on April 21. If the case is won, it goes back to the three-judge Court of Common Pleas in Philly.

In Chicago, the French "Nana" film also may be heading for the Supreme Court.

What pleases the anti-censorship forces is that these films aren't the "nudie" type of exploitation pictures which, in the past, have occasionally served to bring the censorship issue to a head.

A. D. Anead, district manager for Alexander Film Co., in Texas and Oklahoma effective April 1.

The Proud Rebel

ster has been shocked into a mute during Union forces' sacking of Atlanta during the war, when he saw his mother killed and his home destroyed by fire, and it's Ladd's dogged wandering of the land to find a doctor who can cure his son which motivates plot.

Action unfolds in a small Southern Illinois community, where Ladd is drawn into a fight with the two sons of Dean Jagger, a big sheep-raiser; the payment of his fine after his arrest by Miss de Havilland, a lonely farm-woman whose property is coveted by Jagger; and Ladd working out this fine on the farm.

Ladd in a restrained role, the proud rebel whose whole life is devoted to his son, delivers compellingly. Miss de Havilland seems to have gained new depth and stature as a dramatic actress in her portrayal of the farm-woman whose love for Ladd and his son becomes far more important than saving for herself the farm which Jagger is trying to hornswoggle from her. Young David is a standout in a difficult part in which he tries to speak but is unable to do so until speech returns as he struggles to warn his father in a stirring gunfight climax. His devotion to his dog cues much of the action, too, and interesting highlights are reached in this dog herding sheep. Jagger scores as the heavy, with excellent assistance from Dean Stanton and Thomas Pittman as his two sons, and Cecil Kellaway also lends interest as a Quaker doctor. James Westerfield and Henry Hull are in for colorful characters, too.

Jerome Moross contributes effectively to the mood in his music score, Aaron Stell's tight editing is a valuable asset and McClure Capps' art direction colorful. Whit.

Cole Younger, Gunfighter
(C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Frank Lovejoy in better-than-average western; fair b.o.

Hollywood, March 28.

Allied Artists release of a Ben Schwalb production. Stars Frank Lovejoy, James Best, Abby Dalton; features Jan Merlin, Douglas Spencer, Ainslie Pryor, Frank Ferguson, Myron Healey, George Keymas, Dan Sheridan, John Mitchum. Directed by R. G. Springsteen. Screenplay, Daniel Mainwaring, based on a story by Clifton Adams; camera (DeLuxe color), Harry Neumann; editor, William Austin; music, Marlin Skiles. Previewed March 20, '58. Running time, 78 MINS.

Younger	Frank Lovejoy
Kit	James Best
Lucy	Abby Dalton
Frank	Jan Merlin
Woodruff	Douglas Spencer
Follyard	Ainslie Pryor
Wiltrock	Frank Ferguson
Bennett Twins	Myron Healey
Price	George Keymas
Phelps	Dan Sheridan
Bartender	John Mitchum

The emotional entanglements that make cigar-smoking Cole Younger a pretty fair guy stack up to make "Cole Younger, Gunfighter" a pretty fair picture. At least, it's different; it gains stature in DeLuxe Color and CinemaScope; and its capably put together. The Allied Artists western stands a chance on the open range but looms mostly as a second biller outside the zealous oater situations.

Most notable are the professional production values gleaned by producer Ben Schwalb. He boosts the picture further by using good taste in casting, coming up with a rather fine group headed by Frank Lovejoy and James Best. R. G. Springsteen directed and pulled out the action without neglecting the human and more important elements of the story. Taken from a tale by Clifton Adams, the script was tightly conceived by Daniel Mainwaring who scores for the most part with a screenplay that's easy to follow.

The setting—Texas in 1873—is spiced by the unseen presence of one Governor E. J. Davis who rules with an iron pistol through his state police force affectionately labeled the "Bluebellies." At fade-in, Best is fed up with these carpetbaggers and leads a demonstration to prove it. Woe be it for him, he's caught and takes the first opportunity to leave the polluted town. On his journey to safer climes, he meets Cole Younger, played by Lovejoy, and a real and well depicted friendship is born. Story is complicated when Jan Merlin, in love with Best's girl, kills a couple VIP's, then tells the Bluebellies he saw Best do it. All turns out well, thank heavens, through a mighty unorthodox trial that gives one the impression it was time to wind up this opus, properly or not.

Lovejoy turns in a strong performance as the famous gunfighter, making him a little better than he was an maintaining an absorbing degree of mystery. Best makes an appealing youngster, chalking up another top performance. Good support comes from Merlin, Abby Dalton and Ainslie Pryor.

Harry Neumann caught some fine color on his film, and it is heightened by Marlin Skiles' music. Art director David Milton's indoor sets are fine, but his outdoor facsimiles and their simulated sunshine are too obviously unreal. Ron.

High Hell

Fair programmer about mountain mining.

Paramount release of Princess (Burt Balaban and Arthur L. Mayer) production. Stars John Derek and Elaine Stewart; features Rodney Burke, Patrick Allen, Jerold Wells, Al Mulock. Directed by Balaban. Screenplay, Irve Tunick, based on novel by Steve Frazee; editor, Eric Boyd-Perkins; music, Phil Cardew; song, "A Man's a Man," by Cardew and Sonny Miller, sung by Dick James. Previewed in N.Y., March 28, '58. Running time, 87 MINS.

Craig Rhodes	John Derek
Lenore Davidson	Elaine Stewart
Danny Rhodes	Rodney Burke
Luke Fulgham	Patrick Allen
Charlie Spence	Jerold Wells
Frank Davidson	Al Mulock
Dell Malverne	Colin Croft
Jed Thomas	Nicholas Stuart

This first production from the Burt Balaban-Arthur L. Mayer independent unit is a modest programmer that fails to wring out the full potential of basic plot ideas and physical backgrounds. Despite the obvious smalltime budget, more film-making ingenuity might have given it some distinction.

Ostensibly laid in the Canadian Rockies (and actually shot in the Swiss Alps), "High Hell" concerns a group of rugged men in quest of a gold mine high up in snow-covered craggy terrain and the romantic distractions provided by an alluring female. Explanation for the latter's presence is that she's there in an effort to rescue her faltering marriage to one of the goldseekers.

Production is reminiscent of the old-school type of meller, wherein the developments are telegraphed ahead, the principal performers eschew histrionic subtlety, the director over-emphasizes the story points. Repeated focusing on the mountain, as the mining group begins the ascent, for example, is unneeded footage, particularly since these scenes are lacking any particularly worthwhile photographic values.

Attempt at the spectacular is made in one spot where Elaine Stewart, as the lone gal in the mountain cabin, thinking she's out of sight, strips for a bath in a barrel and is rescued from a leering Patrick Allen by stalwart John Derek. It comes off a little awkwardly.

Some suspense is generated via the constant threat of an avalanche with the use of dynamite in blasting the mountain.

Song, "A Man's a Man," vocalled by Dick James has an appropriate lyric and modest tune quality. Technical credits fair. Gene.

Les Miserables
(FRENCH; COLOR)

Paris, March 25.

Pathe release of Pathe-PAC production. Stars Jean Gabin, Bernard Blier, Bourvil, Daniele Delorme; features Gianni Esposito, Serge Reggiani, Beatrice Altariba, Jimmy Urbain, Sylvia Montfort. Directed by Jean Paul Le Chanois. Screenplay, Rene Barjavel, Le Chancois from novel by Victor Hugo; camera (Technicolor), Jacques Natteau; editor, Emma Le Chanois. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 240 MINS.

Jean Valjean	Jean Gabin
Javert	Bernard Blier
Thenardier	Bourvil
Fauchelevent	Daniele Delorme
Marius	Gianni Esposito
Enjoras	Serge Reggiani
Cosette	Beatrice Altariba
Eponine	Sylvia Montfort
Gavroche	Jimmy Urbain
Myriel	Fernand Ledoux

The French, on the surface, have their first blockbuster in this pic. Taken from the Victor Hugo novel, with plenty of stars, production values and four hours of screen time, it should be a smash grosser. But this may not be so big in total coin because recent Yank and Italo versions date only a few years back. It will do well here but maybe not as sock as expected.

For the U. S. this is another thing. The last Yank version was released not too long ago, and this follows the monumental book too closely. All the romantic coincidence is used, with the result that the pic lags as the various threads of two generations are tied up. Much cutting of the superfluous scenes could bring this down to a more compact U. S. size for possible playoff showings, for the pic does have scope. But it would be chancey, at best, and with color and dubbing costs might not be worth it.

Main film strength is Jean Gabin's thesping of Jean Valjean, the man who served 20 years for stealing a crust of bread and then devoted himself to a lifetime of good due to a priest's kindness. The implacable policeman Javert is well played by Bernard Blier.

Made mainly in East Germany, with DEFA footing production costs and getting Eastern distrib rights in return, the film gives a good reconstruction of the 19th Century Paris barricades, with the action and derring-do well rendered. But, in all, the pic is an overdrawn, plodding odyssey, with pruning in order.

Bourvil is standout as the avaricious enemy of Valjean while the production is peppered with known names etching good smaller roles. But the main burden rests in the capable hands of Gabin.

Direction is academic if competent while the color is uneven until settling down on interiors. Technirama gives this an anamorphoscoped size. It is now playing day date on a two-a-day basis in five first-run houses here. Mosk.

The Duke Wore Jeans
(BRITISH)

Obvious b.o. potentialities in modest but breezy vehicle for Britain's top rock-'n'-roller, Tommy Steele.

London, March 25.

Anglo Amalgamated release of a Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy (Peter Rogers) production. Stars Tommy Steele. Directed by Gerald Thomas. Screenplay, Norman Hudis from story by Lionel Bart, Michael Pratt; camera, Otto Heller; editor, Peter Boita; music, Bruce Montgomery, Lionel Bart, Michael Pratt. At Studio One, London. Running time, 90 MINS.

Tony and Tommy	Tommy Steele
Maria	June Laverick
Cooper	Michael Medwin
Bastini	Eric Pohlmann
King	Alan Wheatley
Queen	Mary Kerridge
Duchess	Ambrosine Philpotts
Lord Whitecliffe	Clive Morton
Lady Marguerite	Noel Hood
Bartolomeo	Elwyn Brook-Jones
M.C.	Arnold Diamond
Factory Manager	Philip Leaver
Air Stewardess	Susan Travers

Tommy Steele, Britain's No. 1 exponent of rock-'n'-roll, advances a few more paces along a new road in his short, spectacular career, with his second film, "The Duke Wore Jeans." In this, he is lured into doing a certain amount of acting, and though no great shakes as a mummer, he emerges as a likeable personality with acting potentiality. At least he must now be regarded as a full-fledged artist rather than a possible flash in a lucrative pan.

Though a higher budgeted effort than the money-spinning "Tommy Steele Story," his second pic is not an expensive affair and should return a handsome dividend in the U.K. Steele's reputation is possibly not yet secure enough overseas to make this pic a reasonable U.S. bet.

The lissom yarn has Steele playing a dual role. He is a young aristocrat who wants to evade wooing the princess of a wealthy South American oil-monarchy, as desired by his hard-up parents, mainly because he already is secretly married. When he meets a young, brash Cockney who is his exact double, he arranges for him to take his place in Ritalla. So Steele sets off for South America. After becoming involved in some political skullduggery and inevitable misunderstandings eventually woos and marries the girl.

Steele is happier when he takes over for the young peer than in the earlier stages. It would have been advantageous for a less characteristic speaking voice than Steele's to have been dubbed on to his lines as the young aristocrat. Still, Steele shows a lively sense of humor and a pleasant naturalness.

Opportunities are provided for him to sing several numbers of which "It's All Happening," "Happy Guitar" and "Thanks a Lot" are standouts. Most of the comedy is supplied via a suave performance by Michael Medwin, as a gentleman's gentleman. Alan Wheatley, as the King of Ritalla; Mary Kerridge, Clive Morton and Eric Pohlmann also turn in good support. June Laverick, as the princess, looks as pretty as a picture but is clearly not yet experienced enough for leads.

Gerald Thomas has directed Norman Hudis' lighthearted screenplay with the obvious intention of not allowing anything to take the spotlight off Steele. Photography is competent. "The Duke Wore Jeans" adds up to a modest offering by Producers Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy, who are making no secret of their plans to cash in on the current vogue for pop music. Rich.

Innocent Sinners
(BRITISH)

Below-average tearjerker that veers uneasily between sentiment and comedy, misfiring on both counts; with no star value this has little.

London, March 25.

Rank production and (Hugh Stewart) release. Stars Flora Robson, David Kossoff, Barbara Mullen, Catherine Lacey. Directed by Philip Leacock. Screenplay, Neil Paterson, Rumer Godden; editor, John Guthridge; camera, Harry Waxman; music, Philip Green. At Leicester Square Theatre, London. Running time, 95 MINS.

Lovejoy	June Archer
Tip	Christopher Hey
Sparkey	Brian Hammond
Olivia Chesney	Flora Robson
Vincent	David Kossoff
Mrs. Vincent	Barbara Mullen
Angela Chesney	Catherine Lacey
Liz	Susan Beaumont
Charles	Lyndon Brook
Manley	Edward Chapman
Mr. Isbister	John Rae
Lovejoy's Mother	Vanda Godsell
Cassie	Hilda Fenemore
Mrs. Malone	Pauline Delaney
Doctor	Andrew Cruickshank

"Innocent Sinners" is a half-hearted stab at being a tearjerker, but it barely tugs at the emotions. With no real star value in its workmanlike cast, chances of survival in the boxoffice jungle are slim.

Based on a Rumer Godden novel, "An Episode of Sparrows," it tells of a cocky little girl who is neglected by her actress mother. She finds a packet of cornflower seeds and dreams a dream. In a bombed-out site in the streets of London she decides to build a garden, with a couple of boys from a local gang as her reluctant allies. On the whole she finds the local adults rather unsympathetic towards her ambition and she lands up in a charity home. Before then, there are some rather embarrassing moments in a church. Entire pic gets absolutely no place extremely slowly.

Main snag is that the child, as played by young June Archer, is an unsympathetic brat who would have benefitted from a spanking. Only in fleeting moments does she manage to show us the heart of an underprivileged child. Most of the kids in the film perform like puppets, though Christopher Hey makes a convincing young street Arab while little Brian Hammond deservedly registers a few yocks as the tiniest nipper in the gang.

A thoroughly competent adult cast wander through colorless roles with David Kossoff and Barbara Mullen coming off best as a kindly couple who look after young Miss Archer while trying to run an exclusive restaurant in an unfashionable area. Flora Robson plays an understanding spinster and Catherine Lacey her fussy, frigid sister. Both do as well as can be expected with carelessly written roles.

Most of the dialog in the screenplay provided by Neil Patterson and Rumer Godden is tiresomely undistinguished. Philip Leacock's solid direction is marred by John Guthridge's editing which at times lingers on a shot so long that the film becomes static. However, director Leacock has captured a certain amount of the atmosphere of London's back streets. Harry Waxman's lensing of the locations is okay. What could have been a touching idea has got lost in a welter of phoney sentimentality and banal writing. Rich.

Murder Trial

fense, contends the witness actually heard the soundtrack of "Road House," a film starring Ida Lupino, Cornel Wilde and Richard Widmark, played on KVOA-TV here on the murder night.

On trial for the murder of Mrs. Evelyn Scott last Aug. 19 is Norman Simmers. The state's witness, M. H. Peacock, testified that on the murder night, he heard someone shout from a nearby house trailer the words, "I'll kill you, I'll kill you," followed shortly by six shots. The following morning, he went over to the Scott trailer, heard Simmers' voice and identified it as the voice he had heard the previous night.

Defense, however, produced a neighbor of Mrs. Scott who had been watching the picture that night, and then brought on KVOA-TV program production manager James H. Owen, who testified that "Road House" had been on the air at the time Peacock heard the shouts. Final reel of the picture was then screened for the jury. In it, Miss Lupino shouts, "Let go or I'll kill you. I'll kill you! Stay away or I swear I'll shoot you." She then fires five shots and the picture ends.

Deciding his headquarters musicians could bring calypso and other native rhythms to Puerto Rico with their own steel band, he dispatched Chief Musician Charles A. Roeper to Trinidad to get the drums made.

Diagrams were drawn on the top of a ping pong table and the pans, as they are called, were made in Trinidad by natives. The Navy also sent 12 musicians with Roeper and having beared as much theory as they could absorb in 2 days, they left having had practically no rehearsals. However, as steel drum arrangements and regular sheet music arrangements are identical Roeper's men soon got the hang of it and became proficient enough to place third in a contest at the neighboring island of Antigua. (While in most places the band produces good will for the Navy, it has been found this is not necessarily the case in competitions and band will probably not compete at the Trinidad festival this month). Total cost of all the instruments was under $200, but the past year Trinidad prices for pans have already doubled.

In addition to playing for local enlisted men's and officer affairs at the base, the band makes numerous good will appearances on the island and has played in Ponce, Mayagues, and Rio Piedras. It also was a hit at Chicago Music Festival last year while in that area for a Great Lakes Naval Training Center Date. Last month the band appeared on Dave Garaoway's "Today."

In other Carribean areas, oil companies are subsidizing bands which use their drums as variations in manufacture make them quite different. There are bands in Trinidad which use drums exclusively the products of one oil company such as Esso, Shell and Texaco. Understood steel band connoisseurs give Esso Imperial (not domestic) drums the edge for audio qualities.

As for Admiral Dan's Pandemoniacs, the combo is not only a socko morale builder but is getting an excellent press due in addition to its own merits to the capable public relations handling of the Admiral's staffers, Comdr. Robin M. Hartmann and Lieut. Chantee Lewis.

'Battle of B'way'

Walters for his opening show at the Cafe de Paris, now tentatively set for May 2.

The war between these two spots looks like one with no holds barred. Thus far, both cafemen are keeping up with each other in virtually every department. For example, the LQ is spending a lot of loot in building a new and enlarged stage and for redecorating. Walters has announced a large stage that will include provisions for ice shows, swim shows as well as regulation floor fare.

Both Risman and Walters are in the market for top names and agencies are scouring the field to provide a sufficient list to set up bidding between the two spots.

At this point, the agencies are studying the effect that the war will have on Jules Podell who operates the Copacabana. Consensus among the percenters is that the effect will not be as great as initially imagined. Headliners such as Joe E. Lewis, Jimmy Durante and others of his regulars will work only in his spot. As for most of the names not as heavily associated with the Copa, Podell still has to go on the market in competition with the other cafes. Thus, while the Copa may lose some of the intermediate headliners, the spot is reasonably secure in retaining the bulk of its assured draws. With the Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, also in the bidding for top talent, the buying picture in New York looks like the most exciting in years.

One of the rooms in the middle will be the Old Romanian, which will buy names, but whether owner Jack Silverman can withstand the onslaught of the other spots remains to be seen. However, the major protagonists in this battle have long contended that competition in niteries will bring more people downtown.

Standard & Poor's Tells Investors Pic Stocks Are 'Too Speculative' With B.O. Improvement Doubted

By GEORGE GILBERT

Gloomy view of the film industry's earnings prospects this year is taken by the Wall St. statistical house of Standard & Poor's in its current survey of the motion picture field. Analysis cautions that film equities "in general are too speculative for the average investor." Study also opines that the group's declining income may cause it to lag somewhat behind the general market.

Outlook, as S. & P. sees it, offers little comfort to scarcely any branch of the industry. For the report notes that sustained improvement in attendance throughout the year is doubtful. Moreover, an increased availability of old films on tv will "maintain the pressure" on the boxoffice. Theatre prospects are rated unfavorable and "further contraction of marginal units is likely."

Beset by rising costs, producers are under pressure to cut large studio overhead expenses. Further exploring the industry's film-making wing, analysis states that lower revenues for the average picture combined with higher costs are bringing about losses in the domestic market. And these losses, it's noted, have dented earnings from tv along with foreign operations.

Herewith a summarized company-by-company breakdown of S. & P.'s analysis:

Columbia: Tv activities are expanding, but rising costs combined with depressed domestic attendance may result in small profit at best for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958.

Loew's: Domestic production losses have been offsetting profitable operations in tv and overseas fields, but cost-cutting steps raise hopes of a small profit for the fiscal year ending Aug. 31, 1958.

National Theatres: This large circuit has been axing marginal theatres and is attempting to diversify its activities notably, through Cinemiracle widescreen production; its theatre biz is described as unpromising.

Paramount: This company's relatively strong earnings position is helped through extensive diversification into the broadcasting, color tv, and pay tv fields.

Republic: Past results have been unimpressive; dividends have never been paid on the common. But disposal of post-1948 features and relief from theatrical film losses could mean fairly profitable operations in fiscal year ended Oct. 28, 1958, compared with last year's deficit.

Stanley Warner: Earnings from International Latex division are expected to keep company in the black rather than its 297 theatres and Cinerama operations.

Technicolor: Color film processing has become a highly competitive field; small deficit is indicated for 1957, while 1958 earnings will probably be at a low level.

20th-Fox: Earnings in 1958 may be moderately larger than last year's $2.60 a share indicated due to substantial interests in other fields besides film production.

United Artists: Activities have been expanded into the music publishing, recording, theatre management and telefilm distribution fields; earnings for 1958 should exceed 1957 profit of about $3 per share.

Universal: Results of operations in fiscal year ending Oct. 31, 1958, will depend upon company's ability to lower costs.

Warners: Earnings for fiscal year ending Aug. 31, 1958, will probably be well below the $1.90 per share of 1956-'57. Profits have been sliced by unfavorable domestic attendance and higher costs.

Stanley-Warner reopened the Alpine in Punxsutawney on a full-time basis under special court order. The larger Jefferson is being renovated to resume in a month or so, at which time SW interests are to be disassociated with Alpine by ruling of U. S. Supreme Court. Both houses had been closed for two years and Punxsutawney was without a theatre during that time. To assist in the restoration, the council there recently abolished its 10% amusement tax.

to Vienna, sending nine of us, and 26 pieces of luggage back into the city. The timid spring glimpsed in Rome now departed and we proceeded by train to Zurich where we then flew on to the Austrian capital. Since our train did not leave Milan until midnight the terrifying posibility loomed of our having a night in the capital of opera without opera. La Scala's director Ghiringhelli surrendered his own box, Italian gallantry at its best, and my charges saw "Orfeo and Eurydice" superbly sung by Fedora Barbieri and Sena Jurinac.

Vienna at last and the new Statoper in itself was a stunning experience. This was well because the "Tannhauser" let us down. We were, truth to report, disappointed in all the operas we attended in Vienna, which included "Don Giovanni" and "Fidelio" but we liked a ballet performance of Strauss' "Josephslengade," a great rarity and, of course, quite old-fashioned, yet attractive. The opera house itself and the atmosphere of Vienna compensated for the so-so quality of the performances.

Munich and the Bavarian Academy of Art followed. Here an added treat was a number of contemporary operatic works played for my party off tapes. Our official opera performances "Daphne," "The Masked Ball" and then two works of Carl Orff, "Der Mond" and "Die Kluge" made us feel that operatically the beer burg was first rate. An American singer, Keith Engen, was especially arresting, being young, a looker and big-voiced.

Hamburg opera ("Goudunov," "Don Carlos" and "Magic Flute") also proved satisfactory. By this point we were all well - operaed, but persevering. Hamburg's opera house, very new, has wonderfully comfortable seats (oh, those hard stools in Munich) and remarkably fine acoustics. The facilities for staging, scenery, costumes were completely moderne.

London came next where we had to settle for the ballet. "Sleeping Beauty" with Margot Fonteyn, since Covent Garden's opera was then idle. We also saw in London the "Broken Date" ballet written by Francoise Sagan. But an Italian company at the Drury Lane provided Bizet's "Pearl Fishers" to get us back on operatic contract.

News ahead of time of a strike in Paris had alarmed us about the opera availabilities there but the strike was settled in time and we witnessed "Walkyrie." We voted it second rate, though perhaps not surprising — Wagner in Paris! George Sebastian, who conducted, is known in the states for his radio work for the Jean Tennyson series for Celanese.

deny qualified reports on MPEA action lifting film embargo, stating any official communique on the subject should rightfully come from Spanish authorities. Government announcement, he felt, would have the effect of wiping the slate clean of past differences.

In another goodwill step that will be very much grata to cinema officials, film circles and Spain generally, Gervasi confirmed an MPEA commitment to participate in the July 19-29 San Sebastian Int'l Film Festival. Commitment was delivered over the weekend to fest director Antonio de Zulueta and Miguel de Echarri, Spain delegate to Int'l Fed. of Film Producers.

Gervasi said U.S. film majors would enter two pix as contenders for the annual golden sea shell, send a luminary delegation to the Basque resort capital and participate fully in fest's extra-curricular film mart screenings. MPEA fest decision, timed to help Yank negotiator Gervasi over delicate preliminary pact hurdles, touched off a landmine of enthusiasm in all quarters.

Hard-pressed to evaluate credit for dramatic somersault Spain-MPEA situation has taken, local observers are clearly impressed with Gervasi's dynamic Spanish-idiom approach backed by what is regarded here as a fundamentally new forward-looking MPEA position of closer collaboration and wider profit-sharing with all countries.

Feeling in Madrid tonight, following Gervasi's initial week-long effort, is that Spain-MPEA relations are at long last approaching a stage where they will finally reflect friendly rapports existing between U.S. and Spain in other spheres.

20th's Bettered Earnings

Though hurt by a sharp drop in attendance and earnings during the last quarter of 1957, 20th-Fox last year improved its earnings slightly. Company reported a net of $6,511,218; or $2.49 per share, for the year ended Dec. 28, 1957.

In the comparable prior year, 20th showed a net of $6,198,419 or $2.34 per share.

Total film rentals, including money from tv sales, hit $117,537,070 against $112,780,869 last year. Since foreign film rentals were about $53,000,000 (with no tv income from overseas), domestic rentals and tv coin amounted to about $64,000,000, which is $4,000,000 over the $60,299,658 which the U.S. market delivered for 20th in 1956.

Fourth quarter earnings were $887,360, or 36c per share, compared with $3,016,320 or $1.14 per share the prior year. During that quarter, said the report, "some of the pictures released . . . proved disappointing and the theatre business throughout the world was adversely affected by the Asian flu epidemic."

20th's 1957 balance sheet showed a total income of $127,662,227 against $122,251,864 in 1956. Amortization was down to $63,524,545 against $68,953,920 in '56. Participation in film rentals was up to $16,474,493 vs. $9,138,510 in the prior stanza. For the first time in some years, distribution and administrative expenses rose almost $1,000,000, from $31,051,401 to $32,120,682. Provision for $7,130,000 in U.S. and foreign taxes was made against $5,075,650 in 1956.

have to work in a climate "where so little is taken at face value."

Otis Guernsey had the Trib reviewing job before Zinsser. They switched positions, with Zinsser becoming the critic and Guernsey taking over Zinsser's job as Sunday drama editor. There has never been any official explanation of that switch, Guernsey having been considered one of the top men in the field. When Guernsey stopped reviewing there also were many rumors (never confirmed) that the Trib had acted to meet film company complaints that his evaluation of pictures was too tough. Within days, however, Zinsser established the fact that he wasn't put there to "go easy."

Trade generally has shown a good deal of respect for Zinsser's reviews and he has steadily gained stature. A couple of months ago, after going to the Coast, he did a series of "What's Wrong With the Movie Business?" which got wide attention. Tribune has a slightly more "popular" approach to film reviews than the N. Y. Times, but a recent VARIETY survey established that Zinsser and the Times' Bosley Crowther were virtually on a par re what they did and didn't like.

In his last piece Sunday (30), Zinsser thanked the readers who had written in to him over the years. "This is a solitary craft," he wrote. "The critic sees his movies alone, does not discuss them with any one, and writes about them in lonely labor. It is comforting to know that there are real live readers in the outside world, and this correspondence has been a happy experience for me."

Why is he writing his book? "Because about 20 people a day ask me that question (Seen Any Good Movies Lately?), thinking they are the first. It's as good a reason as any for quitting."

While the timing of the Zinsser exit as a critic has sparked speculation, latter is indicative of the overall impression that the companies are "gunning" for the tough critics. The famous incident of United Artists briefly pulling its "Trapeze" ads from the N. Y. Times in anger over the Crowther review of the film is recalled; and it's known that several critics have heard from editors when they became too "realistic" in their write-ups and the companies screamed.

The distributors are somewhat ambivolent on the question of critics. On the one hand, they tend to deprecate their importance in terms of boxoffice. On the other, they become very unhappy when a reviewer takes a real poke at a film, particularly if it's a big one. As VARIETY has pointed out before, the industry has a tendency to think of the critics as being "in the family." When the reviewers then assert their independence, the reaction is the more sharp, usually taking the form of speculation that the critic "has it in for" a given company or individual.

he hasn't a tv set," he commented.

American-International, with two gangster films, "Machine Gun Kelly" and "The Bonnie Parker Story," on its upcoming releasing agenda, plans to go ahead with their completion, according to Arkoff.

"We work closely with the MPAA Production Code Administration and observe all their regulation," he observed. "We certinly don't glorify the criminals in these two pictures, and neither title character has been presented heroically."

Producing company, which last year released 22 films, will boost its output this year to from 24 to 30, with overall budget of $3,000,000. At least four will be in color. To improve the quality of program, according to prexy Janes H. Nicholson, more care will be devoted to the preparation of original screenplays.

"We'll go overboard on script budgets," he declared. Such writers as R. Wright Campbell, who was nominated this year as co-writer on Universal's "Man of a Thousand Faces," are being lined up, he said. Campbell, who already has completed two scripts for outfit, is in on a participation deal.

A First Report On

(Reading Time ... 53 Seconds)

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION
711 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

OFFICE OF
VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. Abe Schneider
Studio

Dear Abe:

I returned this morning from a flying weekend in London and the screening of Carl Foreman's first rough cut of THE KEY. Carl and Carol Reed say they have the film down now to 2 hours and 8 minutes. I can't prove it; it seemed like 20 minutes to me. I saw it without music, without sound effects, without dubbing - and it just shattered me!

The sea shots, the convoy battles, the love scenes - there isn't a false note anywhere. Carl's writing is, I think, of almost classic stature. You believe his people; you hurt with them; you're warm when they are, cold when they are - and afraid when they are. The impact of the picture lasts too. I found myself still moved, still absorbed, still thinking about it when I woke up the next morning.

I must tell you about Sophia Loren. In this picture, she really gets out of the sex-pot bit and becomes an actress. (A sexy actress, to be sure - but honest to goodness, an actress!) Bill Holden is unbelievably good; you don't realize just how good until after the picture is over and you suddenly know that his restraint and simplicity held everything together. Trevor Howard comes off like a firecracker. I can see why Zanuck gave him the lead in that African picture they are shooting.

I had brought the ads over to discuss with Carl and he is as enthusiastic about our campaign and plans as I am. He will be in New York around May 1st with the finished print and will be set for our July release. He, of course, sends his best to you and all the boys at the studio.

Abe, I don't push in my stack on many pictures, as you know. There are lots of good pictures in the market today - but still only a couple of great ones. We are very fortunate. THE BRIDGE ON THE RIVER KWAI is one of the great ones. THE KEY is another.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely,

PAUL N. LAZARUS, JR.

Frisco Forum's Faith In Trust Fund; Rue Unwanted Results of Divorce

San Francisco, April 1.

Theatre Owners of America "conventionette" and meeting of directors and executive committee struck generally upbeat note last week in sessions highlighted by:

(1) Full-speed-ahead authorization of TOA plan to acquire post-'48 films;

(2) Reaffirmation of policy to do everything possible to arrange for divorced circuits to produce and release films so that those circuits can show product in their own theatres;

(3) Enthusiastic reception of Howard Jameyson's plan to set up a motion picture investment fund.

As could be expected, there was some grumbling among the 200 exhibitors present that there isn't enough quality product coming out of Hollywood. Sumner Redstone, of Boston, and John Matlock, of Pendleton, Ore., for instance, felt producers' number-one sin was in cutting production, thus forcing shutdown of many theatres. Said Redstone, in discussing divorcement:

"Once the producers of pictures lost their houses they cut down on production to such an extent that pretty soon there weren't enough pictures on the market to keep exhibitors busy . . . The court decree was aimed at protecting the little theatre owners. But it worked in reverse. Now the theatre owners need protection from their protection."

This is par for the course at any gathering of exhibitors.

More unusual was the unanimous endorsement of TOA President Ernest G. Stellings' plan to organize a tax-exempt, non-profit trust to purchase all post-'48 films distributors want to sell.

Backs Circuit Prod.

Reaffirmation of policy that TOA will do all it can to arrange for divorced circuits to go into production came amidst rumors that the Justice Department had rejected TOA's latest pitch for the divorced circuits.

Stellings remarked: "The need for additional product is still acute. Some of that needed product can and should come from former affiliated circuits, some of which have expressed willingness and ability to produce and distribute."

Stellings got a nice hand for his speech to the conventionette—aimed primarily at drivein operators—when he summarized recent TOA accomplishments, including:

(1) Business Building Campaign is "rolling";

(2) Forestalling toll-tv;

(3) Agreement on orderly flow of product;

(4) New appeals to the Small Business Administration to loosen reins on loans to hardtop operators and allow drivein operators loans.

This was pretty much a rehash of what Stellings had told his directors and executive committee at the week's start. Biggest enthusiasm went to Jameyson, board chairman of Commonwealth Theatres, when he discussed his proposal for a motion picture investment fund.

Jameyson pointed out interdependence of production and exhibition branches of industry, noted that "distribution has a voice (in exhibition) . . . in establishing its terms . . ." On the other hand, he said: "Exhibition has been ineffectual . . . we have had absolutely no machinery to make our voices heard or heeded in the councils of distribution. Never was our impotence more clearly revealed than in the sale of old films to television."

Motivational Research

Jameyson said he couldn't blame such "shrewd and able showmen" as Mr. Warner, Mr. Balaban, Mr. Skouras or Mr. Vogel" for the sales to tv. Rather, he blamed:

Republic "and that unpredictable man, Howard Hughes";

"Directors (who) wondered why their company didn't hop aboard the gravy train";

"Pressure . . . in companies where ready cash was desired or needed";

"There might have been liquidators—financial vultures—present."

On this last point Jameyson remarked: "It is no secret that there are stockholders in both Loew's and Universal advocating liquidation."

Jameyson unleased an attack on television as "a modern, gigantic adaptation of the old medicine show, using entertainment only as a comeon . . . its voracious appetite is so great that it will in a matter of months chew up everything Hollywood produced over a period of nearly 20 years."

But he pointed out: "We have no right to complain if television, depending upon its own resources, competes with us for popular favor. On that basis, we can meet it, match it . . . but we can't beat it if it's permitted to be a parasite on our industry . . ."

And he added that "a five seven or eight-year clearance over television is like saying we prefer a long, lingering death to a sudden one."

Jameyson was interrupted by applause several times and received a long ovation at the end of his speech. Afterward, when he asked for questions, there was only one:

"When will the stock be available?"

Presiding at the conventionette sessions were cochairmen Abe Blumenfield and Roy Cooper. Panel discussions centered on drivein promotion and ways to promote take from concessions, and panel discussion leaders included Redstone, Harold Field of Minnesota's Pioneer Theatres, Lippert Circuit's Edward Stokes, Westland Circuit's Rotus Harvey and Wehrenberg Theatres' Paul Krueger.

'Tomboys' in Ballet

you as something else, it's terribly wrong and it disqualifies you.

"Dancing-wise," Eglevsky pointed out, "a man has his own steps and a woman has different steps. A man needs masculinity, more force, more power and he jumps more."

"We in America don't take ballet seriously enough and don't take children from the proper age," he said. "We don't have serious schooling. There should be a school established by the Government. In the United States there is a hesitancy about ballet. 'What is it?' the boy will ask.

"In Russia a promising boy is brought to ballet school and given a complete education. Once he is accepted in the school, his economic worries are over," Eglevsky cited. "He will be raised and given a job whether or not he becomes a performer."

Eglevsky recalled a tour he made to America in 1934 with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. When they played St. Louis, he remembered, "I came out in tights and they booed and laughed. It was a relatively young art in America."

Now he believes that American audiences are quite mature. He attributes the acceptance of ballet in the U. S. to the widespread airing it received during World War II when entertainment was scarce and "the movies were full" and to tv exposure although he also called the latter a potential "menace" because people see "fill-in movements and call it ballet."

Eglevsky is now 40. He thinks at 45 he will perform his last and "If I do a bad season before that, I'll quit."

B&K RIDES WINNER

On Tail of Oscarcast It Air Blurbs 'Kwai'

Chicago, April 1.

With seeming prescience, Balaban & Katz circuit tv-blurbed Columbia's "Bridge on River Kwai" at immediate close of last week's Oscarcast. Lettering was superimposed on an Oscar image, giving impression circuit had immense faith in "Kwai" or a very clear crystal ball. Pic, of course, was a cinch to be kudosed in at least one of the categories for which it was nominated, so B&K hardly was gambling with the Oscar motif.

"Kwai," current at State-Lake, was pitched in a 20-second spot, followed by a 10-second spot for the soon-due "Young Lions." B&K bought the post-show spot time to prevent possibility of a deodorant or other non-entertainment message from taking the edge off the industry's spectacular. Move was duplicated by other circuits around the country.

Only 11 films in entire roster of wins were repped this year in all categories. Of these, only the two leaders snagged more than one award. Number of Oscars was decreased, too, this year by cutbacks in awards in certain categories, such as writing, music, short subjects, and certain technical brackets, previously divided between color and black-and-white.

larity and expense" of records and record players which were clearly responsible for keeping out of the theatres a great many in those age groups to which cinemas particularly look for their patrons.

While the outlook for theatres might be cheerless he suspected that the fortunes of producers might not be quite so seriously menaced. Of course, they were concerned at the heartbreak of little independent exhibs whose life savings were in jeopardy and they were worried by the risk of unemployment in the exhibition industry.

Not Dependent on Domestic Mkts.

Fortunately, the production side of the industry was not wholly dependent on domestic outlets. It had an export market and he paid tribute to the "tremendous drive and energy" which some producers, particularly the Rank Organization, had recently been putting into selling British films overseas.

The government spokesman opined there was nothing much the government could or should do to attempt to influence the public to attend cinemas if it did not want to. The cinema market would have to find its natural size and that size might be a good deal smaller than at present.

Lord Mancroft had this to say about quality in production. "If British films are to be made on the cheap side, they will begin to look cheap: and if the stars are not given the rate for the job, they may go elsewhere to get it. The days of a surefeit of mink and magnificence may be passing but we must remember that the people who put up the finance for films feel more assured of the safety of their money if the film commands a star-spangled cast. The late and much-lamented Mike Todd offered good proof of that."

Lord Mancroft refused to be drawn out on the subject of admission tax, nor would he comment on the upcoming quota legislation. He did, however, note that the government was very conscious of the importance of the stautory levy to producers and remembered its obligations in the 1957 Act.

Lord Lucas Warns Govt.

The debate was opened by Lord Lucas, who warned the government that unless some first aid was given, the motion picture industy would cease to exist. The government was bludgeoning the industry to death with a tax it had been forced to withdraw from every other form of entertainment. In the past 10 years, admissions had dropped by about 40%, and in the same period about 700 theatres had shuttered. Unless the tax was abolished, at least another thousand would be forced to close. And he pointed out that the production side of the industry needed a domestic market of at least 3,500 cinemas.

Lord Lucas reckoned there was never such a time for the British industry to increase its exports and make a dent in the American market. But it could never get into good shape without a virile home market and there could not be a virile market while it was saddled with the entertainment tax. If British production went out, would American production come in? he asked. Already 60% of the screen time went to the Americans for films "which were of very poor quality." The Yank industry was panic stricken and was trying to beat tv by being more vulgar.

Lord Westwood, a north-country exhib, said the industry was in a very critical condition, and that unless the tax was abolished it would collapse. Lord Archibald, president of the Federation of British Film Makers, said the industry was not asking for a subsidy but only wanted a chance to fight for its interests against new forms of entertainment. The only hope to give producers was to abolish the tax.

current product and the other revolves around the character of the program, which ran smoothly enough, but was hardly an "inspired" show.

"As long as people can see all those glamor personalities, and in closeup, that's all they want," opined one executive. Others disagree, holding future Academy shows should reflect more showmanship; which in turn raises the question of whether the Oscar ceremonies are put on for tv (in which case their handling was something less than inspired) or whether they are an industry affair which audiences are privileged to watch (via tv).

In the past, when there was a question of whether the technical awards belonged on the telecast part of the proceedings, the Academy has taken the position that it was the tv audience that had adjusted itself to the ceremonies, not the ceremonies to the audience. But others maintain that, the minute the tv cameras are admitted, the Academy and the industry have a certain obligation to create a show that pleases in tv terms.

Gould touched on that point when he noted that much of the show was monotonous and "taken up with subsidiary awards that carried little public interest.' It was mystifying, he wrote, that the film biz "did not use any of the costly network air time to promote its own endeavors. Instead it borrowed snatches of production ideas from a half a dozen tv shows, used personalities who are on video rather regularly and made no effort to entice a set-owners back to a motion picture house."

There was a measure of agreement in the industry that part of the time wasted on the Donald Duck spoofing of film classics could have been used to better advantage via a subtle plug for the current films, perhaps via the screening of clips and scenes from nominated pictures. Others felt strongly that "a plug is a plug" and it would have been out of tune with the institutional character of the show.

Some of the film people countered the tv critics' negative appraisals with the argument that the Academy show wasn't meant to be an entertainment tv spectacle and couldn't be judged on that level. They were gratified at the identification of the show as a film industry endeavor and took the position that it fulfilled its purpose by pretending to be no more than what it was meant to be, i.e., the honoring of the industry's top technical and creative talent by the industry itself.

California's Knowland Puts Oscar in Record

International penetration of the American film industry was emphasized this week (31) when Sen. William P. Knowland (Rep., Cal.) read into the Congressional Record a statement praising Hollywood's Academy Awards telecast.

Noting that the industry had put up the money to stage and televise the program, and that artists and musicians had given their services, Knowland said Hollywood was deserving of "a hearty accolade" for the telecast.

He also said that it was to the credit of exhibitors that they urged their patrons to stay home and watch the show. He cited the fact that the winning picture ("Bridge on the River Kwai") was made in Ceylon, that the best actor award went to an Englishman and the best supporting actress Oscar to a Japanese girl, as proof of the widened international aspects of the film biz.

off because of its because of its "improper" nature. He was voted down by Yates, he walked out, and the meeting went on.

At another point, or rather, several points, stockholder Martha Brand took to the floor with an attack. It was "beyond her comprehension," she said, that "all the directors do is vote themselves back into office." And what's more since "management doesn't have the imagination or brains to continue they ought to give thought to liquidation."

Meeting was further marked by clashes between Yates and Reader concerning the imparting of information about the company's affairs. Each accused the other of "not telling the truth."

ALLIED ARTISTS EXEC CLOSES FOR JAPAN

Tokyo, March 25.

Allied Artists exec Norton V. Ritchey, here for his first visit in nine years, said that although the American film industry is at a crossroads, AA is in good shape because of its close business relationships with foreign distribs, thereby keeping overhead down. He said it was a big plus for AA to have Eihai as Japan distributor.

Eihai will import eight AA film in fiscal 1958 including five on AA licenses. Ritchey said he had no plans to buy a Japanese picture at this time.

Cohan Just Made It

George M. Cohan also, almost, didn't get to see "Yankee Doodle Dandy," considered to this day one of the best biopix in the show biz personality cycle, but he recovered sufficiently well to attend a special screening in the Warner Bros. homeoffice. For a time, it appeared as if Jake Wilk, then eastern studio rep for WB, and Cohan's attorneys (O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery), would have to go through with a proposed bedside preview. Incidentally, after the initial footage, when Cohan seemed lacklustre about "Doodle" — his grim experiences in Hollywood forever chilled him against the community — he suddenly sparked as he saw James Cagney, as Cohan, do a faithful takeoff of the titular hero's song-and-dance style. When Sam Forrest, Cohan's lifetime friend, applauded involuntarily at that screening, the ice was broken. (Cohan's spleen included an indelicate situation when some inept novice aide at the Paramount studio asked Cohan to fill out a bio card with "all your credits." Cohan, at the peak of his career, had been lured from a rich Broadway career to the film capital after considerable difficulty and with many blandishments, the least of which was any monetary phase, so he never got over the Par aide's brash request for and surprise that Cohan's "screen credits" were nil.)

Yonkers Preem Off

When Handy was removed from his Yonkers (N. Y.) home to Manhattan's Sydenham Hospital, his wife felt that, regardless of events, the distinguished American songsmith would like the dinner and press preview at Brandt's Yonkers, scheduled for tonight (Wed.), to go through regardless. After being on, it is now off-again, but Par will go through with the scheduled "world premiere" in April 10 at the Fox, St. Louis.

Radio and television, the former particularly indebted to Handy, who within the aural sphere was the especial pride of the disk jockey fraternity, were quick to latch on to the postmortems. Aside from the alert, nostalgic news stanzas, there were a couple of vivid segments. On Saturday (29) NBC's "Monitor" reprised an interview it made with the composer, which may have been the last for such purposes; night before, Ed Murrow on his CBS-TV "Person to Person" chatting with gospel singer Mahalia Jackson, broke into a memory bit on Handy, with Miss Jackson joining in, and remarked that the show was proud to have had the cleffer as one of his guests. That was in June, 1955.

DRIVE-IN SUES 20TH-FOX

Also Names Interstate Circuit For Low Release Status

Houston, April 1.

Mitchmore-Neves Amus. Co., operators of the Market Street Drive-In Theatre here, has filed a $17,100 antitrust suit against 20th Century-Fox, alleging that the distributor and Interstate Theatre Circuit, have refused the drive-in all but third, and later, run films.

Its competitors unfairly obtain first and suburban run status.

JACK FROST NIPPED OZONERS BADLY BUT OUTLOOK NOW CHEERS OPERATORS

Having experienced one of the most disastrous winter periods in years, the nation's drive-in theatres are hopeful of a business turnabout with the opening of the official outdoor theatre season. Ozoners particularly those in the east and midwest that remained open during the cold months, suffered an 18% to 25% drop in trade. Despite the provision of in-car heaters for the customers, the frequency of the snow storms had a damaging effect on business. Even southern and southwestern situations, which operate all-year round, experienced a downbeat because of cold spells.

Between now and the end of April, the majority of the nation's 5,000 odd drive-ins will open for the spring and summer season. For the past few months, the ozoner operators have been busy sprucing up their properties in anticipation of the public's clamor for al fresco film viewing. The winter operators, bogged down by the Oct. 1 to March 1 doldrums, are looking forward to the warm weather so that they can recover their losses. All that the outdoor theatre men ask for is a break in the weather, particularly in the early part of April so that they can build up the impetus which is essential for drive-in trade.

Drive-ins which in the past have been able to buck the general downtrend in film business are now essentially in the same position as conventional theatres. With more and more ozoners springing up each year and with certain territories practically saturated, the ozoner operators have noticed that attendance is decreasing. As a whole, it's estimated that drive-in attendance is down 3 to 5%. The tax relief recently enjoyed being wiped out by the high cost of pictures and increasing operational expenses.

Although several new drive-ins will be opened this year, the construction pace of a few years ago has been materially slowed down. Some observers believe that the peak in drive-in building has been reached, especially in areas surrounding large cities. Point is made that there are just so many good locations and the majority of them have been taken by now. There's still some room for drive-ins in rural areas, but nobody expects a repetition of the hectic construction program of four and five years ago.

Especially encouraging to the drive-in operators is the heavy backlog of top product that will be available to their situations. Everything looks promising for a good season. However, the success or failure of the new season depends on an uncontrolable element—the weather.

CUT 'PARADISE' SHOWS

After Easter 10-A-Week Down To Five

Dallas, April 1.

Melba Theatre will launch a new policy of five shows a week, starting the week after Easter, for the current Cinerama Lowell Thomas-produced adventure, "Search for Paradise." Present schedule of 10 shows weekly will be followed through Easter Sunday, April 6.

Then the theatre will be closed each week from Monday through Thursday. The new schedule calls for shows each Friday and Saturday nights at 8:30 p.m. matinee for Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m. and Sunday evenings at 7:30 p.m.

No definite plans have been made as to how long the reduced show policy will be followed. The box office will be open each day as usual to accept reservations at all times for the weekend showings.

Fewer & Better Theatres Map Of Future: Goldenson

The public will respond in great numbers to good motion picture entertainment; fewer but better theatres are called for.

This was stated by Leonard H. Goldenson, president of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, in the corporation's annual report to stockholders this week. The public has become greatly selective and the accent in production is on quality. In the light of this situation it's a must that theatres provide the maximum in comfort and convenience.

AB-PT, said the report, is pursuing this objective and at the same time will continue to drop film houses which operate on a marginal or uneconomic basis. Circuit at the end of 1957 comprised 537 theatres, 276 of them owned in fee and 261 held on lease.

Theatre business during the first nine months of 1957 compared favorably with the corresponding period of 1956, Goldenson reported; but declined during the fourth quarter of last year because of the Asian flu epidemic plus the lack of boxoffice pictures. On the upbeat side were the good business results which began in January with a number of pictures.

Chief exec, commenting on the company's film-making subsidiary, said that as experience is gained pictures with greater production and star values will be considered. This unit was formed late in 1956 and has been turning out mainly exploitation-type features on small budgets.

As for the broadcasting end, Goldenson told investors that with the start of the 1957-58 season last fall ABC showed "fine improvement," attaining the largest percentage increase in gross time billings of all networks. As a result of better network programming and stronger local and public service shows the owned-and-operated tv stations have been scoring "fine progress and improved profits."

Network radio was adversely hit by the changing listening habits with the emphasis on local programming, and efforts have been made to overcome the trend with changes in the operation, including a full schedule of information programs and hourly newscasts going to all sections of the country.

AB-PT's gross hit a new high of $215,877,000 in 1957, compared with $206,916,000 the year before. However the net profit fell from $8,477,000, or $1.96 per share, in 1956 to $4,894,000, or $1.10 per share, in 1957.

At the end of 1957, company had working caiptal of $45,848,000, and a net worth of $83,718,000. Net fixed assets were carried at $69,917,000 and long term debt at $52,209,000.

REDSTONE OF BOSTON BUYS PHILLY OZONER

Philadelphia, April 1.

Redstone Drive-in Theatres Co. of Boston has acquired the 1,400-car South City Drive-in Theatre from a corporation headed by Charles Goldfine. Completed in 1951, the ozoner is adjacent to Philly's Municipal Stadium.

Redstone outfit, which also operates the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge Drive-in Theatre in North Philly, plans extensive refurbishments for the South City outdoorer. Purchase was consummated through Berk & Krumgold, theatre brokers. Price was undisclosed.

Week-End Only Fate Awaits Many Houses: Wm. Volk

By LES REES

Minneapolis, April 1.

Even the non-marginal top subsequent-run and small-town theatres likely to survive mounting exhibition handicaps face the prospect of operating on a part-time basis, probably frequently on weekends only.

This is the opinion of William Volk two of whose co-owned local neighborhood theatres, the Terrace and Riverview, are considered among the finest and still most profitable anywhere.

It's because even houses like the Terrace and Riverview seldom are able to hold a big picture for more than a week and, for the most part, require two changes every seven days, and the trend of Hollywood production is in the direction of fewer but bigger pictures—a trend that Volk believes will gain momentum.

This means that there will be fewer and fewer "suitable" pictures available for the de luxe small-town and subsequent-run houses until the stage is reached where they'll not have enough product to operate the year around, as at present, he points out.

Like many others in the industry, Volk foresees the not too far time when the ordinary program picture will bow out entirely or almost so, but under any circumstances such high-class theatres as his Terrace and Riverview would suffer prestigewise by presenting much of such fare and could not do so without monetary loss, he says.

"It's gradually resolving itself into a policy of our only playing those pictures that have proved their boxoffice value during their first-runs or that might have grossed disappointingly downtown, but which we believe we could make to click in our particular neighborhoods," says Volk.

Paradoxically, Volk points out, the local clearance setup operates to curtail the runs of such pictures as "Sayonara" and "Peyton Place," for example, to a single week in the uptown theatres in the earliest clearance slot, 28 days, even though grosses warranted a longer run.

That's because seven days later—in 35 days—these pictures become available for another group of theatres that could show them at a lower admission, but even if they charged the same there'd be too many outlying theatres playing the same attraction day and date, he explains.

Scarsdale Gets Arter

Robert Furman and Meyer Ackerman have taken over the Plaza Theatre in Scarsdale, N. Y., on a longterm lease and will operate it as an art house. Theatre seats 1,200.

Artie will be airconditioned and completely renovated. Berk and Krumgold negotiated the deal. Furman and Ackerman operate a number of art situations in and around New York.

What Drew Many Would-Be Crashers?

[To Loew's State, Times Square]

Officials of Loew's State Theatre on Broadway, lone Main Stem house to carry the Ray Robinson-Carmen Basilio fight telecast last week, are still wondering what it was about the attraction that drew so many phonies and attempted gate crashers. Individuals armed with alleged press cards, police cards and all sorts of mysterious identification cards tried unsuccessfully to get into the SRO house.

On numerous occasions theatre officials were called out by the doorman to confront people who sought professional courtesy because they were ex-fighters, European actors, newspapermen or a friend of a friend.

The State was sold out at 8 p.m. although the telecast did not start until 11 p.m. Crowds surged around the theatre attempting to buy tickets at scalpers' prices. The audience in the theatre was, for the most part, well behaved. They reacted as if they were at the actual event. They cheered, applauded, booed and laughed. The remarks of Bill Corum, N.Y. Journal American sports columnist who did the commentary, frequently resulted in bursts of laughter. Corum insisted on calling Basilio "Tony Zale." Corum introduced Jim Norris, president of the International Boxing Club, who thanked Teleprompter and its president Irving Kahn for the manner in which it handled the telecast. However, Norris referred to Kahn as "Irving Cohen."

Although the customers at the State entered the spirit of the fight, they were far from satisfied with the quality of the picture. The image was frequently black and it resembled a photo negative. There were cries of "light, light" every time the image got darker.

There was some confusion as to whether or not one could or could not smoke in the orchestra. The ushers, who appeared to congregate in bunches, warned the spectators not to smoke. Then an assistant manager came by and said it was okay. A few minutes later an usher reappeared with a warning to douse the smoke. The theatre was overrun with firemen.

One thing was certain. It was a fight crowd and not a film crowd that jammed the theatre.

Berger's Plenty Of Nuttin' From D. of J. Re '10 C's'

Minneapolis, April 1.

Admitting defeat finally, circuit owner Bennie Berger says, the Dept. of Justice in effect has rejected his request that it compel Paramount to sell "The Ten Commandments" to his Fergus Falls, Minn., theatre on "a fair and equitable basis" and "is permitting the distributor to flaunt fair dealing."

Accordingly, says Berger, after being advised by Paramount that the DeMille smash would cost him 80c for every ticket sold by his Fergus Falls theatre, he's passing up the picture.

"The Dept. of Justice is satisfied with the Paramount deal despite the fact that it actually amounts to dictating the admission price and therefore is illegal," charges Berger. "We'll explain to the Fergus Falls people who have been demanding the picture why we're unable to show it."

Charging "illegal action" and "discrimination" against Paramount, Berger appealed to the D. of J. to force it to sell "Commandments" to the Fergus Falls theatre without "dictation" as to the admission price that would be charged or, in lieu of that, giving a $2,750 guarantee "which was impossible, just as the 80c per admission is."

After he had accepted the Paramount "Commandments" percentage deal for Fergus Falls, Berger claims, he was requested to specify the advanced admission he would charge and when he refused to do so he was told he only could have the picture for the guarantee.

Inasmuch as no other "Commandments" deal in this territory called for a guarantee Berger charged this was "discriminatory." He also claimed that the demand he state in advance the advanced admission was "tantamount to dictating it." The D. of J., however, apparently is satisfied that Paramount is acting within its rights, Berger now concedes.

Nabes 'Exclusive' On Fight Reels, Post-TV Cable

Minneapolis, April 1.

Important fight pictures, those of the Robinson-Basilio bout, for the first time here are having their initial local showing at uptown subsequent-run houses instead of in a downtown firstrun.

They were sold by distributor United Artists through negotiation to the Volk brothers for their four local neighborhood houses where they're currently showing them "exclusively" day and date as an added attraction. In St. Paul they've gone to the independent downtown firstrun Strand.

Last week's fight telecast drew capacity business at the local 4,100-seat Radio City and 2,300-seat St. Paul Paramount at $5.50 top.

Harling's Latest Blast At All 'Pay' Feeds

Hot Springs, Ark., April 1.

Philip F. Harling, chairman of Theatre Owners of America's toll-tv committee, renewed his campaign for exhibitor unity in combatting all forms of toll-tv, the cable variety as well as the broadcast type. In an address before the Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas here yesterday (Mon.), he once again urged Allied States Assn. to pick up the fight against cable-tv.

Allied, although it has supported the drive against broadcast pay-tv, has so far remained silent in combatting cable-tv. It's believed that some Allied toppers are opposed to taking a position against the wire system. However, Allied so far has not come out with an explanation.

Harling recommended an immediate letter campaign to Congress to secure passage of any of the 17 bills now pending which would bar the use of the airwaves for pay-tv. He warned that the toll-tv proponents would continue their efforts to secure authorization from the Federal Communications Commission for use of the airwaves as the most economical way of transmitting their programs, and that failing to secure FCC approval they would concentrate on localized cable-tv franchises.

Frank Montgomery is new manager of East 70 Drive-In Theatre near Burlington, N. C., succeeds Floyd Gainous, who has left to assume managership of a theatre in High Point.

Yen Lowdown on Toll Bout

Scorecard on every detail of the closed-circuit theatrecast of the Robinson-Basilio fight of last Tues. (25) is much in demand by proponents of tollvision. The angle is the obvious one, they wanting to be in the know on the economics of such a special event for a pay-as-you-see audience.

Particularly intriguing to the home toll advocates is the number of individuals willing to shell out the top coin for a boxing match, such as at the Loew's State Theatre, New York, where the top price was $7.50, plus the extent to which residents of small towns will "buy" such programming.

Community response perhaps is the most immediate concern for an outfit such as the Paramount-controlled International Telemeter, which is now veering toward an operation, at least at the start, on a limited-size-area basis, where the overhead would not be prohibitive.

Predicts A $40-Mil 'Potential'; Spot-Checks on TV Boxing Fans

Boston, April 2.

Some 10,000 fight fans paid $40,000 to see the theatre-tv fight of Robinson-Basilio here at the State, Orpheum and Pilgrim and at the Seville in East Boston. The price was $3.50 a ticket at the State and Orpheum, $4.40 reserved at the Pilgrim, $3.50 rush; and $4 and $3.30 in E. Boston.

All four houses were sold out. The Pilgrim Theatre screen went black in the 15th round and fans booed and yelled. Harold Kaese, sports writer of the Boston Globe, said: "The picture I saw at Loew's Orpheum was more fuzzy than a picture on a home screen, but it was good enough—much better than a seat in a distant row. Everyone got his money's worth."

Event primed predictions from fight promoters that with pay-see in homes, a fight like the Robinson-Basilio go could make $40 million.

Sam Silverman, Boston pugilistic promoter, predicted that fights have a rosy future at parlor box-office. "Seven or eight years from now, when there's pay tv in the homes, a fight like that will make $40 million," he said. "Each fighter will make $12,000,000. It's the coming thing."

Kaese had this to say of Bill Corum's work: "If some of Bill Corum's inanities were irritating, others were unintentionally amusing. ('It's pretty rough in there, boys')".

At Loew's State and Orpheum, the pictures were pulled for the night. At the Pilgrim and the Seville, pictures were shown preceding the fight. Technical reception was excellent, James Tibbetts, mgr. Loew's Orpheum, reported.

The fight fans whooped and hollered, shouted and screamed and carried on as if they were at the real thing. All seem pleased with the fare offered.

Basilio Fans Crowd Atlanta

Atlanta, April 1.

Loew's Grand Theatre filled up its 2,040 seats and racked up $6,200 for the Carmen Basilio-Sugar Ray Robinson championship bout via theatre television. Fight went on at 11 p.m. It was a Basilio (i.e. the white man) crowd, so they had little to cheer about after Robinson closed the champ's eye in fifth round. Seats in loges cost $5, rest went for $3.50.

Both newspapers (p.m. Journal and a.m. Constitution) covered scrap with reporters at Grand.

Corum Hooted in Omaha

A turnout of 2,400 paid $5,800 to watch the Sugar Ray Robinson-Carmen Basilio title bout last Tuesday (25) at the 2,980-seat Orpheum, which is about 500 more than the average crowd for a closed-circuit tv scrap at the house. Scale was $4.40 for reserves and $3 for general admish.

Technical reception was excellent and crowd comment was generally "best I've ever seen." However, the fans hooted commentator Bill Corum frequently.

Two fights occurred prior to the tv proceedings, but Manager Don Shane and local gendarmes intervened before many blows landed. The verdict favoring Robinson was accepted calmly—except for a razzberry reaction to Referee Frank Sikora's card, which gave the edge to Basilio.

Technical Sweats in K. C.

Kansas City, April 1.

Big screen telecast of the Robinson-Basilio fight at the Midland Theatre came off as planned, although management and technicians had a shaky 36-hours before getting the equipment in shape. It looked at one time as if the equipment would not come through, and a portable substitute unit was rushed in. Shortly before doors were opened to the fight crowd, the gadget came around and served without faltering.

Turn out of more than 2,200 bettered that for the previous telecast by about 20%, and the gross at $3.85 per head was consequently better at $7,400. That's considered good here, although the theatre can take care of 3,500.

Concensus appeared to be that technically the previous fight (via TNT) was a better job, as this one (Teleprompter) showed some shading of the screen down the left side throughout. Nevertheless, it again proved to be a choice way in which to watch a championship bout, as fans readily agreed.

Crowd began gathering at 8 p.m. and was, indeed, restless at fight time. They indicated general approval of the decision to Robinson.

Standing Room in Denver

Denver, April 1.

With Paramount Theatre here sold out to standing room only, arrangements were made also to show televised Basilio-Robinson fight at neighborhood Tower.

Adding 2,200 seats at Paramount and 1,000 at Tower plus standing room to limti allowed by police, gross per fight here runs well over $10,000.

Big Puller in Detroit

Detroit, April 1.

Four Detroit theatres having a combined capacity of 12,460 seats filled nearly everyone of them with boxing fans for the Sugar Ray Robinson - Carmen Basilio big screen tv fight pix Tuesday (25) for a total gross of about $42,500.

Picture quality here was excellent generally. Only difficulty reported occurred at the Michigan where the feed broke during the fifth and sixth rounds. Trouble was quickly corrected and the fans lost little of the action.

Houses, their seating capacities and grosses were: Michigan, 4,100, $14,350; Hollywood, 3,400, $11,200; Palms, 2,961, $10,450, and Eastown, 2,000, $6,600. Prices were scaled up to $3.85 at the Michigan and Palms, to $3.65 at the other two houses.

2 Balto Houses: $12,500

Baltimore, April 1.

Boxoffice results of Robinson-Basilio fight were as follows:

Stanley (about ¾ full)	$8,500
Century (about ½ full)	4,000
Total	$12,500

Technical reception was generally described as "very good."

Scaled to $4.40 in Dallas

Dallas, April 1.

Local promoter Ralph Smith had a paid b.o. of "about $10,000" from 2,750 fight fans at State Fair Music Hall Tuesday (25), only local closed circuit outlet for the middleweight championship bout between Carmen Basilio and Ray Robinson.

Smith scaled his prices to $4.40 top, but added three live bouts to the program.

Minneapolis Near-Capacity

Minneapolis, April 1.

At $5.50 top the Robinson-Basilio fight telecast pulled virtual capacity at both the 4,100-seat Radio City here and the 2,300-seat St. Paul Paramount, grossing $14,000 at the former and $8,000 at the latter. Telecast came through well and audiences waxed enthusiastic throughout. Take set a new high record for any similar attraction at Radio City which has carried all closed circuit bouts.

Grosses for the first Robinson-Basilio fight telecast in the Twin Cities were $10,000 and $6,000 for Radio City and the Paramount, respectively.

BOUT ESTIMATED $330,000 TO CLUB; TELEPROMPTER PROFIT ABOUT $300,000

By HY HOLLINGER

That closed-circuit television, fortified with a topnotch sports attraction, can draw customers to theatres and arenas was again demonstrated last week. The Ray Robinson-Carmen Basilio middleweight championship fight, handled by the Teleprompter Corp. for the International Boxing Club, grossed an estimated $1,400,000 in 174 locations with an available seating capacity of about 500,000 in 140 cities.

Sellout and near sellouts were reported in the normally good fight cities, but as a whole it's figured that the attraction drew approximately 75% of capacity as compared with 57% for the previous Robinson-Basilio encounter last September. Theatre circuits which booked the attraction expressed satisfaction with the results. The SRO in the big centers made up for the spotty attendance in some of the smaller communities and in areas where either the recession and/or bad weather cut into the take. Overall attendance was set at 364,876 by Teleprompter. Take and split received by the IBC is regarded as a record for the medium.

The attraction did particularly well in the New York metropolitan area where the Loew's and RKO theatres reported sellouts or virtual capacity in all situations. Loew's sold out at the State on Broadway, where tickets went for $5 and $7.50, and at its theatres in other parts of the city—Victoria, National, Sheridan, Oriental and Valencia—which charged $4 to $5. RKO reported sellouts or virtual capacity at its N. Y. situations.

The RKO 86th St. was completely sold out before fight time and when the sale appeared slow at the RKO Madison in Brook'yn, RKO offered 250 Madison seats for sale at the 86th St. Theatre. These tickets were immediately gobbled up and the fight fans trekked to Brooklyn to see the telecast.

Sellouts or near sellouts were reported in such cities as Boston, New Orleans, Toronto, L. A. and Denver. One of the soft spots was Richmond, Va., where only 30% of capacity was sold. Kansas City sold only 54% while Washington and Atlanta went for 95%, Buffalo, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh 90%, Cleve'and 80%, New Haven 85%, St. Louis 75%. Sellout crowds in seven theatres in Los Angeles, contributed a total take of $69,500. Theatres in San Francisco sold out, too, although faced with competition from the Cow Palace where live bouts were staged prior to the telecast.

In addition to the Cow Palace, local fight promoters who were given the rights to the telecast in certain territories, staged preliminary bouts in arenas in Rochester, Syracuse, Louisville and Houston. According to Irving Kahn, president of Teleprompter, the results in theatres showed that theatres and arenas can operate side by side in the presentation of fight telecasts.

In a breakdown of the overall gross of $1,400,000 which was split 50-50 with exhibitors, its figured that the IBC, which was guaranteed a minimum of $275,000, received a total of about $330,000. Tele-Prompter, it's estimated, emerged with a profit of about $250 000 to $300,000. Ned Irish, exec v.p. of the IBC, said it was the best gate yet for a closed-tv fight, with the IBC getting $60,000 to 570,000 more than for the previous Robinson-Basilio bout.

For the most part, viewers watching the telecast in theatres and arenas reacted as if they were watching a live bout. However, there was some annoyance about the quality of the picture. Sports writers who witnessed the bout in theatres commented on the darkness of the picture. At Loew's State in N. Y., there were frequent cries of "more light" from the audience.

Teleprompter had equipment breakdowns in Grand Rapids, Mich., Orlando, Fla., and Norfo'k, Va. Money had to be refunded at all three situations. Loew's Theatres, which did sock business at most of its conventional houses, drew less than 500 cars at its 1,400-car drive-in at Keyport, N. J.

Negro House Does $5,500

Washington, April 1.

Robinson - Basilio championship bout packed three houses to capacity. Loew's Capitol and RKO Keith's reported s.r.o., with house scaled at $3.50 and $4. The 3,434 seat Capitol chalked up a massive $14,000 for the televised fights, and Keith's, though it would not report exact figure, could have grossed about $7,000 at capacity.

Lincoln, 1,400-seat house in the District Theatre chain of Negro nabes, did a capacity $5,500 at single scale of $3.50.

Good Score For Stanley

Philadelphia, April 1.

Approximately 8,800 Philadelphians viewed the Robinson-Basilio championship fight telecast in three Stanley Warner film houses. The Stanley (2,900) played to standees. The 4,300-seat Mastbaum, and the 1,800-seat Broadway were both about 100 below capacity.

In two other SW theatres—Stanley (Camden, N. J.) and Stanley (Chester, Pa.) close to 4,000 more patrons watched the bout.

2,500 at $3.50

Des Moines, April 1.

There were 2,500 fans at the Basilio-Robinson bout in closed-circuit television at KRNT Theatre here. All tickets were reserved at $3.50 and technical reception was excellent for the entire showing.

Gross presumably around $8,700.

Downtowners Sell Out

Pittsburgh, April 1.

Three downtown theatres, Harris, Penn and Stanley, representing a total of 9,200 seats, went clean for the Robinson-Basilio telecast, but Enright in East Liberty district had around 700 tickets out of 3,200 left at fight time. For out of location house, that was considered okay and much better than it did for first scrap between these two.

Prices ranged from $3.50, including taxes, to $5 in the loges. Attraction was slow catching on and in most cases where they did capacity, it wasn't until the day of the championship battle that the racks were emptied.

Big Draw in Northern Cal.

Ray Robinson-Carmen Basilio fight last Tuesday (25) night grossed $145,000 in 18 Northern Californian and Reno, Nev., theatres and auditoriums. Total attendance was 52,155, with scale varying from $4 top in some of the bigger Frisco Bay Area auditoriums to $6.50 at downtown Frisco's 400-seat Telenews.

Biggest single Northern California crowd gathered at the 16,000-seat Frisco Cow Palace, where 6,323 paid up to $5.50 to watch Robinson regain his middleweight tile. Cow Palace gross was $25,000.

The tiny Frisco Telenews sold out and good crowds showed up at the downtown Frisco Paramount and Golden Gate. Telecast, handled on a regional basis by John Parsons' Telenews Network, was also piped into such cities as Oakland, Richmond, Sacramento, Merced, San Jose, Berkeley, San Rafael, Reno, Nev., and several Southern Oregon situations.

Hotsy in Cincy

Cincinnati, April 1.

Telecast of the Robinson-Basilio scrap in the RKO Albee weathered late hour recession handicaps to hang up a hotsy $9,000 b.o. decisinon. Scale was $4 to $4.60.

Empty spaces in balcony of the 3,100-seat house reflected unemployment among Cincy fight fans.

Apparent transmission trouble before start of championship bout was the only technical blemish and aroused no complaint.

Seattle Aud 67% Full

Seattle, April 1.

The Robinson-Basilio fight closecircuited into the Civic Aude, grossed $16,500, at $5 and $3.50 admish.

About 4,000 or 67% capacity, saw the line feed, which was projected onto four screens.

Prophets Get the Usual Honors—

1938 Volume, 'Television: A Struggle for Power,' Foresaw Whole Pattern of Convulsions

Washington, April 1.

The fight over free versus pay tv is a lot older than it seems. It was predicted 20 years ago, at a time when there was a small handful of experimental video stations and any television for the public was still several years in the future.

At the same time, the harm that largescale entertainment television could do to the motion picture industry was already recognized.

These things were told about in a book, written in 1937 and published in 1938, by Joseph Borkin, then an economist for the Dept. of Justice, and Frank Waldrop, then managing editor of the defunct "Washington Times Herald." Borkin is now an economist, attorney and publicist, practicing in Washington while Waldrop is in business.

In their book, "Television, a Struggle for Power," they raised the question of whether tv would follow the pattern of commercial radio and be sponsored by advertisers, or whether it would wind up as a sort of utility—with the audiences paying "fixed rates and tariffs comparable to the telephone industry."

"Television," they said back in those days, "is a medium of information for the control of which a terrific struggle is being waged. It is a medium, also, for acquiring great profits both in money and in power."

The solution, Borkin and Waldrop figured, "might be solved simply by changing service costs to the consumer on a utility rate basis.

"The proposal," they explained, "has been put most concisely by Robert Robins, executive secretary of the Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre, an organization of independent theatre owners, radio set manufacturers, and other imperilled interests." Robins argued before the FCC for a tv free of advertising, with the public paying directly for its service.

This is in exact reverse of the position today of film exhibitors, who fight against pay tv and for free tv.

In the mid-1930's, when motion pictures were riding high and tv was nothing but a gleam in the eye of a few dreamers, Borkin and Waldrop wrote:

The bulk of television programs will probably be in the form of motion picture films . . . We have to ask what incentives there will be for a customer to drive his car, run, or even walk to a movie house, when his own living room may become a theatre; and we can think of none that seems valid."

That was the period when Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, hired A. Mortimer Prall to make a survey for the film industry on the possible impact of tv. They were worried, even then.

To Serve on FCC These Days You Gotta Be Ready With the Answers

Washington, April 1.

With recent Congressional disclosures definitely influencing its deliberations, the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee last week gave John S. Cross an intensive examination on his nomination to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission. Cross, who is assistant chief of the State Department Division of Telecommunications, was named to fill the Democratic vacancy left by the resignation of Richard A. Mack.

Sen. George Smathers (D-Fla.), who conducted most of the interrogation, referred to "what happened" on the other side of the Capitol during his questioning of Cross. Smathers had endorsed Mack's appointment to the Commission.

Along with other members of the Committee, Smathers was concerned with possible pressures which might be exerted against Cross by the Executive Branch of the government. Cross gave assurance that he would let nobody, in the Executive or Legislative branch, influence his decisions.

"You do not believe," asked Smathers, "that you owe anything to the Executive Branch because they have sent your nomination to this Committee?"

"No," replied Cross, "not from a special favor standpoint, not at all."

Did Cross "recognize that the FCC has been created as the creature of the Congress?"

He did.

Q. "Do you think this Committee would be justified in talking to the members of the Commission on matters of policy?"

A. "Yes, sir, I think as an arm of Congress that the Commission would welcome any advice on policy matters from the Congress."

The questioning then turned to educational tv. Cross said he favored it but would not want to commit himself, without the facts before him, on whether specific channels should continue to be reserved.

Q. Would you lend your able assistance to the activation of these educational channels?"

A. "In any way that I could properly do so."

Asked whether he had any views

Ill Windfall

Al Schwartz and Snag Werris were a gagmen team on radio programs. Schwartz was visiting Werris on the Coast to look in on the latter's wife who was ill, and "incidentally" to knock their heads together on a tv package. Werris noticed that his wife, to while away the time while recuperating, was tracing dots to complete pictures of celebrities in a book game remembered from childhood.

That's how "Dotto," the high-rated CBS-TVdaytimer, was hatched.

Comr. Lee Retort: 'I Resent Feeling I Can Be Bought'

Washington, April 1.

Federal Communications Commissioner Robert E. Lee told the House Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight yesterday (Mon.) that no one, inside or outside the government, attempted to influence his vote in Channel 10 Miami case. Lee was one of the majority of four commissioners who voted for National Airlines.

Questioned about various phone calls he made to Charles W. Steadman, a Cleveland lawyer, around time the decision was issued, Lee said this was just a coincidence. He said he never discussed a tv case with Steadman and that the calls were "personal." Steadman had been mentioned during probe as a "contact man" in Channel 10 fight.

Lee said former Commissioner Richard A. Mack "made no secret of his concern about the Miami case in Commission meeting. But I do not recall he ever said he was over the barrel in that case. He seemed to hope that the Commission would make a unanimous decision and he didn't seem to care who got it."

Questioned regarding payment of about $350 by the broadcast industry for his hotel bills in connection with official trips, he said he did not feel this in any way influenced his decisions. Because of inadequacy of government per diem, he said, he took a loss of over $330 on travel expenses during last two years.

His attendance at industry functions, he said, are important to his work on the commission. "I resent the feeling I could be bought," he observed.

It would set back each commissioner $150 if the NAB doesn't pay the hotel tab at the L.A. convention this month, he said.

BENNY, CBS ASK COURT RECONSIDER 'GASLIGHT'

Washington, April 1.

Attorneys for Jack Benny and CBS today (Tues.) petitioned the Supreme Court to reconsider its recent decision upholding a lower court injunction against the web's filmed parody on the Metro film "Gaslight," for use on tv under the title of "Autolight."

Establishing a precedent by covering parody and burlesque under the Copyright law, the case was decided by a four-to-four vote, with Justice William O. Douglas not participating.

U. S. Steel Renews

U. S. Steel has renewed its CBS-TV "U.S. Steel Hour" for next season. Programs will continue to be produced by the Theatre Guild on Wednesday at 10 over a 135 station lineup.

With Armstrong Cork already having indicated its "Armstrong Circle Theatre" will be back, the CBS-TV Wednesday 10 to 11 period continues status quo next season, with the two shows alternating in the period.

Lever to CBS on 'Lux Playhouse'

Lever Bros. this week threw some of its nighttime television billings for next season CBS' way with the purchase of alternate-week sponsorship of "Schlitz Playhouse."

Starting in the fall it'll be "Schlitz Playhouse" one Friday night, "Lux Playhouse" the next (Lever won't use the old "Lux Video Theatre" title). Series of dramatic films will continue to be produced by MCA's Revue Productions.

Deal marks Lever's first CBS nighttime buy for the fall, after first having firmed up full sponsorship of Groucho Marx and half sponsorship of " Price Is Right" for the fall on NBC-TV. Curiously enough, however, the buy is very similar to one Lever made this season on CBS-TV in that it posed a product conflict that was amicably settled.

This season, Lever's buy of the ill-fated Eve Arden show placed it immediately adjacent on an alternate-week basis to Procter & Gamble on the Phil Silvers show. Lever and P&G worked out a precedental agreement which maintained the status quo. Now, "Lux Playhouse," Fridays at 9:30, will be directly in front of "The Line-up," sponsored on the skip-week by P&G at 10. Again, the two soap companies have worked out an agreement on commercial placement and product use that cleared the way for the deal.

Schlitz, which has been in the Friday at 9:30 for several years as full sponsor, informed CBS earlier this season it wanted relief. So J. Walter Thompson, the Schlitz agency, came up with Lever, another of its clients, to fill the gap itself.

St. Paul, April 1.

Trendex booboo had one of its Twin Cities' interrogators calling the KSTP Radio-TV newsroom to ask what video program was being watched.

The telephone call came through at 5:15 p.m. Editor Lowell Ludford was advised by a young woman on the other end of the line that she was making a Trendex survey. The conversation, as KSTP reports it, went something like the following:

"Yes, we're watching tv now. There are 12 of us all watching. We're all men."

(Long pause.)

"No. The woman of the house is not at home. We're watching Hi-FIve on KSTP-TV. It's a teenager dance show.

"The ages of the men? 34, 37, 29, etc., etc.

"Yes, there are always 12 or so men here. However, I feel it's only fair to tell you that you're talking to the KSTP news room.

"You're welcome. Goodbye."

Says: Ludford: "We can't help but wonder what might have happened to the Hi-FIve show's rating if we weren't so honest."

That All-Night Paar Party

It seems only logical that people who stay up until 1 a.m. to watch Jack Paar would stay out until dawn to honor him. That was the offbeat premise for one of the best network parties in years, with some 600 people, including 60 NBC-TV affiliates and their wives who paid their own way to New York, flooding into the Hotel Plaza's Grand Ballroom at 1 a.m. and breaking up at 6 last Saturday morning (29).

If the timing of the party (to permit Paar and his cast and staff to finish their Friday night telecast by the party's starting time) was unusual, so was the talent lineup assembled by NBC programming exec Dave Tebet. In a show that started at 2 a.m. and ran about 90 minutes, NBC paraded out some of New York's sharpest comics, who managed to needle Paar as much as they praised him.

Comedians, who included Jan Murray as emcee, Jack E. Leonard, Jonathan Winters, Jack Carter and Louis Nye (show ran so long that Henny Youngman didn't even go on), must have thought they were at a Friar's dinner, what with the all-in-fun heckling. And Paar, in a closing thank-you bit, entered the spirit of the occasion with a topper-of-the-evening comment that he was hardly as clever or as talented as the comedians who preceded him, "but we Gentiles never are."

Party wasn't pegged to anyting in particular, being the off-the-cuff brainchild of NBC station relations v.p. Harry Bannister, who came up with the idea of honoring Paar as the saviour of late-night live television and sent out the call to affiliates. By mid-morning, Bannister was so flushed with the affair's success that he introduced Paar with a long dissertation on the history of comedy, which made everyone's debt of gratitude to Paar even greater when he came on, got off fast and let everybody eat.

K & E Boss Warns Webs to Expand Vision Beyond Handful of Clients

NBC Radio's 500G Hypo

Chicago, April 1.

NBC radio netted over $500,000 in new coin with a pair of quarter-share sales in its daily "News on the Hour." Midas Muffler Co., through Bozell & Jacobs, is in on a 13-week buy, the Tums, through McCann-Erickson, is in line for the next 13-week opening. Buys are each worth over $20,000 per week and represent major-minor exposure 42 times a week.

Both sales were made by the network's central division.

600G Okay For WOR's Educ'l TV Cues Job Rush

The moment Albany greenlighted the $600,000 appropriation for New York City school telecasts over WOR-TV, Channel 9 was flooded with mail from all parts of the country. Correspondence was of one ilk: job seeking by educational-tv experts, imagined or real.

Problem of the moment is what to do with the avalanche of job-seeking mail since no one has yet been appointed by The Regents to handle this and matters. Gordon Gray, general manager of WOR-TV, on whose desk the mail is being dumped temporarily, is acknowledging all inquiries with a please-wait-you'll-be-hearing-soon reply.

Board of Regents expects to start rolling this week on staff problems at WOR-TV. One of the first meetings will undoubtedly be with Dr. Alan Willard Brown, prexy of Metropolitan Education Television Assn., better known as META. Huddle would also include Dr. James E. Allen Jr., State Commissioner of Education; Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools of N. Y. C. Board of Education and member of board of trustees of

BARRY WOOD SERIES ON SCIENCE STATUS

Barry Wood and his "Wide Wide World" crew are packaging a series of six one-hour specials for NBC-TV titled "The Endless Frontier" and dealing with the status of American science in the Sputnik era. Both the title and the idea stem from "WWW's" Dec. 8 show, which treated of scientific advances in space research.

Shows, which will be telecast only on an if-sold basis on Sunday afternoons, range in topic from current scientific research on the ocean to an overall study of the International Geophysical Year and to a special on mechanical brains.

If network television "is to continue its spectacular growth as a marketing force," it "must learn how to be more useful to more than a handful of advertisers, Kenyon & Eckhardt board chairman Edwin Cox told an NBC management seminar in Princeton, N. J., last week.

At the same time, Cox broke sharply with many of his agency colleagues by declaring that the networks should control all programming—"except through default, we as advertising men should have no more business in show business than we have in preparing articles for the Saturday Evening Post."

Cox warned among advertising directors and their associates in the client ranks who "balk at the inflexibility of bigtime network television. They object to the 52-week non-cancellable commitments. They resent having to butcher all other parts of an advertising campaign when the economy wave strikes. They dislike having control of their budgets taken out of their hands . . .

"I could name a number of large advertisers in whose companies these sentiments are a major influence—and where the will toward the networks is not good at all. They accuse you of being high-handed. And they think you are responsible for the skyrocketing of talent costs by opportunist competition between yourselves for entertainment stars. 'Who,' they will ask you, 'who in the end pays for Gleason not working?' The answer

Heatherton Quits WOR in Protest

Ray Heatherton, emcee of "Luncheon at Sardi's," quit under protest. The WOR Radio, N. Y., show had been dropped after a four-and-a-half-year run on Friday (28), with "The Fitzgeralds at the Astor" subbed in the 12:15 to 1 p.m. slot, beginning Monday (31).

Heatherton on the eve of the show's departure last Tuesday (25) made what the station considered derogatory remarks. He urged listeners to write to RKO Teleradio Pictures prez Thomas O'Neil asking that the show be retained.

Station gen. mgr. Robert Leder the following day yanked Heatherton. For the remainder of the week Dick Willard did the introduction to the show and the commercials, while Vincent Sardi Jr., himself, handled the interviews.

Heatherton could not be reached for comment.

Incidentally, the first interviewer for the show was Bill Slater, and upon his illness, his brother, Tom Slater, now v.p. of tv and radio, of Fuller & Smith & Ross, Pittsburgh, took over for a year.

TV'S BINGO-WINGO FANDANGO

Court Sentence—Rationed TV

Vancouver, April 1.

Juvenile court Judge R. C. Palmer has sentenced two boys in Richmond to "restricted television viewing" for one year. The lads, 11 and 13, were nabbed while prowling around a gas station with yegg's tools "down to gloves and everything," said the judge. The boys told him they had learned the crime biz on tv. The court also imposed an 8 p.m. curfew and an extra hour a day of homework.

"This is the first case (here) where television is responsible, and I'm nipping it in the bud," he said, ordering the boys to "stay away from those programs," meaning cops 'n' crooks flickers, "or be put in confinement." As to what the boys can watch on tv, the magistrate said, "I can't be arbitrary about it. It is up to the parents."

WABD Loves Those Live Shows But 'How D'ya Make 'Em Come Out Good'?

There seems to be infinitely more soul-searching, memos and hurried office powwows as the result of doing live video programming locally than there ever was at the network level. The case in point is WABD, the N. Y. tv'er which has been going in heavily of late for live programming in lieu of syndicated telefilm product, although celluloid is still used.

It's natural there should be more difficulty in getting a local show on the boards—and keeping it there—than performing similar functions on a national scale, even though local live programming on a cross-country scale seems to be on the upbeat. There are three reasons:

(1) Local live is still in an "experimental" stage, despite 10 years having passed since tv came into general use, according to some tradesters.

(2) Because so many advertisers are still chary about the value of local live as opposed to syndicated film, it doesn't always pay off in sponsor coin.

(3) There is far less money to spend on local programming than on network, and even though (in the case of WABD) there is judicious handling of the tiny budgets, the cost is nonetheless high enough so that the station has trouble making a good buck in sponsored live local time. And if a format doesn't click into place right off, it could become more costly through constant revision.

'Put It In Writing' Folds

Last week, WABD axed a half-hour panel show, "Put It In Writing," after five performances. Feeling was that the show, which had been bruited about previously by CBS-TV for network use, "looked extremely good on paper but the station had trouble making it work on the air." Several changes were made to the format of the show, which was hooked to the use of graphology, before WABD finally called it quits. A network would more likely have held it on the air for at least 13 weeks.

Some weeks ago, a cycle after WABD launched into its live sked (about 55 hours a week), a variety show headed by William B. Williams had to be axed for generally similar reasons, it was indicated. Nonetheless, WABD still has enormous faith in live local tv.

There was another of those confabs by WABD execs after the second Thursday showing of Leonard

$1,000,000 Into CBS-AM Coffers

Couple of longterm deals and one shortterm saturation buy have given CBS Radio a total of $1,000,000 in gross new business this week. The longterm deals are purchased by Beech-Nut Baby Foods (its first buy on CBS) of 10 five-minute daytime segments per week for 39 weeks, and a 52-week Ex-Lax deal for 11 five-minute "impact plan" segments a week. Both start in April. Beach-Nut was repped by Young & Rubicam, Ex-Lax by Warwick & Legler.

Shorttermer's from Hearst Publications, via the Grey agency, for 10 7½-minute daytime segments the week of April 17.

GM's Institutional Coin To CBS Radio

General Motors has tapped CBS Radio for its institutional ad campaign on night driving safety and is set to bankroll a seven-night strip of five-minute news with Walter Cronkite and Wells Church splitting the commentary chores. The GM buy, designed to reach drivers while they're on the road at night, to give the campaign special impact, calls for a 10 to 10:05 p.m. newscast, starting May 26. Deal was set through D. P. Brother agency.

Meanwhile, CBS has set Ned Calmer in a new 11 to 11:05 p.m. news show Monday-through-Friday. Calmer's new strip, which started this week, gives the web a total of 130 newscasts a week.

VIDEO '58-'59: ONE BIG GAME

By GEORGE ROSEN

The tv networks are beginning to yell, "Stop playing games with us." The blunt truth is that there's considerable apprehension around the webs that, on the basis of present and forseeable commitments, next season on television may blow up into a giant "Bingo"-Wingo"-"Dotto" fandango, even surpassing the present day craze for the westerns.

And the big rub is that the networks, fully cognizant of the fact that an oversurfeiting of the spectrum with game shows can invite brickbats from the watchdogs bemoaning a downgrading of the medium, have no alternative but to sit back and acquiesce to sponsor wishes. They realize that in these days of economic nipups, the networks are not in position to dictate to the client what they shall or shall not put on the air. The welcome mat is out for any and every client, regardless of program format or content. Plus the fact that, if the popularity trend is to games, where is the network so bold and so well heeled as to say, "We'll buck that trend."

For a while there were high hopes that the game shows ("Price Is Right," "Tic Tac Dough," "Treasure Hunt," the DuMont-WABD locally syndicated "Bingo," etc.) would be restricted to the daytime areas, thus leaving the more im-

NABET, Stalemated at NBC, ABC On 27 Contracts, to Start Anew

The principal contract offers by ABC and NBC having been rejected, the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians is moving cautiously toward the next step—beginning negotiations again with the networks.

NABET had negotiated 38 contracts with the nets in January during Boston contract dickers. But in a referendum of its membership which was tallied by the central office in Chicago last week, only 11 of the 38 were accepted. The two biggest pacts—for the 586 engineers and technicians at ABC and the 618 at NBC—were thrown back at the networks by slim voting margins.

Union is now attempting "to determine the reasons why the offers were rejected." NABET said that it had the alternatives of finding out through a general membership meeting or by questionnaire the objections of the dissenters. Another course was to issue a strike ballot on which space would be left for reasons why the contract was unacceptable.

The NBC-ABC union hopes to have some indication of the causes for rejection this week.

The big ABC pact was flung back at the web by a coast-to-coast vote which ended in 321 nays against 236 yesses. The parallel NBC pact got the heave via 618 against and 562 for. Union said that majorities in five of the seven cities in which it has NBC jurisdiction were willing to go along with web offers, but New York and Washington being against them was enough to reject the contract since the favorable vote in the other cities was marginal.

The 11 pacts okayed in the referendum were the transportation and building maintenance in Frisco, program builders; music clearance and radio directors in Chicago; and the transcription department in Hollywood. Five were negotiated with ABC. The six NBC contracts accepted were: writer-producer in Frisco; building maintenance, staff script writers, both Chicago; Buffalo announcers (which union says are the highest paid in country); associate directors in Hollywood; and New York building maintenance.

The first will go out next Tuesday (8). The program will be produced by Bryan Sears.

ABC Radio Affils Convene and Ask: 'What's Going On'?

A group of 24 ABC Radio affiliates banded in New York Monday (March 31) to find out what all the network trimming is about and to jaw about what they want from the web and the general reaction was reported to be: "News, more news and some special events." Without those things, the stations would just as soon forget network radio entirely, thereby reaffirming a point made several times about web radio generally in past months. As matters rest, however, the affils "are not happy with programming

ABC's Half-Sale On 'Rough Riders'

ABC-TV has closed a half sale of Ziv's "Rough Riders" series for the next fall. Half-hour telefilm was taken on alternate weeks by P. Lorillard, reportedly for the Wednesday 9:30 p.m. slot now held by the live Betty White variety show for which Plymouth is not renewing next season.

Meantime, the network has pulled in a renewal next season in the form of Procter & Gamble for a continuing half of the Tuesday "Wyatt Earp" series. General Mills is the stanza's other sponsor at present.

So far, there is no companion sale for Lorillard on the adventure show.

Bette Davis Set for 'Whispering Streets'

Bette Davis has been signed for her first cross-the-board stint in radio. She'll host and occasionally act in "Whispering Streets," the Ted Lloyd-Margaret Sangster soaper series which started on CBS Radio this week in the 11:05 to 11:30 a.m. strip.

Show, incidentally, does not directly compete with the other Lloyd-Sangster radio package, "My True Story." That's on NBC Radio, but at 10 to 10:30 a.m., an hour earlier than "Streets."

Facing Facts: Networks Deliver The Bigger Audience Vs. Syndication

In terms of mass circulation, reaching the largest number of people, syndicated product falls short of network shows.

That is evident in any examination of the market-by-market VARIETY-Pulse rundown. It's strikingly apparent in comparing the Pulse ratings for the top 10 network shows, as opposed to the top 10 syndcated shows in a particular market.

This doesn't mean that the cost per-thousand for a syndicated property is more than the cost-per-thousand of a network show in a particular market. All it means is that the top network shows command greater viewing than the top syndicated properties.

Of course, factors to be considered other than the relative quality and "boxoffice" of the top network vs. the top syndicated shows, are time slots. In the main, syndicated properties do not get the prime time of 7:30 to 10:30 p. m., optioned by the nets. The syndicated skeins fend for themselves on station time, doing best on the whole at the 7 and 10:30 p. m. periods.

There also are questions of competitive programs and station dominance.

But down to cases. The New York VARIETY-Pulse rating rundown, printed elsewhere in this issue, is indicative of the rating disparity between the top network shows and the top syndicated properties.

Here is the Pulse rating figures for the four top networked shows in the N. Y. market: "Playhouse 90," 48.9 rating, with a 71 share of audience; Bob Hope, 42.5 ratings, 58 share; Perry Como, 42.2 rating, 60 share; "Loretta Young Show," 37.6 rating, 62 share.

The four top syndicated shows in the N. Y. market, according to the same Pulse chart, are: "Sea Hunt," 24.6 rating, 43 share of audience; "Honeymooners," 18.8 rating, 41 share; "Highway Patrol," 17.6 rating, 37 share; and "Mickey Spillane," 17.2 rating and a 37 share.

Frequently It Doesn't Pay to Sell Features To Smaller Markets

In features-to-tv selling, returns on the big markets loom more importantly daily.

The competitive cinematic situation in the smaller one and two-station market has driven prices down. Some feature syndicators are known to have sold first-run pics from $15 to $25 for a run in the small markets. In terms of numbers, currently there are 144 one-station markets and 66 two-station markets.

Many of the one-station markets serve an area of from 15,000 to 30,000 tv homes. They hardly attract national spot biz, the type utilized extensively in features. The local biz that such one-station markets can attract for late night cinematics is not extensive, nor is the price high. Therefore, the prices that such stations can pay for cinematics is narrowed down to a point in many cases that hardly pays for the syndicators' servicing.

Adding to the problem, from the viewpoint of the cinematic sellers, is that the one and two-station market usually carry full network programming schedules. That situation diminishes the need for local celluloid.

UA TV'S POST-'48'S ACQUIRED BY WCBS

United Artists TV has unveiled a new package of seven post-'48 pictures, some of them British imports, and has made its first deal on the group with WCBS-TV, N.Y., which has bought five of the seven. UA TV is calling the new package the Pre-Convention Lucky Seven Package.

Pictures in the group are "A Bullet for Joey," "Break to Freedom," "Destination Moon," "Happy Go Lovely" and "Malta Story" (Oscar-winner Alec Guiness starring), which WCBS-TV bought, and "Kon-Tiki" and "Midnight Episode."

Prep 'Navy Frogmen'

Hollywood, April 1.

TCF-TV is readying "Navy Frogmen," pilot film for a new vidpix skein, for presentation to web and agency execs shortly.

Series, based on authentic stories of the Navy's "frogmen," will have available footage shot by parent company, 20th-Fox, for feature pic of "Frogmen" made a few years back.

Chi WNBQ Hot For Aft. Features

Chicago, April 1.

WNBQ, the last of the Windy City stations to join the local cinematic wars, and reluctantly at that, purchased some new grist for the mill last week and at deadline was deep in negotiations for more.

It's clear the afternoon slotting of feature films has been paying off for the station that held out against 'em until only a year ago.

Station has just purchased the Flamingo package of 22 post-'48s containing "Sudden Fear," "I Am a Camera," and such foreign entries as "Riffifi" and "Mr. Hulot's Holiday." It picked up besides United Artists' "Lucky 7" package, and is close to winding up a third deal for 144 pix from Guild Films. Most of the films in all the recent and pending purchases the station considers as filler product, and WNBQ is still out to snag a library of blockbusters.

The Chicago NBC station's old UA backlog is expected to run out, reruns and all, by the close of 1958.

ABC FILMS JOINING 'RERUN DEPT.' TREND

ABC Film Syndication now has joined other major syndication houses in setting up a separate rerun division.

New division, called "Proven Programs," will be activated in about three weeks under the new department head, yet to be selected. He will report to Phil Williams, syndication sales v.p.

Others having rerun divisions are California National Productions, National Telefilm Associates, and Ziv. ABC's division will have a product lineup of 501 half-hour telefilms, as well as 36 features. Properties will include "Code 3," "Racket Squad," and "Douglas Fairbanks Jr. Presents."

Feld's Sales Slot

Irving Feld is the new general sales manager of Guild Films. He'll supervise all the telefilmery's sales arms—national, syndicated and foreign.

Feld, formerly national sales chief of Guild and with the company since 1955, replaces John Cole as overall sales boss. Cole last week was made president of Guild, replacing Reub Kaufman, founder of the company.

MPO Teleblurb Outfit Into Live Industrial Shows

For the first time, an industrial-teleblurb film production company is expanding into live industrial shows. MPO Productions, one of the larger houses in the field, has pacted Bert G. Shevelove, an experienced Broadway and live television hand, to helm the new division.

Ostensibly, the new live industrial arm under Shevelove has little connection with a film house's usual run of experience, but, according to MPO, there is a logical relationship between industrial films and industrial shows. Blurbs also have a casual effect on the new pattern for filmers.

To MPO, a live industrial division—which, not so incidentally, has a great earning potential—is a natural outgrowth of the contacts and knowledge about the contacts that the film company has gained over the years. MPO will be shooting hard for a Detroit buck, since the automotive town, via General Motors, Chrysler, Ford and American Motors, has been going in heavily for lavish industrial packages.

"A company such as MPO, which has dealt with major industries for the production of their industrial films and film commercials (since 1947), has the complete orientation on industrial show demands, in addition to the talent and production sources necessary to deliver live packages," said Judd L. Pollock, MPO prexy.

Pollock's remark gives an indication of the thinking and approach of MPO to industrial shows. Shevelove is long on live production (four Broadway shows as either a producer or writer-director and several live tv'ers: "An Evening With Richard Rodgers" and the original "Red Buttons Show," "The Victor Borge Show," etc.,

Inside Stuff—TV Films

Ways and means of an indie station getting into the public affairs programming area with an ambitious film project is offered by WPIX, N.Y.

N.Y. Daily News station bought the Herman Axelbank theatrical documentary "Tsar to Lenin." Using the footage, it's cutting the film to 60 minutes, utilizing a different narration and hiring March of Time commentator Westbrook Van Voorhis to do the narrating. New script was penned by Eldorous Dayton, with Harry Glass doing a special musical score. Columbia U. professors were called in for scripting advice. Film retitled "Russian Revolution," was hown yest. (Tues.) at 9 p.m.

In the VARIETY-Telepulse program chart of March 26 for the Baltimore market, "Dateline" and "Early Show," listed under the top 10 multi-weekly shows, should have been credited to WJZ-TV. Inadvertently, these shows were wrongly stated to be telecast by WMAR. Addition of "Dateline" and "Early Show," to WJZ-TV, gives the station the top five multi-weekly shows, and seven out of the top 10.

In the same market, in the syndication show listing, "Sheriff of Cochise" should have been number eight in the market instead of number nine, as inadvertently listed.

N.Y. motion picture and tv department of the Bank of America. National Trust & Savings Assn., will be transferred to the L.A. headquarters of the bank on April 30. Peter W Geiger, resident manager in charge of operations, will announce his new affiliation shortly.

M-G's Non-Station Status

Did Metro miss the boat in not getting into station operations?

Metro sold out its 25% interest in KMGM, Minneapolis, to National Telefilm Associates. Under NTA's aegis, minus the Metro library, station is reported for the first time to be running in the black. Film company allowed its option to buy a 25% interest in KTVR, Denver, drop. The Denver indie station now is up for sale, with Metro willing to settle its library contract prior to a transfer. Only station in which Metro retains a 25% stock interest is KTTV, Los Angeles.

Metro, when it launched its pre-'48 library to tv and took steps to get into telefilm production, was in the midst of a tough management struggle, saddled with a disunited board of directors. In the face of that difficult situation, Metro was driven to forego station ownership and management, inking a few deals for stock interest, only one of which has withstood the test of time.

Telefilmeries Open Campaign To Fight Stiff 'Salvage' Tax Rap

Hollywood, April 1.

Alliance of Television Film Producers, repping 22 of the leading telefilmeries in Hollywood, has formally opened its campaign against stiff tax regulations against the vidfilm companies with adoption of a resolution in which members authorized ATFP to proceed with the drive. Action was taken at a meeting Thursday night, and it was also decided to appoint a steering committee to study ways and means of putting the opposition into active effect. ATFP prexy Maurice Morton said he will name members of that committee by Wednesday.

Vidpixers are aroused at a new tax ruling, and claim now that the Internal Revenue Bureau has imposed a salvage value, a new cost recovery stipulation, it means they will be taxed even though they make no profit, that they can no longer fully amortize their vidfilms. Salvage applies to the re-run potential of telefilm.

Morton disclosed other vidfilmeries not members of ATFP have contacted the group, and joined in the campaign. Resolution greenlighting the drive was adopted without opposition, he said.

"The problem has grown more acute over a period of time, to the point where indie and major film producers also face a tremendous threat. Unless something is done about it, it will destroy or cripple our industry. If something isn't done, there won't be an industry. There are many legal ramifications and considerations to the problem, and our steering committee will recommend the best course of action," said Morton. Prexy added he considered appointees to the steering committee so important he first was going to consult with the exec committee of the Alliance before naming them.

"The Tax Department leaves us in desperation and confusion. When the country is in an economic recession they seek to cripple another industry, and over a matter which has nothing to do with tax reduction. If they are going to cripple another industry—even inadvertently—they can cause tremendous chaos. I don't think it's anybody's intention to do this; I'm sure it's not deliberate, but the potential administration of this policy has this effect. It is the biggest problem the industry faces today.

"Our action is in keeping with the expanding policy of the Alli-

Hafner's 'Got Coin, Still Need Show'

Hollywood, April 1.

Packager-producer Les Hafner, who for years had tv program packages and ideas and then hunted a sponsor, has reversed his field—today he first landed the financing, and now he's hunting a property.

Hafner said he has a signed agreement by a N.Y. and Hollywood financier guaranteeing a minimum of $1,500,000 for telepix.

"We figured that 39 tv pictures costing $35,000 a show would come to $1,365,000, but actually I have latitude to go beyond that, and can up a budget to $40,000 to $45,000 a show if the property demands that, if a star is involved, for example.

"Right now I'm talking to three agents about packages, properties and scripts, and expect to make a decision in from two to four weeks."

J. J. Heffernan Named Terrytoons Sales Exec

John J. Heffernan has been named sales manager of Terrytoons, replacing Newt Schwin, who moved into CBS-TV network sales some weeks ago. Heffernan moves to the CBS subsidiary from NBC, where he was an account exec with NBC Television Films.

He'll report to William M. Weiss, Terrytoons v.p.

Phil Cowan to NTA

Phil Cowan, formerly publicity director of Screen Gems, has joined National Telefilm Associates as director of exploitation, reporting to George Crandall, public relations topper. Harry Algus, in the realignment, has been given the post of press director.

Before joining NTA, Cowan had headed up his own public relations firm, and in past years had been associated with CBS radio and tv in publicity posts.

MCA TV To Unveil Sales Pattern of Par Pix at NAB Conclave

MCA TV plans to unwrap the Paramount library at the National Association of Broadcasters convention in Los Angeles, slated for April 27 to May 3.

MCA TV execs on both east and west coasts have been conferring on best method to handle the some-700 pix backlog, the cream of which is slated for another theatrical reissue ride before going the tv way.

Presentations for the tv station sale are being prepped for the NAB conclave, with Dave Sutton, v.p. in charge of MCA TV's film syndication division, and Lou Friedland, v.p. in charge of station sales, slated to be on hand in Los Angeles for the pitch. Preliminary talks already have been held with a number of station operators, but no deals have yet been made.

TPA'S UNIQUE 'COMBO CONCEPT'

Ben Brady Vs. IBM Machines

Hollywood, April 1.

Remarks by Ben Brady, producer of the "Perry Mason" series, in VARIETY recently that there aren't enough "trained writers" and the universities should be scoured for new writing talent has brought a fiery blast from the tv-radio branch of Writers Guild of America West.

Said a spokesman for the branch tartly: "Periodically a Hollywood tv producer, most often one with an assembly-line viewpoint of entertainment, will be sure to attempt to serve himself well by publicly serving his associates badly. The writers are generally his favorite targets and his claims are always the same.

"There are 1,800 accredited Guild writers in Hollywood and 1,000 in N.Y. . . . many winners of national prizes for their dramatic efforts. Mr. Brady has apparently read all their work and arbitrarily finds them wanting.

"What are his criteria? The best indication of what could secretly lie in his heart along this line is perhaps his sad statement that" the automation process of writing is not yet clearly limned on the writing horizon.

"Now all may be clear. What Mr. Brady may be looking for is the machine-made script. For these we refer him to the electronic calculator people, Remington-Rand, IBM, General Electric, et all."

The Vidpix Writer Problem

Material Vastly Improved in Past Five Years, But New Talent Scarce, Sez McDonald

The "which comes first, chicken or the egg" situation plagues the nurturing of new writing talent by the Hollywood telefilm industry, according to Frank McDonald, director of "Wyatt Earp" and "Meet McGraw."

McDonald, who has a long list of telefilm and motion picture directorial credits, said on one hand there's a dire need for good, young original writing talent. On the other hand, the talent guilds, referring to the writers guild, set up barriers for testing new talent. He mentioned the guild edict against the submission of freelance scripts, acknowledging that the guild has some justice on its side of the issue, the danger of pirating and sponging.

But where ever the fault lies, the fact remains that tv has a monsterish appetite for using up stories and new story writers are a hard commodity to come by.

Director, who worked for Universal, Warners and Paramount, before turning to telefilms about five years ago, feels that Hollywood would really be in trouble if it wasn't for tv. Motion pictures today either have to be great or have an exploitation gimmick to succeed, he opines.

As to how telefilms have changed in the five-year span, McDonald feels that the story material is better. He began with "Three Musketeers," and has worked on "The Whistler," "Range Rider," "Gene Autry" and "Annie Oakley" episodes. Stories which were accepted years ago would not pass muster today, says the director. As for actors, McDonald feels, they, too, have changed over the span, taking their cue from the "mumble" school. If the surge toward "underplaying" continues, we'll get back to the silent movies, cracks McDonald.

Seven WB Pilots To Roll in April

Hollywood, April 1.

Warner Bros. tv will roll seven pilots in April. Oaters lead with three slated for production. Others are two crime lensings, a comedy and a horror package.

Writers putting the finishing touches on the potential skeins are James O'Hanlon, Nelson Gidding, Howard Browne, Mildred and Gordon Gordon, and Marion Hargrove.

Pilots to roll are: "The 49ers," "Lone Star," "Public Enemy," "GMen," "House of Wax," "Girl on the Run," and an untitled western.

Mex Police Series

Hollywood, April 1.

Clarence Eurist has made tiein with Mexican Police Dept., Mexico City, whereby he will have full access to its files for story material for a new telepix series to be titled "Secret Files of the Mexican Police."

Pedro Armandariz, Mexican screen star, will be top-billed. Carlos Musquiz will play a running part in series.

Flying A Pattern: Lotsa Promotion & Merchandising

A sponsor that buys a show and doesn't back it up with all-out promotion and merchandising is selling himself short, according to Mitchell Hamilburg, prexy of Flying A Productions, one of the most successful Hollywood western houses.

Flying A Productions, via CBS Film Sales, recently concluded an 80 market national spot renewal deal with Continental Baking for "Annie Oakley." Outfit, which has Gene Autry as one of its partners, has grossed about $7,500,000 since it pioneered the tv staple oater biz seven years ago.

CBS Film Sales has a piece of a number of Flying A series, which in addition to "Oakley," are "Buffalo Bill Jr.," "Range Rider," "Gene Autry," and "Adventures of Champion," a total of 465 half-hour episodes.

It doesn't make sense for an advertiser to spend about $2,500,000 for an oater staple, including time and talent, and neglect to sink another 10 to 20% for promotion and merchandising. Hamilburg says Continental Baking in a past campaign appropriated $200,000 for publicity and promotion. Sponsor, he relates, isn't as much interested in the particular rating, as it is in moving goods off the shelves, and to do this, it realizes

'Willie Wonderful's' 200G 1-Man Sales Push

As a sign of how hot juve product is in the syndicated market, "Willie Wonderful" has made $200,000 worth of station sales in the four months since the telefilm skein has been on the market. Remarkable thing is the impressive gross was racked up by a "one-man sales department"—Bob DeVinny, general manager of Wonderful Productions in Cincinnati.

This boy-and-circus series is sold in over 30 markets.

GIVES STATIONS PRIORITY ON PIX

Station group buying, whether indies or affiliated o&o's of major broadcasters, now swings enough economic weight to give the syndication field top priority on fresh skeins.

That development is the key to a unique Television Programs of America product-sales plan involving three first-run skeins, one off-network show, and a library of reruns.

For one of the few times, stations now are being offered a line-up of four new-to-syndication properties with different airing dates from one telefilm house. This approach is quite different from the usual practice of selling new series one at a time, holding back on what's upcoming until the markets run dry on the older property.

TPA has been resoundingly successful with its plan, according to sales v.p. Michael Sillerman, inking $4,200,000 in biz the first three months of the year, highest in the company's history for the period.

The implications to stations in lining up the new properties from a particular house over a year's span is dramatic, especially if other syndication houses follow suit:

1. Complaint of indies and affiliated stations that they get the "rejects," the properties nixed by the networks and regionals would no longer hold true.

2. Stations knowing what's upcoming, can plan for year-round programming. Current situation finds stations and sponsors buying in a "what's available at the moment" market.

Sillerman says the plan was triggered by Richard Moore, KTTV, L. A., topper; Fred Thrower, WPIX, N. Y., station manager; by Triangle Publications, Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., Storer, as well as other leading indies such as WGN-TV, Chicago.

In different groupings, there were sufficient deals made to kick off "New York Confidential" for next September airing, "Tugboat Annie," for April airing, and "It Happens in Spain," also for April airing. Additionally, the same pool of stations have been buying the off-network "Lassie" show, slated for May. Kickoff dates, of course, can be juggled by the stations.

Deals for the new syndicated properties and the reruns from the TPA library are not contingent upon one another, but pitching the combo as a year-round programming plan, including daytime stripping of reruns, has caught fire. Stations pick and choose and TPA's sales register rings, as airing dates progress.

Syndicators such as TPA, Official Films and others feel that financing isn't the major problem in getting new product on the market. Rather, it's a problem of insuring playing dates prior to release of product in key markets—markets such as N. Y., Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia which

RKO TELERADIO'S POST-'48 BUNDLE

RKO Teleradio is prepping a new feature film package of 18 pix, virtually all of which are post-'48's.

The group was initially distributed theatrically by RKO Radio Pictures. The subsid retained tv distribution rights, which is now being activated.

Holdoff on titles is due to need to finalize clearances, but all titles will be unveiled at the upcoming Los Angeles meeting of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, to be convened April 27.

On the basis of agency interest, RKO Teleradio is going ahead with pilot production of "El Coyote," packaged by Ken Murray.

NTA Film Network's $28,000,000 Potential in Launching 'Big Night' Package to Bolster Indie Stations

That Legion Tag

Stations differ on whether or not to book a vintage pic "condemned" by the Catholic Legion of Decency, according to Fred Schwartz, prez of Distributors Corp. of America, new selling a package of cinematics via Flamingo Films.

Schwartz, speaking of his experience with "I Am A Camera," said the situation varies from market to market, acknowledging that the sale of the pic has been hurt somewhat by the Legion tag. The pic initially did not get a Motion Picture Production Code Seal either when it was originally released, but that was at a period before the Code had been liberalized.

Indie stations, in markets accounting for 46% of the set circulation in the U. S., have joined the NTA Film Network to establish a programming phalanx in the fall, consisting of three fresh half-hour series, features, and reruns of hourlong 20th-Fox and Warner Bros. telefilm properties.

From Los Angeles to Chicago to N. Y., the indie stations have fallen in line to share some of the production risks with the NTA Film Network, thus insuring a first-crack at product which otherwise would have been pitched to the other three networks.

The unique station participation, pertains only to "How to Marry a Millionaire," "This Is Alice" and "Man Wthout A Gun." The remaining product lineup, the 20th-Fox features for "Premiere Performance" and the "TV Hour of Stars," consisting of the 20th-Fox and Warner Bros. reruns, is completely underwritten by the filmed net.

Why the $12,000,000 programming push for the fall?

All the elements in the economy and the tv scene, in the opinion of network prez Ely A. Landau, make it propitious. The number of indies in the country have grown, reaching a potential 19,497,000 tv homes. With those indies serving as an anchor, affiliates of other networks are being signed up for national exposure of NTA Film Network programming at prime time.

In terms of a recessive economy, the filmed net as opposed to the other webs have no "must-buy" list and are able to offer lower rates. For the first time, an advertiser will be able to see the complete season's programming before plunking down his dough.

As to programming, the indies for the first time will be able to get a programming block from one source for what will be called locally "NTA's Big Night," consisting of three half-hour properties, "Premiere Performance," and "Hour of Stars."

The importance that the indies and other stations, including key's affiliates of the other three networks, attach to this development is attested to by the contractual arrangement on the three half-hour series.

Twelve indies out of a potential of 17 indies, in the same number of markets, already have inked deals on the three series. The arrangements run along these lines: The indie, upon a 10% down payment, gets the telecasting licenses

Paul Talbot Sets Fremantle-Soviet Telepix Exchange

The second telefilm exchange deal with the Russians has been worked out by Fremantle, which will swap Encyclopaedia Britannica films and "Movie Museum" for a five-minute Soviet informational telefilm series.

The deal was arranged by Paul Talbot, who recently returned from Moscow. Ziv's Ed Stern had preceded Talbot to the Russian capital and inked an exchange arrangement involving three Ziv series.

Talbot said he found Soviet officials eager to exchange television product. He is of the opinion, though, that a good portion of Soviet tv film fare would not be very popular on American tv screens. The blame, he felt, was not because of content—there is a world-wide market for ballet, musicians, etc.—but more on Soviet tv technique which isn't as mobile as that of the U.S.

The five-minute series for which he acquired western hemispheric rights consists of vignettes of Russian life. It's being specially produced for television showing abroad. The first two segments, which are to be delivered to Fremantle shortly, deal with a tour of the Moscow tv center and an atomic icebreaker.

Additionally, Talbot made a tentative deal for a 60 to 90-minute telefilm of "Moscow After Dark," to be produced by the Russians and to accent night life in the Soviet capital. Talbot said the Soviet execs were interested in at least 200 Encyclopaedia Britannica films.

Under the Fremantle-Soviet arrangement each side has the complete right to reject a film. Soviets, according to Talbot expressed an interest in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series, but nothing was finalized.

The Fremantle prez in his tour also visited England, Denmark, Finland and Germany, making a number of product deals in the markets.

Pyramid's 'Indictment' Series to Roll in N.Y.

Pyramid Productions started filming this week in N. Y. of the "Indictment" pilot, based on stories about the N. Y. District Attorney's office.

Film and legit actor, Richard Kiley stars, Abe Ginnes is scripter and Nathan Kroll is producer, under Pyramid's exec producer Everett Rosenthal. Pyramid is doing its own financing for the pilot and has not yet set a distribution deal.

Gross-Krasne Org On Documentaries

Gross-Krasne is going into the documentary film business, and, through a brand new subsidiary, Technofilms, is anxious to work through the Government and the armed services in lensing "space age" footage for industrial and school use.

The telefilm production company sent one of its longtime film editors, Asa Clark, to Washington and then to Florida for powwows with Government officials on shooting space technology celluloid. Jack L. Gross, G-K prexy, said primary function of Technofilm, fror which Clark will be in charge of research and development, will be "in the area of top-level scientific information" and also in dissemination of the filmed info to stimulate interest in the sciences as a career.

G-K so far has limited itself to the production of half-hour telefilms for syndication to commercial outlets.

ABC-TV Does a Glamor Job On Its Cost-Per-Thousand Story

ABC-TV has entered the 1958-1959 season with a hard sell that dwells on dollars-and-cents talk. The network, guided in this area by veep Gene Accas points with what it feels is indisputable pride to its favorable cost-per-1,000 position vis-a-vis CBS-TV and NBC-TV.

In a series of presentations to individual ad agencies and the trade press, Accas reports that ABC's competitive position has improved so much that its "yield" leaves the other nets in its wake. For example while its average rating in Nielsen "A" markets is lower than either of the other webs (18.4 to CBS' 21.9 and NBC's 22.4), the time charges at NBC and CBS are higher. The result has been that the cost-per of ABC has gone down 5% in 1958 from 1957—from $3.04 per average half-hour show to $2.88, the lowest of the major webs. CBS, according to the ABC Nielsen study, has gone up 23%, from 1957's $2.41 to 1958's $2.97. NBC is down 3%, but far behind ABC—from $3.50 to $3.38.

Even with ABC's lower ratings, the cost for its better "yield" can be more clearly seen, perhapas, in the fact that the average half-hour cost on ABC is $65,605 compared to $95,438 for CBS and $95,788 for NBC. There has been a general increase in program and time charges at all three networks, but ABC is only up from 1957's $57,637, while CBS has increased to the aforementioned figure from $79,752 and NBC from $86.432.

Accas and the ABC sales presentation and research crews broke down the dollar return into several different categories and come out ahead cost-per 1,000 in all of them. It gets a better "yield" among "younger families" (16 to 49 years of age) and among "larger families" (three or more members) than its competition. This information is based on Nielsen's January Average Audience homes as applied against the Nov.-Dec. Nielsen "home characteristic" data.

ABC-TV stresses too that it also leads in the "percentage of shows below the all-industry median of $3.38 cost-per-1,000 cost efficiency" for all nighttime network programs. As the January Nielsens show, ABC has 53% of its programs below the median, against 52% for CBS and 45% for NBC.

On the dollar basis, ABC also claims it offers the greatest efficiency for hourlong shows. Of all the network programs of the 60-minute variety, the web says that it has the top six in the ratings—Lawrence Welk (Saturdays), his Monday "New Talent" show, "Cheyenne," "Sugarfoot," "Maverick," and "Disneyland," in that one-through-six order.

Accas was quick to point out another feather in ABC's sales cap—the "most efficient program in all network time" was the half-hour "Wyatt Earp," costing $1.75 per-1,000.

Femmes Hold 22% Of All Station Jobs

Women occupy 22% of all the jobs in radio and television stations, according to a special survey by American Women in Radio & Television, distaffer trade organization.

Roughly 9,200 women are employed by radio and television stations in the U. S. The AWRT survey was the first of its kind done in this country.

Based on a 12-month investigation of all radio (FM as well as AM) and tv stations, the survey reports an average of 2.6 women out of an average of 11.7 total employees per station. The report covers only station personnel and does not report the additional number of distaffers employed by the radio and tv networks, but of the 2,256 stations responding they included indies, web affiliates and web owned and operated stations.

Survey also reported: (1) Women "hold positions at every level of station operation—from general staff to top management." And

It's Old-Fashioned To Talk of Crisis In Radio: Sarnoff

"The current talk of crisis" in network radio "seems strangely outdated," NBC prexy Bob Sarnoff declared last week in his periodic newsletter to tv and radio editors. Commenting on the fact that "a financial and programming retrenchment by one radio network has touched off speculation on the precarious future of all radio," he declared the speculation to be somewhat behind the times.

"If it were three to five years ago, I could better relate it to our own experience. Then, many network affiliates were at the breakaway point. Most of our major sponsors had pulled out; radio salesmen couldn't get a foot in the door of the bigger agencies; the network's annual dollar volume was melting away to nothing.

"But today, all this is changed, not only with NBC but with network radio as an entity and as a concept. There is a new philosophical awareness of its values, which is reflected in the amount of interest it stimulates, and a practical awareness which is reflected in a tangible intake of dollars. Radio salesmen walk about Madison Ave. today like men reprieved. They can discuss million dollar deals with key executives without apology for star gazing. Most of the advertising giants who underwrote the radio networks in their pre-television heyday are now back in, although not in the massive fashion of a decade ago."

Reporting that since 1953, NBC Radio has had a cumulative loss of $9,000,000 and in "one particularly grim year" alone lost more than $3,000,000. Sarnoff listed these achievements in the more recent past.

No Rabbit's Foot

1. For the first time since 1953, the loss graph reversed direction last year, "and the reversal continues at an accelerated pace into this year. We are now talking about a break-even point without rubbing a rabbit's foot when we do. I believe we will reach it, and soon."

2. At a chips-down affiliates meeting last year, the network gave its affiliates a choice: "If they wanted to maintain the NBC Radio network service, they would have to carry more of our programs in network option time and on a more systematic basis." Since that meeting, clearing for network programs has increased an average of 15⅔. "With the additional circulation thus delivered, national advertisers have found the NBC Radio Network an increasingly valuable buy. As sales have increased, compensa-

NEWBURN EXITING EDUC'L TV BERTH

Major factotum in educational television, Harry Newburn, president of the National Educational Radio-Television Centre at Ann Arbor, is reported returning to a college presidency at an undisclosed school shortly.

Centre's topper for five years, Newburn came from presidency of U. of Oregon. Ann Arbor group has been instrumental in feeding programming to U. S. educational tv'ers.

Huntley & Brinkley's 250G Insurance Coin

Chicago, April 1.

Kemper Insurance companies are spending some $250,000 with NBC-TV this spring for eight Wednesday night Chet Huntley-Dave Brinkley newscasts and 10 participations on the "Jack Paar Show." The buys saturate the period from mid-April to early June and represent Kemper's outlay with the network to date.

Chevalier Wows 'Em At Annual Radio-TV Correspondents Dinner

Washington, April 1.

With Maurice Chevalier a standout performer, annual Radio and TV Correspondents dinner here Saturday night (29) in honor of Vice President Nixon and other Washington bigwigs was topped off by a well-rounded entertainment program produced by Mark Leddy, Ed Sullivan's talent consultant. It was all under the general supervision of CBS program veepee Robert M. Weitman who convoyed the show from N.Y. to D.C. in a chartered Eastern Airliner.

While the audience of 800 at the Sheraton Park Hotel responded enthusiastically to other acts, it was Chevalier who stole their hearts and to whom they paid the unusual tribute of giving, at the behest of emcee Ed Sullivan, a standing ovation. It was a memorable night for the beloved Parisian whose voice and vitality seemed as strong as ever.

Chevalier was best with two songs from his new film "Gigi" ("Thank Heavens for Little Girls" and "I Don't Understand the Parisians") and showed versatility with a unique demonstration of what he called the "music" of languages—a kind of babble in various tongues. He encored with "Mimi" and brought in the audience to hum "Louise" as the wind-up.

Of the others, comedienne Carol Burnett stood out with her hilarious rendition of "I Fell In Love With John Foster Dulles"—a perfect selection for the occasion. The talented lass got a second big hand with takeoffs of different types of singers.

Heavy applause also went to singer Jane Morgan's piping of "All the Way," Johnny Carson's bit on Ed Murrow putting his kids to sleep, Jimmy Edmundson's (Professor Backwards) gags on Texas, and dancer Eileen O'Dare, a top performer. Rounding out the bill were Jean Carroll, a rather risque female counterpart of Sam Levenson; Connie Towers, glamorous dramatic songstress, and the veteran vaude team of Smith and Dale. Ray Bloch's music was, as Nixon noted afterward in a brief speech, "superb."

Lewis W. Shollenberger of CBS News was chairman of the dinner committee, assisted by Julian Goodman of NBC.

WCBS-AM SERIES SIFTS UNDERWORLD

Series of special documentaries titled "The Underworld" and involving lengthy and candid interviews with various types of criminals has been launched by the "This Is New York" series on WCBS, the CBS Radio flagship in N. Y. First in the series, a 38-minute taped interview with a pickpocket and petty thief named Frankie the Cannon, was aired last Monday (24) locally and has been tapped by the network for a special repeat on April 11.

"This Is New York" producer Lee Hanna and managing editor-director Norman Kramer already have another tape in the can, an hourlong interview with a drug addict. They're hoping to take interviews with a prostitute, a shoplifter and an armed robber to round out the series. Tapes are "not to glorify or to make excuses" for the criminal, but "to try to reduce him to human terms, to make him understandable."

First broadcast is scheduled for a network repeat in the web's 9:30-10 p.m. public affairs slot on April 11.

Cost-Per-1,000: Friend or Foe?

Philadelphia, April 1.

One of the tv industry's most cherished yardsticks—the cost-per-1,000 efficiency measure—was belted by one of the very same industry's best rating sources, the Nielsen Co. Nielsen veep George E. Blechta, speaking here last week before the Television & Radio Club of Philadelphia, told industryites that when isolated and used alone, the cost-per yardstick is a "poor basis for time buying."

"All spot schedules will show a large spread in the number of messages heard by individual homes," the rating expert said. "A low cost-per-1,000 schedule may be concentrating too many of its messages among a small group of homes to be efficient in a real sense.

"This is what cost-per-1,000 hides. If we divide the audience reached by a spot schedule into five equal parts, from most heavily to least heavily contacted homes, a good amount of waste coverage may appear. In many cases, the 20% reached most often by the schedule have received over 30 messages per home. For many advertisers, half this number of messages would be equally effective."

Blechta said, "A spot buy delivering a good cost-per-1,000 can be oversaturating one-fifth of the homes it reached with almost two-thirds of all commercial messages delivered. This is not efficiency in any sense." He concluded that a "real cost-efficiency yardstick of time buying must ask how many different homes are being reached with effective frequency, and how much does this cost."

Meighan Stakes Future in Tape Blurbs; Ampex Financing New Setup

Taped Ballcasts

Stations are finding new and ingenious uses for videotape, according to Howard Meighan, former CBS-TV veep who's setting up his own commercials-on-tape companies, and is also serving as a consultant to Ampex Corp.

One station which recently purchased tape equipment (Meighan wouldn't disclose the call letters), plans to tape its baseball coverage every day and repeat it nightly at midnight, in place of late movies.

Howard S. Meighan has resigned as v.p. of CBS-TV in charge of its Coast operations to form the first company devoted to production of commercials and programs exclusively on videotape. He's partnered in the venture with the Ampex Corp., which he'll also serve as a special constulant.

Meighan, who's been with CBS for 24 years and was the first prez of CBS Radio when it was split off from CBS-TV, will not be replaced on the Coast for the present with future plans of prexy Lou Cowan being held in abeyance.

Meighan's new venture will consist of three companies, Videotape Productions of New York Inc., Videotape Productions of California Inc. and Videotape Midwest Inc., in each of which he'll hold majority control and each of which will be financed by Ampex. The New York company, which will be the first to go into operation, will be owned 55% by Meighan and 45% by Ampex. Ownership of the others hasn't been finalized yet, and Ampex may not hold a financial interest in those companies.

Meighan is now scouting studio space and personnel for his new ventures. His Gotham operation will use two Ampex recorders, four cameras and other special equipment including tape duplicating machinery and editing gear. As soon as he lines up studios and

Subliminal? 'Who Needs It' Decrees NAB Code Board

Washington, April 1.

Television Code Review Board of the National Assn. of Broadcasters went on record last week as opposed to any use of subliminal perception on tv stations. At its quarterly meeting here, the Board proposed an amendment to the Code which bans SP. This will be submitted for approval at a meeting May 1 in Los Angeles of the NAB tv board. Amendment reads:

"The use of the television medium to transmit information of any kind by the use of the process called 'subliminal perception,' or by the use of any similar technique whereby an attempt is made to convey information to the viewer by transmitting messages below the threshold of normal awareness, is not permitted."

Commenting on the action, Code Board chairman William B. Quarton said: "Whether the process works or not, or to what degree it might work was not our main concern. We acted because we believe the American public has a right to approve or reject what comes over the home screen and this requires that the public be consciously aware of what it is viewing. Basically, we have concluded that 'subliminal' would not be good for the public, the advertiser or the broadcaster."

Last November, Board requested Code subscribers to defer any experimentation with SP pending "review and consideration." Board has no knowledge of any station planning to use the technique.

In other actions, the Board:

Instructed its staff to proceed immediately with supplementary monitoring of stations whose history has been in "substantial violation" of Code provisions, findings to be considered at a Board meeting April 28 in L. A. in conjunction with the NAB convention.

Appointed a subcommittee headed by Roger W. Clipp to study possible Code changes affecting time standards for advertising copy, multiple spotting and contests.

Ampex's Formula For Editing Tape

Ampex Corp. has perfected a way of editing tape, according to Howard Meighan, who resigned as a v.p. of CBS-TV over the weekend to form his own videotape commercial production firms in association with Ampex and to serve Ampex as a special consultant.

Editing is made possible by a special track on the edge of the tape, where a little mark is made each time a "field" is scanned on the tape. These marks, about a quarter of an inch apart, indicate the end of the equivalent of each electronic "frame."

Ampex has developed an editing unit which mounts on the regular tape console, and the editor runs the tape through the machine, stopping it at the point to be edited and using the markers on the edge as his guide for cutting. Since there are so many more "frames per second" in the sense that more fields are scanned electronically per second than there are frames per second on film, the cutting does not have to be so accurate as film editing and can be made with a tolerance of two or three "frames." Editor then simply splices the edited footage right on the console.

Though Meighan doesn't consider the editing achievement vital for his commercial operation, it will prove important in the taping of programs and on the local level, where stations receiving taped programs can splice taped commercials inside those shows.

Sheldon's Pop-A-Day Pops

Performer's $2,000,000 N. Y. Gross As Crack Salesmen on Own Product

After some 17 years of selling other people's product, New York radio-tv personality Herb Sheldon is finally selling his own, and doing a bangup job at it.

Sheldon, together with an old friend and occasional business associate, heads Edro Products Corp., the sales and marketing company responsible for Pop-a-Day Pops, the new vitamins-in-lollypops product that's inundating the N.Y. daytime kidshows with saturation commercials.

Sheldon launched the brandnew product last Christmas week, using only himself as the tv sales vehicle the first four weeks and then expanding to sponsor the competition. He's already set up distribution in New England, is about to move into the mid-Atlantic states and is looking over distribution arrangements for the Coast. From a zero start, he anticipates a gross of $2,000,000 from the New York area alone this year.

Sheldon credits the spectacular success story to daytime television, the area he feels Madison Ave, has neglected since the kids "stopped tearing the shelves out of the stores in the old 'Howdy Doody' days where there was no competition." After four weeks of handling the commercials himself, he and his agency, Cohen & Aylesbire, bought such varied kidshows as WABD's Sandy Becker (morning & evening), "Romper Room," WABC-TV's "Johnny Jellybean," WRCA-TV's "Hi Mom" and WOR-TV's Claude Kirchner. "All of them are daytime personalities who know how to sell to the kids. I had confidence that I could sell the kids—I've been doing it for years—and I knew that they could too."

For adult copy, he used his own

3 Sponsors For NBC 'Suspicion'

NBC-TV's "Suspicion," which lost all its sponsorship with the pullout of Ford and Philip Morris, has reacquired commercial status through the summer by virtue of sales to Sterling Drugs, Procter & Gamble and Bell & Howell.

Biggest buy by far is that of Sterling, which takes on half-sponsorship of 17 shows between April 14 and Sept. 15, when the show folds. P&G will bankroll three half-hours on the show in April and May, and Bell & Howell one half-hour in May. Buys were set through Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample for Sterling, Grey for P&G and McCann-Erickson for Bell & Howell.

NBC'S FEEDBACK CLUB

Announcers' Formula to Keep Checks Rolling in Despite Illness

NBC staff announcers have formed the NBC Announcers' Feedback Club, an organization designed to keep the salary coming in for any of their members who become sick.

Idea started when Gene Hamilton, NBC staffer for some 30 years, suffered a heart attack, member of the announcing staff, Hamilton reports, voluntarily decided to cover his commercial programs during the illness and kept the checks coming to him. They did this for three months, until he returned to work.

"This never happened before," Hamilton said. "When a man was ill, he just lost the loot." Hamilton added that radio announcers "are considered by many in the trade as mercenary characters who are all out for themselves and care little for the other fellow. I can prove different."

Aubrey to CBS, Moore Gets ABC Program Berth

After 16 months as program vice-president of ABC-TV, James T. Aubrey Jr., was lured back to CBS, causing a rapid shift in two top-level posts at the former network. Thomas W. Moore, who only a few months ago came over to ABC-TV from CBS Film, is moving from the No. 1 sales role at ABC into Aubrey's program slot, and William F. Mullen, ABC's Detroit salesmen, becomes the new sales vicepresident.

Aubrey officially moves to CBS-TV on April 28 as vicepresident of creative services, the program job filled until quite recently by Louis G. Cowan, who has since become president of CBS-TV. Aubrey's new job doesn't demand any direct "operating responsibilities," his position being advisor to board chairman William Paley, corporate prexy Frank Stanton to the several CBS corporate divisions on "obtaining maximum effectiveness" for all creative programming. Before going to ABC, Aubrey was CBS-TV's manager of network programs, Hollywood, and before that general manager of KNXT, CBS' Hollywood o&o.

Appointment of Moore as program boss was hinged to the fact that ABC-TV, unlike the other net-

HOUR SHOWS HOT BUT NOT DRAMAS

With both "Studio One" and "Kraft Theatre" on the dubious list as fall returnees, the standby hour dramatic show is rapidly becoming obsolete, and into its place is moving the hourlong television programmer. In one of those periodic show biz paradoxes, the 60-minute form is actually gaining strength but the substance is undergoing a drastic change.

Instead of the "Krafts" and "Studio Ones," with their ups-and-downs, their occasional inspired dramas and their frequent dismal ones, television is coming up with the safer if less exciting continuing character series in hour form. There are already several on the books this season, primarily westerns, but next fall will see the medium embrace the hour form in a variety of program types.

There's a kind of momentum gaining in favor of the hour "programmers" as distinguished from the dramatic anthologies. At CBS-TV, for example, in the midst of juggling programs and time slots for next season's schedule, the network decided that in light of the fine showing the filmed "Perry Mason" series has made this season, it can use another classic-type whodunit show.

So it's begun negotiations to acquire rights to the "Ellery Queen" characters and stories for use as a one-hour live weekly series out of New York. Web wants to use Patrick O'Neal, who starred in this season's illfated "Dick & the Duchess" series, in the title role. Indicative of the strength the new hour format promises, the network chose "Queen" even though it's already done in television—as a half-hour syndicated show produced by Television Programs of America and starring Hugh Marlowe, it achieved only moderate success.

Ready Other Properties

On the CBS beltline for next season several other hour properties, Charles Marquis Warren's "Rawhide" hour western, now figured as the Monday 7:30 to 8:30 entry ("Ellery Queen" would go Wednesdays 7:30 to 8:30, if all negotiations are consummated); Charles Russell's "Pursuit" series of whodunits on tape, with a different detective hero each week; Rod Serling's series of hour science-fiction shows; "Stage Coach," a Screen Gems oater co-production.

NBC, too, heartened by the success of its "Wagon Train" westerns, has such hour western entries as "Cimarron City" and "Northwest Passage" in the hopper, with the possibility of other oater-hours emerging by fall. Meanwhile, NBC is toying with an hour live whodunit series from the Coast this summer, with Albert McCleery at the helm. If the summer show clicks, it could move into the fall schedule. In a co-production deal with Screen Gems, web is developing "Tallahassee"

ABC-TV PLANS OWN VERSION OF BINGO

Anxious to capitalize on give-aways for the viewers at home, ABC-TV is preparing its own national daytime version of bingo. Web is blueprinting now a daily half-hour home giveaway, with an undisclosed homescreener participation gimmick for the 3 to 3:30 slot.

Because advertisers are currently keen on shows with pots of gold for the home audience, ABC has also changed the format of "Do You Trust Your Wife?" the 3:30 to 4 cross-the-boarder, so that by Monday (7), show will be giving away big prizes for identifying certain "mystery" hubbywife teams. Web has already started promoting the new angle on the air.

Why Kid Ourselves, Chi's a Money, Not a Creative Zone, Sez Quinlan

By LES BROWN

Chicago, April 1.

With local tradesters jawing long and at length about Chicago's future as a television origination centre, ABC-TV veep Sterling (Red) Quinlan dropped the shattering opinion last week that even the toddlin' town's past video glory is a grand illusion. The local tv anchors, he said, have always had the homely status of "money machines" in the network scheme and were never intended as creative plants. As for the shows Chi did produce for the webs, Quinlan rated them "accidents" or exigencies of the parent companies.

Quinlan, who has charge of ABC's WBKB here, painted this "realistic" picture for a gathering of American Women in Radio and TV in a speech which he hoped would fizzle the pipe dreams about Chi's place in the network design. "There has been too much baloney on this subject," he said. "We (station chieftains) may not have as much influence over our network bosses as we would like to have, but we certainly know the general policies of our companies."

In Quinlan's view, the creative video coin is going down the experimental drain in Hollywood and New York, so the nets depend upon the profits of their o&o's and "continually nudge us for more profits. And rightly so. Chicago is a phenomenal market, better than all their other markets except New York City, with only four commercial stations in the nation's second largest city.

"This city is not their creative zone. This is their vital money zone."

He described the local plants as solid and efficient, but strictly local—all except the comparatively new and elaborate CBS facilities, which he termed "a fitting monument to Les Atlass' unique record as a broadcaster."

But, he added, "I doubt if Les Atlass was able to get one single assurance from CBS that, once this plant was completed, a sizable amount of network production would be asigned to it. It isn't in CBS' policy, in my opinion, any-more than it is in ABC's policy to do a lot of shows from Chicago."

The future? Quinlan doesn't foresee any improvements—not

UTLEY'S 'COMEBACK'

Commentator's Career After Paralysis Capped By Du Pont Kudo

Chicago, April 1.

The comeback of Clifton Utley, begun about a year ago after a three-year struggle to overcome paralysis, was crowned last week in storybook manner when the DuPont Foundation bestowed on him its highly coveted annual award for radio and tv commentary.

Utley, commentator for WNBQ and WMAQ, the NBC stations in Chicago, is the first commentator outside the East Coast area to receive the award and only the second to win it for local broadcasts. Past winners of the DuPont trophy have been Elmer Davis, Edward R. Murrow, H. V. Kaltenborn, Joseph Harsch, Chet Huntley, Howard K. Smith and Eric Severeid.

Utley had suffered a near fatal stroke in June of 1953, suspending what to that point had been a distinguished broadcasting career. His wife, Frayn Utley, a commentator herself, took over her husband's Sunday night radio slot during his years of recovery and now alternates with him on his nightly WNBQ telecasts. Utley returned to radio in September 1956 and to television a year later. He has still not completely regained full motor control of his body.

'Wide Wide World' Trimmed to Hour; GM's 15-Show Buy

"Wide Wide World" will be back on NBC-TV next fall, under the same General Motors sponsorship but in reduced one-hour form. GM has renewed the series, but will sponsor only 15 shows, an hour each, at 5 to 6 p.m. on Sundays over a limited alternate-week span.

In terms of GM expenditures, it represents a cutback from last year's $6,000,000 outlay, for 20 shows of 90 minutes each, to about half that total, or $3,000,000. Renewal, however, represents a turnabout in buying practice for GM, since last year's renewal didn't come in until midsummer and only after protracted negotiations. Purchase was set through MacManus, John & Adams agency.

The shift in time and format now leaves open the question of what happens to "Omnibus," the Robert Saudek Associates package which has been serving as "WWW's" alternate Sunday companion-piece. NBC hasn't come to a decision on that, and Saudek himself hasn't explored the question of reducing the "Omnibus" format to 60 minutes.

PAUL ROBESON SET FOR CHI TV STINT

Chicago, April 1.

Paul Robeson will appear on tv here after all, and on the show which earlier had cancelled him presumably as a too touchy subject. In what figures to be a significant break in his cautious comeback, baritone undergoes the query treatment April 20 on Norman Ross' "VIP" on WBKB.

Singer originally was set for an April 6 go on the show, but a fortnight ago a station spokesman said Ross had "a change of heart," although understood to still be interested. Ross normally has two guests per half-hour stanza but will devote an entire session to Robeson.

A concert circuit pariah in recent years for his political views, Robeson currently is essaying the comeback with a national singing tour.

Dr. Zulli Going Com'l on Sundays

Dr. Floyd Zulli, the New York U. professor who made literature-for-breakfast fashionable in New York and suburbia with his WCBS-TV-NYU "Sunrise Semester," has gone commercial. Dr. Zulli will star in a half-hour Sunday afternoon series devoted to the classics on WCBS-TV, complete with a sponsor.

Bankroller is the Heritage Club, the distribution arm of Heritage Press, which puts out fine editions of the classics and distributes them through its own book club. Heritage will pick up four Sunday half-hours, starting May 11, in the 4 to 4:30 p.m. period. Each half-hour will be devoted to a single classic novel, and the entire series will be used by Heritage Club to kick off a new series of classics it is issuing.

Only four shows are scheduled because Zulli is due to take off for Europe in June and won't return until July. Summer months are out, but WCBS-TV expects to have Zulli back as a permanent commercial-educational personality come fall, and considers the Heritage Club deal a pioneering effort which will pay off in terms of permanent status for Zulli in the fall.

Heritage Club bought the show, which is still untitled, as a frank extension of "Sunrise Semester,"

TV Major Factor in Dwindling Status of the Smaller Agency; —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By JACK BERNSTEIN

During the last few years, almost weekly, an announcement has been issued by a Madison Ave. ad agency telling of a merger. The releases to the press are routine and what most fail to say is that the day of the small and even the medium-sized agencies are numbered. Television is probably one of the largest single factors in the mating.

Media advertising in 1957 reached an alltime high of $10.3 billion and of this figure the television advertising expenditure totaled $1.3 billion alone. No longer can the small shops either on Madison Ave. or in Peoria afford to either have a one-man tv shop or a single timebuyer who buys print as well as tv time, for even in smaller cities across the country, local merchants have become large spenders in spot television.

In the main, the smaller agencies and regional agencies are finding themselves forced to merge because 1) spot television, which with the recession figures to get a larger chunk of the pie than ever before, requires regional offices and local servicing; 2) tv accounts require television specialists who are familiar with all phases of production; 3) the demand by sponsors for additional services which includes marketing and merchandising with local tie-ins with the clients sales force and national distributors and local dealers; 4) the realization that larger billings, via mergers, give agencies a better hand in negotiations and bargaining with the networks and are all important in pitching accounts.

In a word, it all amounts to bigness. The larger an agency, and the billings it represent, to a large degree tells the story in its network dealings. If an agency can knock on the network door and state that it is prepared to shell out millions for six to eight tv programs, it receives red carpet treatment and first crack at prime time availabilities. Otherwise, the agencies which have just one show to purchase are at the mercy of the networks who do not hesitate to palm off fringe time.

The television industry has knocked out the old theory that—"being a small shop—additional services can be offered." The two room offices can't compete with Young & Rubicam and BBD&O especially if the client has more than a few dollars to spend. The daily advertising columns are filled with success stories that illustrate how a small shop increased the billings on an account only to lose it to a large agency. What the smaller agencies have done is to build a Frankenstein and when the clients begin shelling out millions in their ad appropriations, they want the additional services the smaller agencies can't offer.

Spot television requires specialists who are familiar with market and audience composition and habits of local communities as well as ratings.

If an advertiser wants to go national in expanding the market for his wares, it requires him to have an agency with a staff of expert timebuyers and agencies have to have men in New York and on the Coast as well as half the points in between. The merger in these instances works for the benefit of both the small shop which gets all the advantages of being associated with a large agency and the large agency in return gets a local office to keep an eye of the follow-through process and offers the services to other national advertisers.

Gotta Be an Expert

Television requires a crack staff of experts which the smaller agencies cannot afford for their accounts. Even though the days of agency production is for the most part in the past, it still requires a team of experienced men to select fare that has a chance of being a hit. Programming requires everything from getting the right time period initially to the loosely termed agency supervision which means retaining control over a show from tracing the storyline to reading and approving scripts to the final shooting.

The demand by sponsors for the additional agency services is one of the major reasons why smaller agencies merge. Research, whether it be the new fangled motivational, or just simply why the consumer prefers Lux over other brands, and the studies it entails, are of major significance. In the additional service category, agencies can no longer make up and place ads and then sit back and wait for their 15% but rather they have to advise the client on the best way to merchandise the product and how the marketing should be handled and this calls for dealing the clients sales department as well as local dealers and distributors.

Larger billings, via mergers, serve agencies in a multitude of ways. If a shop has the reputation of being a packaged goods agency and it merges with an agency which is noted for handling hard goods, then the agency can go with an effective pitch for accounts of all types.

Billings also talk when the agencies are dealing with the webs. It is a known fact that larger agencies can call their preferences with the networks. The webs know that come each fall the giant agencies will be purchasing shows and the agency like corporations can haggle and bargain more effectively with the networks over time and money. A one-shot agency, as to be expected, has to sit and wait while the larger agencies take their choice.

Just as the supermarket is replacing the corner grocery store, the larger agencies are swallowing up the regional and smaller agencies. Television is recognized as a big and expensive business and if the small agencies want to keep their doors open then they have to face this medium. The cost of the medium, it being too expensive for many small shops to handle, has been primarily responsible for more than 100 agencies mergers in 1957 with more predicted for 1958.

Chi Agencies

By LES BROWN

Chicago, April 1.

Needham, Louis & Brorby, after a major expansion of its management strata, now has possibly the most youthful top echelon of any major agency in the country. Last week NL&B created the new post of executive vice prez and named to it 37-year old Paul C. Harper Jr.; enlarged its board of directors by five; dubbed three new veepees; bolstered its radio-tv department; and appointed a new head of media.

Prexy Maurice H. Needham said all this was done to "add depth in management and meet requirements of recent rapid growth and of future expansion." Needham stressed the point that the agency's policy has been to promote from within.

The veeps enhancing the board of directors are James G. Cominos, Edmond C. Dollard, F. Winslow Stetson Jr., Frederick A. Mitchell and Vinton H. Hall. The new veep stripes went to Kenneth C. T. Snyder, George Soter, and Blair Vedder, the latter also named to helm the media department. Mitchell is manager of NL&B's Gotham office and Soter heads the copy department there. Board now has a membership of nine.

The agency also acquires next week Hal Smith, who for more than 12 years has been with the NBC Chicago shop, most recently as manager of central division network tv sales promotion. Smith joins NL&B's radio-tv department, reporting to Scott Keck.

Dissident stockholders of Pabst Brewing Co., a group that is seeking to overthrow the present board and install ex-Schlitzer John Toigo at the helm, are throwing such ammunition as follows: the company has skidded from second to eighth place in the industry; sales have dropped from over 4,000,000 barrels to under 3,000,000; market value of the stock has gone from 32 to 6; and dividends have dropped to nil. Advertising has increased from $2,000,000 to over $6,000,000, and at $1.99 per barrel the ad expenditures are the highest in the industry.

J. Walter Thompson agency is moving its public relations, research and home economics departments into the same section of the Wrigley building as the agency's main body. JWT now occupies seven floors of that wing for its approximate 500 employees.

M. M. Fisher Associates have taken new and expanded quarters in the Bell Savings Building in the Loop.

Proebsting, Taylor agency has changed its name to Probesting, August & Harpham Inc. with K. Conrad August, exec veep, and John W. Harpham, veep-creative director, the new principals.

Eward H. Weiss agency picked up Enzylac and Brook Hill Farms for Medical Dairy Specialties.

Foote, Cone & Belding made John L. Rigotti a veep over media and research. Edward M. Stern was upped to director of media, Robert E. Ryan to media manager, and John E. McArdle to merchandising manager.

Elliott W. Plowe got v. p. stripes at BBD&O.

Joseph D. Probst, ex-Henri, Hurst & McDonald, joined Chek-Chart Corp.

Jeannie Carson As 'The Saint Who Came Marching In' To Scot Town

By GORDON IRVING

Dunfermline, Scotland, April 1.

A whole town went gaga here as an English-born tv personality newly arrived from the U.S.A. made a triumphant seven-hour tour.

The actress was Jeannie Carson, star of the U.S.-filmed tv series "Hey, Jeannie!", which has had wide showing on the BBC-TV network. Actress plays Wee Jeannie MacLennan in the series, and is supposed to be a native of Dunfermline, Scotland.

The townspeople here have followed the series intimately. It has brought extra trade to the area, which produces lotsa linen goods. In fact, many overseas buyers now insist that the tag "Made in Dunfermline, Scotland" be imposed on linen goods from the town.

Frequent references to Dunfermline in the "Hey, Jeannie!" series have given a boost to this quiet, historic town in East Scotland, center of mining area, and birthplace of the late philanthropist Andrew Carnegie.

The town authorities repeatedly asked Jeannie Carson to visit with them, but Hollywood commitments wouldn't allow. Actress was even accused of doing the wrong thing

Teheran TV's 400G For U.S. Telepix

Television of Iran, in Teheran, which expects to take the air in June or July as the first commercial video outlet in the Middle East, has laid aside $400,000 in the first year for the purchase of American telefilm product. With no quota to worry about, the $400,000 budget is something of a record for a new overseas outlet, especially since the country only has a few thousand sets available for sale at present.

Television of Iran is run by the Sabet family by a grant from the Iranian monarchy. Charles Michelson, an American purchasing agent, has been placed in charge of lining up the U. S. film properties which will pepper the station once it commences operation. Incidentally, Vance Halleck, an American tv expert, has been in Teheran for the past few months helping get the tv outlet on the air.

TORONTO'S EASTER PARADE FOR TV

Toronto, April 1.

For the first time, the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. will televise Toronto's annual Easter parade on Sunday, April 6, from 2 to 2:30 p.m., when Canadian tv and radio celebrities will ride in some 50 convertibles in a parade that, each year, has drawn thousands of Toronto citizens and visitors to this event.

A battery of tv cameras will be set up at the parade's marshalling area, with CBC commentators along the route interviewing CBC personalities and spectators. According to ukase of the State-operated CBC, as currently applied to tv appearances, the sack or chemise dress has been banned by the CBC costume department for this Easter parade in Toronto.

Mozart Festival on TV

Salzburg, April 1.

Famed Mozart Festival in Salzburg will be televised this year for the first time.

It'll be shown on the Eurovision Network, with "Everyman" and "Marriage of Figaro" and one other event set for televising.

U.S. Pubaffairs Shows Get Big Play Globally

Both CBS Film Sales and NBC International are carrying the ball for representation of prestige U. S. public affairs shows abroad.

The NBC Opera kine, f'instance, is telecast in countries stretching from Australia to Switzerland. CBS Film Sales has given wide exposure to "See It Now" interviews with such figures as Tito, Nehru, Adenauer.

Indicative of the pubaffairs push abroad are the rundown of sales in the following countries: Australia (NBC International), "NBC Opera," "Project 20," and "Wisdom" (CBS Film Sales), "See It Now," "Queen Elizabeth's Visit to the U. S.," "World in Crisis," and "Twentieth Century."

Denmark: (NBC International), "Eleven Against the Ice," "NBC Opera," "Southeast Asia," and "Project 20"; (CBS Film Sales), "Face the Nation," and "See It Now." England: (NBC International), "Meet the Press," "Rome Eternal," and others previously mentioned. Ditto for CBS Film Sales.

'Global Exposure for Riot in East Berlin' CBS Documentary

Washington, April 1.

"Riot In East Berlin," Sunday's (30) anti-communist documentary on CBS' "20th Century" series, will have the strong support and even help of United States Information Agency in its efforts towards worldwide distribution. Producer Burton Benjamin screened film here for reps of USIA and other government agencies in advance of Sunday's network exposure.

Telefilm, consisting largely of Commie propaganda footage and smuggled newsreels, marks fifth anniversary of the revolt in East Berlin. Narrated by Walter Cronkite, it is a vivid report of history repeating itself in the form of Red mob hysteria almost exactly paralelling that of Nazi Germany.

Robert Button, television boss for USIA, told VARIETY that this is the type of film that could do the most good in certain parts of the world. CBS distributes this worldwide both for tv and on 16m. circuit. The government agency, however, is willing to take over in any country in which pic cannot be sold commercially.

BIG YEN FOR U.S. DRAMA & ACTORS

The English quota on importation of American telefilm (and that includes kinescope) properties is cueing an interesting and important shift in British purchases from U.S. sources. They expect to increase substantially the pattern of buying scripts done for live U.S. video and reproducing them in England—with as many of the original American leads as they can lay their hands on.

ABC-TV, the commercial British outlet for the English Midlands (Birmingham and Lancaster) has hired Charles Michelson, a veteran American buying agent, as its representative and purchasing agent here. Due to the top limit on the importation of celluloid, which has been Michelson's forte (for such as the commercial tv'ers in Australia), his primary job for ABC-TV at the moment is to negotiate for both American video drama of all sizes, but immediate-actors who have played them here.

Michelson said ABC-TV is ready, by way of a rough estimate, to allocate at least one out three of its dramatic shows to American scripts. This an infinitely greater ration than ever before.

Michelson shortly will be looking into scripts from live domestic dramas of all sizes, but immediately he's o.o.'ing "Playhouse 90," "Kraft" and "Studio One" treatments.

Unlike film, there is no limit set by the British government on the number of American scripts that can be used on English television. Certainly, British scribbler fees are not as high as those paid here, but, according to Michelson, ABC-TV is ready to pay $700 to $750 for English usage of a once-played US. telescript.

There is one minor hitch in the pattern: ABC, which does some six live dramas a week, has a show called "Armchair Theatre," a mystery show which recently was elongated from 60-minutes to 75 minutes length. Since American scripts are either of 60 or 90-minutes duration, a sale to ABC would require either a rewrite job or some careful editing or stretching of existing material. The rest of the ABC shows, although they have been known to run long if the script demands it, are either 30 or 60-minute shows.

First preference will be given British writers and actors on ABC-TV, England, but Michelson explains good U.S. material is in an excellent competitive position. As reported above, Michelson estimated that one out of every three ABC-TV scripts might be done from Americans, and he'd like their original American stars to do the shows overseas with British thesp support.

Michelson, who makes his headquarters in New York, recently returned from a seven-week trip around the world, beginning in Australia and from there to the Far and Near East and England. While in Iran he became the representative for Television of Iran in Teheran.

'Citizen Soldier' Series Recruits Men in Service

Frankfurt, April 1.

Hundreds of U. S. soldiers stationed in Germany are being recruited to play themselves, or their U. S. counterparts who fought in World War II, in a television series called "Citizen Soldier" currently being filmed in Germany.

Six of the series have already been filmed at the Hoenfels training area where U. S. troops are brought for regular military exercises and maneuvers.

The series when finished will comprise 39 half-hour dramatic films dealing with actual experiences of American soldiers. It is being produced by Ronald Alcorn and directed by George B. Templeton, and all 39 are due to be completed by September.

Survey Envisions $170,000,000 Ad Revenue From British Com'l TV; Detergents, Soaps Lead With 12%

By HAROLD MYERS

London, April 1.

An economic and financial analysis of commercial television in Britain, prepared by a leading firm of stockbrokers, estimates that advertising revenue may eventually soar to as much as $170,000,000 to $190,000,000 annually with a corresponding rise in profit potential.

It forecasts advertising revenue for the current year to the tune of $23,800,000 for Associated TeleVision for their operation in London and the Midlands; a similar figure for Associated-Rediffusion, which runs the London station on weekdays; over $16,200,000 for ABC-TV, which has the weekend contract in the Midlands, Lancashire and Yorkshire, and over $27,400,000 for Granada-TV, which runs the two Northern stations from Mondays to Fridays. The Granada results are described as "the outstanding success."

An analysis of revenue and profits is confined to A-R, ATV and ABC. Associated - Rediffusion, which, in the first two years of commercial tv, lost over $7,500,000, is likely to show a profit of $5,500,000 in the current year, which is expected to rise to $7,000,000 for the year ended March-April 1959. ATV, which showed a loss of $1,600,000 in its first financial year, and a profit of $560,000 the following year, is expected to earn $7,000,000 this year and as much as $8,400,000 next year. The forecasts for 1959 for both A-R and

Ed Sullivan Mulling All-Canadian Show

Toronto, April 1.

With the signing by Ed Sullivan of Canadian comics Wayne & Shuster for May 4 and 11, and June 1 and 8, for his videoshow, with others to follow, it is inevitable that a 100% Canadian-origination show might result.

It is being mulled by Sullivan for the fall, but it is still strictly in the conversation stage.

22,000,000 Aud For British TV; 2d Only to U.S.

London, April 1.

There are around 8,500,000 television receivers in use in Britain, serving an adult population of more than 22,000,000 people. These figures make this country second only to America in the number of sets in private use. Yet in 1949, less than 2% of the total adult population had tv, and a poll showed that two out of every three had never seen the medium.

This information is outlined by P.E.P. (Political and Economic Planning), an independent, non-party organization formed in 1931 to study problems of public concern and to suggest ways in which the information gleaned can be applied. In a booklet entitled "Television in Britain," it's reported that the growth of tv here has been so rapid that now BBC-TV covers an area containing 98% of the population, and almost 14,000,000 adults can view commercial tv.

The fast rise of indie tv is indicated by its jet propelled economic progress since its inception in the closing months of 1955. P.E.P. states that the total advertising revenue for 1957 was about $90,000,000, as compared with slightly over $36,000,000 for 1956, the first full year. Over one fifth of the advertising expenditure during 1957 went on plugging food products, with detergents in second place with a little over 12%, followed by candy, non-alcoholic drin' d medical preparations.

'Thin Man' in Britain Dies of Malnutrition, Phil Silvers Renewed

London, April 1.

BBC-TV is to apply the chopper to the "Thin Man" telepix series at the end of the first 26 weeks. The state web has decided not to pick up its option for an additional 13 weeks.

At the same time, however, it is revealed that BBC-TV is renewing its deal for the Phil Silvers show which has been a big hit on the national network.

In the London area, "The Thin Man" has been running against "I Love Lucy," but although the MGM-TV skein has been warmly received it has never made the impact nor the rating which was anticipated. It may be replaced by another U. S. series but this will probably not be decided until BBC-TV topper Ronnie Waldman has visited America. He's due to leave for New York on May 11 on a round trip which will include Los Angeles, Ottawa and back to New York before returning to London.

Italo TV May Drop Its Top Quizzer

Rome, April 1.

"Lascia o Radoppia," until recently Italy's most popular television program (and Italo version of the U. S. quizzer, "$64,000 Question") may be dropped at the end of July, grapevine reports say. Final decision will be made at the next meeting of the RAI-TV program committee, which decides future local programming on the local government-subsidized telenet in three-month segments.

Popularity of show, though still considered high, is now lagging somewhat despite the recent addition, in show's second half, of a local version of "Challenge." Not known whether this would be yanked too if "Lascia" is dropped.

According to reports, quizzer would be replaced by "Twenty-One," which once before had been reported replacing "Lascia o Raddoppia." Plan was dropped at the time because of avalanche of letters complaining against cancellation of the "oldtime" quiz show emceed by Mike Bonglorno. "Lascia" has also been reinforced of late via "injections" of personality personal appearances and other spectacular gimmicks.

MEX RADIO TALENT IN SHELLACK-ING

Mexico City, April 1.

Mexican singers and actors are outraged at the importation of foreign records for use on local radio outlets. Seems the influx of disks from the U. S., France, Italy and, in particular, Spain, has displaced live talent to such a degree that the Actors' Assn., representing performers, has been asked to take the matter up with station operators.

Mexican performers contend that the foreign platters are "absolutely mediocre" and they cannot understand the "discrimination" against live talent on part of local fans.

HOW DO YOU RATE
With Tom Reddy, guests
Producer: Ronald N. Durbin
Exec producer: Steve Carlin
Director: Seymour Robbie
Announcer: Jack Clark
60 Mins., Mon.-thru-Thurs., 10:30 a.m.
CBS-TV, from New York

It had to happen—a psychological quiz show! And even with such tricky teletags as "aptigraph" and "aptitest" "How Do You Rate" rates as a strong ayem entry that could even hold up in net's prime time.

Gimmick for this quizzer as devised by packager Entertainment Productions Inc. rests on aptitude tests laid on competing contestants (male vs. female). Tests fill such categories as "sense of direction," "mechanical aptitude," "logical reasoning," "distraction," "dexterity," "comprehension," etc. And even though the stakes are comparatively small (the winner gets a mounting prize of $150 upwards and the loser gets a $25 gratuity), there's plenty of tension built during the competition and the tests are varied enough to hold interest all the way. There's also an aptitude test for home viewers but preem show Monday (31) ran over and the set-siders missed getting a crack at it. It sounds like a good stunt, though. The tests, by the way, are prepared by Dr. Robert Goldenson, a professor of psychology.

The emcee chores are ably handled by Tom Reddy who has a smooth and easy way of putting the contestants at ease and getting down to the business at hand. Gros.

IN THE BAG
With John Coughlin, Irv Kupcinet, Paul Gibson, Janet Kern, Carol Channing, others Producer: Frank Atlass
Director: Barry McKinley
30 Mins., Fri., 6:30 p.m.
WBBM-TV, Chicago

Windy City television has for some time been deficient in a popular homegrown divertissement for the whole family, and it has at last a promising contender. "In the Bag" may be nothing original, a panel show like any that has survived the vicissitudes of video fortune, but WBBM-TV has produced it with a bigtime aura, and the show looks like fairly good fun. Until the network decides to reclaim the time previously occupied by "Dick and the Duchess," paneler should serve as a solid leadin to the CBS-TV Friday night lineup. Meanwhile it ought to develop a considerable local vogue.

It is pegged on a slight variation of standard panel guessing games: contestants bring on ordinary paper bags, and the panel, through the usual roundelay of questions, tries to guess what's in 'em. Prizes are generous for a local show: $50 if the panel strikes out and a crack at the grabbag for every round the players are stumped.

Not the device itself but the quality of the panel is the measure of this opus, and the colorful assemblage here is well known in Chicago and mostly witty. Carol Channing, winding up an engagement at the Palmer House, sat in as guest for the preem (27) and managed to be good for laughs as the most constantly perplexed of the panelists. The male regulars, Irv Kupcinet and Paul Gibson, are naturals. Kup, gossip columnist of the Sun-Times, has come a long way as a tv performer since the gauche days of the medium and handles his part now with sophistication. Gibson, longtimer on WBBM radio as a philosopher and, after five wives, the town's best known misogynist is a sparkling off-the-cuffer. He introduced Chicago American tv critic Janet Kern as "the only professional panelist on the show. She's panned everyone in town."

Actually, Miss Kern so far is the weakest link on the panel. All due credit to her for being the only one to take the game seriously, she was obviously nervous, unspontaneous with the quip, and she seemed to think everything in the bag had something to do with her. A few more outings and fewer attempts to be witty may help her catch up with her company. John Coughlin is a prepossessing host who conducts the proceedings well enough, but he too has to relax about it.

First show had the panel stumped every time, but the objects were toughies; $250,000 worth of diamonds, a picture of Tarzan, a tattoo machine, and Sugar Ray Robinson's mouthpiece. Fellow who owned the diamonds (doesn't it figure?) won the top grabbag prize of the night —a diamond wristwatch.

Show shouldn't have much trouble finding a sponsor. Les.

TOP DOLLAR
With Toby Reed, emcee; Dr. Bergen Evans
Producer: Merrill Heater
Director: Seymour Robbie
30 Mins.; Sat., 8:30 p.m.
BROWN & WILLIAMSON
CBS-TV, from New York
(Ted Bates)

"Top Dollar," which replaced "Dick & the Duchess" on CBS-TV over the weekend, is a combination of a parlor game and a home giveaway. The parlor game is "Ghosts," with three contestants vying to eliminate each other and the winner returning the following week to run up his dollar take. The giveaway is a phone-dial translation of the first eight letters of a word created by the contestants into eight digits. Those home viewers with dollar bills with serial numbers identical to the eight-digit numbers can mail 'em in for $100 apiece, with one of the evening's numbers good for $5,000.

As a television feature, "Ghosts" is a mildly diverting entertainment, particularly when the contestants are personable and quick-witted. Producers of the show, Entertainment Productions Inc., had a few kinks in the opening show that should have been straightened out beforehand—Dr. Bergen Evans, the "arbiter" on words, cut in to interrupt when a word wasn't acceptable, instead of letting an opponent "challenge" the word, and consequently the perpetrator got off free of penalty. This straightened itself out during the show, but not before some time was wasted and confusion ensued. Success of the game element of the show will depend on the choice of contestants, and EPI seems to be on the right track with its three opening ghosters.

Giveaway element is something else again. Those home-audience prizes are becoming fashionable, and it seems that every new game show must have a home wrinkle to be acceptable. In theory, the "Top Dollar" gimmick makes sense, but in practice it didn't work out so well, since the contestants managed to run up an eight-letter word on only one occasion. There's an element of cross-purpose here, since the contestants must try to trap opponents into completing a word as quickly as possible, while the producers are trying to get in as many eight-letters-or-more words. Maybe they'll have better luck next week.

Vet radio personality Toby Reed is making his television debut as emcee of "Top Dollar," and it's a belated one, since he's a video natural. Pcised, pleasant and in full charge, he ran the show with firmness without losing the feeling that it's a game. "Top Dollar" may never hit the rating hightime—it's not gutsy enough in terms of its impact—but it should make an effective Saturday night bridge for CBS between its "Perry Mason" and "Oh Susannah" stanzas, a function that "Dick & the Duchess" failed to perform. Chan.

GOOD MORNING FROM MEMPHIS
With Russ Hodge, Kitty Kelly (Barbara Cason), Louis Fossee, Nell Sharp, Cyd Mostelle, Jesalyn Payne and Minah "the Talking Bird"
Producer-Director: Bob Parker
60 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 7 a.m.
WREC-TV, Memphis

WREC-TV, Memphis' CBS outlet here, has hitched up its television "belt" and has come up with a daily ayem all-local live show smack against NBC's powerhouse "Today." And if the first show when caught (18) is any criterion this Channel 3 stint has all the earmarks of becoming tasty morning breakfast diet for Memphians and Mid-Southerners in this sector.

The hourly stanza is well spotted with news highlights with heavy focus on the local and Mid-South situation which is a cincheroo to become contagious with the early risers. Russ Hodge, vet newshawk here, handles this chore in top style and couples with affable Kitty Kelly (Barbara Cason) in a winsome twosome in the emcee roles. Both also score heavily in their easy style of bringing guests on during the stint and turn in a better-than-par for the course in the interviewing bracket.

Nell Sharp, a terrif package who is easy to look at through the lenses even at the wee small hours, is spotted in the featured singing spotlight. She earned beaucoup applause for her snazzy renditions "My Heart Stood Still" and "It Might As Well Be Spring." She's a newcomer to local tv circles and proves her experience by handling herself in stellar fashion. Organist Jesalyn Payne can cope with the best of 'em in this department and knows her way around the keyboard in major league style. Louis Fossee, who handles both the announcing and weatherman stints, scores in these departments with room to spare. And "Minah, the talking bird," is a nifty gimmick to a locally produced show that deserves a salvo of applause. Matt.

TALE OF TWO CITIES
(Du Pont Show of the Month)
With Eric Portman, Agnes Moorehead, Rosemary Harris, Walter Fitzgerald, Gracie Fields, James Donald, Denholm Elliott, Max Adrian, Fritz Weaver, Bruce Gordon, others
Producer: David Susskind
Director: Robert Mulligan
Adaptation: Michael Dyne
90 Mins., Thurs. (27) 9:30 p.m.
DU PONT
CBS-TV, from New York
(BBD&O)

It takes a bit of doing to recreate for tv (live, that is) all of the sweep and excitement that's embodied in Charles Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." If anyone could bring it off, that man, natch, would be David Susskind, to whom, apparently, nothing is too formidable. Under his Talent Associates aegis, it's more than likely that a Ben Hur, or even the Fall of Pompei, would be reduced to duck soup.

Thus it isn't surprising that Dickens' classic saga of 12,000,000 angry men (and women) who had themselves a ball at the guillotine at the time of the French Revolution was brought off on last Thursday night's "Du Pont Show of the Month" with amazing realism. The revengeful mobs (all done up to a turn) and the set designs couldn't quite contain themselves within the 27-inch framework of the tv set, with everybody and everything threatening to spill over into the living room proper. The Susskind stamp for detail and production perfection was ever evident.

Yet once having established that nothing, no matter how gigantic or all-encompassing the scope, is beyond the ken of Susskind's "bring-'em-in-live" TA organization, one couldn't help wondering whether it was worth all the bother. Granted that Susskind & Co. spared no expense or effort to zing up this twice and thrice-told Dickens tale for a full enhancement of its values. Granted that he corralled a topflight cast, comprised chiefly of legit theatre stalwarts, who played it for all it was worth and in the main effectively (a cast that comprised, among others, Eric Portman, Agnes Moorehead, Rosemary Harris, Walter Fitzgerald, Gracie Fields, James Donald, Denholm Elliott, Max Adrian, Fritz Weaver and Bruce Gordon). Granted that Michael Dyne's adaptation was on a high professional level, with proper insight and evaluation of Dickens' intent.

Yet why choose "Tale of Two Cities" to begin with? The French Revolution is mild fare today when stacked up against the complexities, horrors and inhumanities of World Wars I and II. The endless miles of newsreel depicting mob hatred and hysteria since the turn of the century make pallid the rioting in the Paris streets of '79. What's left is a charming love story, but a dated one. The French Revolution has its place in history, but Dickens wasn't a historian and for a novel, even when dramatized, the content must be universal and the meaning much deeper to bear redoing.

Robert Mulligan's direction was tight and extracted everything there was to be gotten out of the play. With the exception of Miss Moorehead, whose Madame Defarge was frequently too loud and strident and devoid of any inner conviction, the others in the cast achieved faithful characterizations. Particularly effective and eloquently portrayed was the role of the heroic Sydney Carton as played by James Donald. Rose.

THE COMMUTER CRISIS
With Merrill Mueller, Bill Ryan, Ed Gough, others Producer: Art Wakelee
Director: Marshall Stone
30 Mins., Sun. (March 29), 1:30 p.m.
WRCA-TV, New York

As a noncommuter, this quarter cannot speak for the thousands of troubled daily train commuters. But while it contained some seemingly sensible and incisive moments, "The Commuter Crisis," a half-hour special by WRCA-TV Sunday (29), did not come to life for a native New Yorker.

The New York newspapers indicate a constant and serious threat to the railroads and, of natural consequence, to their travellers from Jersey, Long Island, Connecticut and Westchester—a big group. Yet the show didn't get interesting or to the heart of the matter—corrective measures—until rather late in the 30 minutes. In trying to achieve a perspective, reporters Merrill Mueller, Bill Ryan and Ed Gough seemed to waste time developing the background of road curtailment. Art.

H'wood-Sponsored Oscar TV Show Had Everything But Imagination

By GENE ARNEEL

The Oscar tv'er of 1958: bally high, expectations great, entertainment spotty. This was Hollywood's opportunity to show off in the grand style; the chance to demonstrate that the West Coast hamlet is still the entertainment capital of the world—and made so by the motion picture studios.

In a large sense it was the industry placing itself on trial. The show last Wednesday (26) night was billed "public service," for the picture trade itself—major companies and exhibitors—picked up the check and there were no commercials. No more Oldsmobile hitchhiking.

In addition to participation in the sponsorship, theatremen across the country — 6,000 of them, according to a tally by the Council of Motion Picture Organizations—joined in a mammoth promotional job. Exhibitors, via trailers, posters, ads, etc., urged that the public stay home and watch television.

Producer Jerry Wald and George Seaton, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, had a show business Who's Who on the cast roster. Perhaps some performers copped the "other commitments" plea, but the show still abounded in important names.

Program proved an improvement over its predecessors, due in part to the absence of the disconcerting automobile blurbs and an attempt, at least, to provide some script material in addition to the usual songs, minor conversation bits and, of course, the Grand Prix accolades.

Bob Hope, as one of five emcees, had several funnies to deliver from the familiar Hope-chest, some concerning his recent visit to Moscow. In Russia, he kidded, all the hotels have television—but it watches you.

Kirk Douglas and Burt Lancaster got across amusingly with a novelty song, "It's Great Not to be Nominated" (by Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen), and this made for one of the highlights despite camera work that failed at times in keeping the two on screen together.

But things didn't all go well. The pre-program buildup had the effect of communicating to the public that a great night was in store for one and all. As it turned out, glamor and glitter were in abundance; Hollywood's glamor pusses were gorgeously gowned, and several million dollars worth of talent went to work with an unimaginative scenario. Many of the personalities showed surprising nervousness. Several of the songs (Oscar winners of the past and the new nominees) were rendered with minimum zest. Indeed, Dean Martin's handling of the year's No. 1 entry, "All the Way," was listless. Tony Martin's "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing" was full voiced but seemed to lack the necessary spirited quality. The incongruity of Rock Hudson cuddling up to Mae West in a "Baby It's Cold Outside" duet might suggest laughs but this, too, came off with little effectiveness.

Hope (who's at home on anybody's stage) and Rhonda Fleming added to the credit side with "Buttons and Bows"

While the Wald production often lacked spark, it did have pace. It moved quickly over most of that long-distance route of an hour and 45 minutes. (A slowdown came with the technical awards). Even local time was bought by the industry in numerous areas to avoid spot-announcement. interruptions. Award winners were read off and the statuettes handed out with facility and the acceptance speeches were modest. And, to repeat, there were names galore, which in itself meant a treat for the fans.

Hope, James Stewart, Rosalind Russell, Jack Lemmon and David Niven shared the emcee chores and the orchestra batoned by Alfred Newman backstopped in expert fashion.

Strange piece of business was a presentation of some picture business history with the Donald Duck character weaving in and out between scenes of old and great productions. This looked like it was the industry trying to poke fun at itself. The fun was elusive.

To many an observer the top feature of past Oscar outings was the use of excerpts of screen classics. This was dropped as the oldies, in their entirety, went on tv via the library deals. It's a value that's missed.

Question to be mulled at this time centers on just what did the film industry buy with its "public service" bankrolling of last week's airer. It's a certainty that considerable good will was created and, though hardly measurable in terms of boxoffice ticket sales, this sponsorship should be continued. Only, the next time out let's have all those sponsorship dollars catch up with some imaginative programming ideas.

AD WORLD
With Ward Byron, host; others
Producer: Byron
Director: Mickey Trenner
Editor: Joe Kaselow
30 Mins., Sun., 9:30 p.m.
WOR-TV, N. Y.

Advertisers toying with the idea of subliminal advertising better give it another good, hard look before making any plunge. As demonstrated at the preem of "Ad World," the subliminal impression on the Red Cross failed completely to reach this reviewer.

Other than the subliminal experiment, one of the few on-the-air demonstrations of the technique in the nation, and the first in N. Y., the program offered little of excitement or interest. As fashioned by producer Ward Byron, the half-hour was too superficial for the trade, and too limited in appeal for the general audience.

There were some points of interest. It was nice to meet discount merchant Steve Masters via the home screen. The reasons why David Ogilvy, of Ogilvy, Benson & Mather, selected a Maxwell House instant coffee ad as the best "ad of the week" was informative.

But on the whole the show was bland and unanalytical. It was not helped by the on-the-air editor Ward Byron, who at times haltingly read from a script. Byron's questioning of guests also lacked audacity and fresh insight. The tempo, too, was overly hurried in an attempt to get in many features. It would be better to concentrate on one or two topics, and give them a good going over, rather than skip around from the question of fair trading to the honesty of drug advertising to shifts in ad agency personnel.

Joe Kaselow, ad columnist for the N. Y. Herald Tribune, and editor of the show, made a short on the air appearance. Other guests included Donald C. Frost, v.p. of Bristol-Myers, and Morris Eagle, a prof at Finch College, who did the subliminal gambit.

Participations were heavy. There was a station ad for a portion of the upcoming Phillies ballcasts, and spots for Redbook, Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., Parade, Cunningham & Walsh, and a plug for TelePrompter. Horo.

EYE ON FRANKFORT
With Jay Crouse, Bill Small
60 Mins., Sun. (23) 3 p.m.
WHAS, Louisville

WHAS News really extended itself to present an hour-long television documentary of the 1958 Kentucky General Assembly, highlighting the best of its extensive collection of more than 10,000 feet of film made on the floor of the legislature during the session. Narrated by Jay Crouse, who was the station's Frankfort correspondent, with an intro and close by News Director Bill Small, the one-hour telecast gave lookers a closeup view of the legislature in action. WHAS was the only station to have a man regularly covering the state assembly, and in addition the station periodically sent other men to Frankfort for soundfilm and radio recordings. WHAS-TV had daily film from the scene on its newscasts.

Much of the film footage was silent, a small portion with sound. Something went wrong with the sound at start of the show, but this was later corrected. While voice commentary does explain, seeing the legislators orating in silence makes for pretty dull looking. Camera did pick up one shot of a legislator taking a nap, which probably perked up viewing interest. The Senator, a Louisville Democrat, arose on the floor of the Senate to announce that he had not been sleeping—merely pondering behind closed eyes the course of the legislators. Some of the hijinx at the close of the General Assembly sesh might indicate to lookers that their lawmakers don't spend all their time in serious deliberation.

Documentary represented a tremendous editing job, and all concerned merit praise for bringing the high spots to Sunday afternoon viewers. Wied.

Philly WRCA-TV Bumps Grant, Brings In Indpls. 'Caster in Late Nite Hypo

Philadelphia, April 1.

Taylor Grant, one of the town's top newscasters is being dropped by WRCV-TV, the NBC owned and operated station here, in a new shift to crack the late newscast stranglehold held by WCAU-TV's John Facenda.

Vince Leonard, toprated Indianapolis announcer, will take over the WRCV-TV news segments at 6:40 and 11 p.m., starting April 14. Leonard comes here after 10 years with WISH and WISH-TV, where he acted as news director.

Grant ankles the local station April 24, when his contract, reported at $47,000 last year, winds up. Grant was brought here by Westinghouse, when the station was known as WPTZ.

General manager Lloyd E. Yoder, of the WRCV stations, said rating charts prepared this winter showed that the NBC channel's audience dropped when Grant came on at 11. Grant replied that when he came to Philadelphia for Westinghouse, Channel 3 was almost blacked out by the Facenda ratings. He brought up WRCV-TV's rating "considerably," Grant said; but when the NBC management took over they stopped all promotional work on him and dropped his local camera crews.

City's third network tv outlet, WFIL-TV has cut into Facenda's dominance of the 11 p.m. slot with movies. Excepting on Wednesday and Thursday evenings when Facenda got a bid lead-in audience "U. S. Steel Hour" and "Playhouse 90," WFIL-TV's "World's Best Movies" has successfully challenged and topped the newscaster.

According to the ARB figures, in December the ratings showed Facenda ahead Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday night, with WFIL out front Monday, Friday and Saturday.

FCC OKAYS SALE OF WATV TO NTA

The Federal Communications Commission's okay of the sale of WATV, New York-Newark, and its AM and FM radio affiliates to National Telefilm Associates, will be followed by a call letter switch bid. New call letters sought are WNTA-TV, WNTA (AM and FM).

NTA will take over active management of the station properties shortly, as soon as the formalities of closing are held. NTA has plans for a complete overhaul of the program structure of the properties, including the presentation of live programs.

WATV transaction marks the first transfer of absolute ownership of a tv station in the New York market. WATV is the second tv property acquired by NTA, the first being KMGM-TV, Minneapolis- St. Paul.

Time Inc. Stations Get D.C. News Hypo

Minneapolis, April 1.

As one of Time, Inc., five radio and television stations, WTCN and WTCN-TV here are carrying the news reports and analyses now being provided out of its expanded Washington bureau.

In addition to the news reports and analyses, the new service includes filmed and taped interviews with Washington newsmakers which now are being supplied daily to the stations' news director.

New facility has been set up by Dick Cheverton of Time's Grand Rapids, Mich., station.

WLW-T's Tint Splurge

KID SHOWS: PART 3 OF A SURVEY

By LEONARD TRAUBE

Eddie Schwartz runs the coffee shop a couple of doors from the VARIETY office. He's a constant television watcher and morning-after critic exchanging views with the staffers. Eddie's youngest child is Elissa, pushing two and a half years of age. Elissa is quite normal—like most of us, married to the tv set; and for her station in life she has to take in as much as she can handle before being sent off to Mr. Sandman.

Presumably in his little one's behalf, Eddie has an objection—not quite enough shows for children of pre-school age that will keep them busy for a few of the strategic hours of the day when Mummy has her hands full. Eddie believes the right kind of tv is good for children; if the shows are entertaining, that's wonderful; if a bit educational-instructional besides, a big bravo. Eddie's complaint is perhaps typical—and the complaint undoubtedly goes beyond the New York area. Of course, Elissa does look regularly at the shows intended for her age bracket, but to repeat, there seems to be an insufficiency of them as far as one household is concerned.

In the as yet uncharted tv of tomorrow, Elissa might have a wider and more diversified choice, at least locally, if the medium should, by some chance, break down into specialized spheres or "segregated accents" such as "children's stations," "sports stations," housewife stations," "quiz stations," etc.; or under a system by which stations would get together locally and come to a working agreement on non-competitive slottings, so that there would be more programs through the day with children's appeal. Elissa would have more of what she yearns for, and her big brothers and sisters more of what they yearn for and can benefit by. Such benefits would accrue also to their parents, whether viewing alongside their brood or content in the thought that their progeny are happy little children watching alone.

Kideos Rule the Roost

In this, the third part of a survey by VARIETY of local live television programming, with the two top programs selected by the stations themselves without regard to whether sponsored or as to the level of audience measurement, the Elissas of the nation and those immediately senior to her are getting quite an abundance of kid fare. In fact, children's shows as a single category, requiring no further definition, lead the local live tv roost. It is only quantitatively, by a merger of the returns from the survey under a blanket heading of "public service" shows, that the PS category is on top. (Part 1 and Part 2 of the survey appeared in the Jan. 22 and March 5 issues.)

Kid shows (from pre-school to pre-teenage) are the only classification in programming where the old audience moves away and a new one just as quickly moves in strictly on the basis of age groupings. It's assumed here that teenager segments, for instance, are a hybrid classification in tv, long a puzzlement to programmers, and that these so-called teenage programs have a similarly hybrid or cross-section appeal involving several age levels.

On a practical basis, kid viewers represent television's greatest future prime-time audience. Let's take Elissa again. The little Elissas are the big Lizzies of tomorrow. No instincts are better than the Elissas who are two or three years of age. If this is not so, how come Elissa, who does not yet know how to tell time, keeps tugging at Mummy's skirt at exactly the right time to have her tune in on such and so? Moreover, though Elissa cannot read, she always knows the name of the product being pitched and will often ask Mummy or Daddy to buy same. If the tv pragmatists are looking for the one foundation upon which to build the medium's future, this is it.

Although the most extensive cross-country kideo show is the live syndicated program called "Romper Room" (see accompanying story), there are numerous children's segments provided on a purely local, individual basis that are either similar in format to "Romper Room" or with an entirely different approach. "Romper" is, of course, addressed to those of pre-primary school age. With that as a takeoff point, here are some of the highlights of pre-school programming by stations participating in the poll (cross-the-board, half-hour and pre-noon unless otherwise indicated):

Fresno, Cal., KMJ-TV: "Miss Pat's Playroom," activities and stories, at 10 a.m. Saturday since 1953.

Shreveport, La., KTBS-TV: "Tops for Toys," at 11 a.m. Saturday and now in second year.

Columbus, O., WTVN-TV: "Kartoon Korner," featuring a hand puppet, Casper the Camel, with stories, songs, plays, etc.; launched in July, 1955.

Portland, Ore., KGW-TV: "Wunda Wunda," 12:30 cross-the-board, since January, 1957.

New York, WRCA-TV: "Hi Mom" (also listed under public service programs in March 5 issue), combining entertainment-culture-education for mother and child; 60 minutes, running since August 1957.

Cleveland, O., WJW-TV: "Kid Bits," containing features aimed primarily at "having fun with the children while at the same time instructing them in little common courtesies and group adjustments"; since May, 1957.

Little Rock, Ark., KARK-TV: "Pat's Party," 8:30 a.m. Saturday, since 1955.

Syracuse, N. Y., WHEN-TV: "Magic Toy Shop," script show aimed directly at pre-schoolers, indirectly at parents and grandparents, with a variety of program elements "to entertain and subtly instruct." Adult cast only and no live audience permitted. (Year of launching not given).

Columbus, O., WBNS-TV: "TV Kindergarten," running since October, 1957.

For the School Crowd

The following are among the top programs beamed at children of school age but, as nearly as can be determined, below that of teenage level (five-a-week, after 12 noon, half-hour, unless otherwise indicated):

Saginaw, Mich., WKNX-TV: "Pixie's Looney Tunes," interviews of children and embracing cartoons, singing, marching, live pet monkey, since September, 1954.

Lansing, Mich., WJIM-TV: "Uncle Howdy's Junior Flint Jamboree," a competitive children's talent and variety program (music, song, dance, recitation), 12:30 Saturday, since October, 1957.

Salem, N. C., WFMY-TV: "The Old Rebel & Pecos Pete Show," with characters indicated in title conducting a program which uses Popeye, Looney Tunes and Little Rascals as features; children's studio audience; running since 1953.

Huntington, W. Va., WSAZ-TV: "Spinach Playhouse," since September, 1957.

Montgomery, Ala., WCOV-TV: "Little Rascals," 60 minutes, since September, 1956.

Phoenix, Ariz., KVAR "Easy Does It," with Gene McKinney as Easy; cartoons, film and live ingredients, a "ghost" hand puppet, contests, etc. ,since October, 1957.

Springfield - Holyoke, Mass., WHYN-TV: "Popeye-Captain Jolly," four-a-week, since January, 1957.

Milwaukee, Wis., WISN-TV: "Uncle Hugo & Popeye," 60 minutes, since 1955.

St. Louis, Mo., KSD-TV: "Wranglers Cartoon Club," with cowboy emcee, on-camera children's audience, "top quality cartoons"; 45 minutes, since 1953.

Cincinnati, O., WCOP-TV "Our Gang Clubhouse" with Bud Chase as Stringbean; parody type program ("The 64c Question," "The Bean's Bandstand," etc.), variety, music ad lib, with such costume getups as baggy drawers, derby hat, T-shirt, suspenders; 60 minutes, since 1954.

Clarksburg, W. Va., WBOY-TV: "Johnny Mountain Show" in which title character combines film cartoons, magic and drawing, puppets; "finds homes for pets that can no longer be kept by youngsters, or finds pets if they desire one." Running since November, 1957.

Burlington, Vt., WCAX-TV: "Current Events Quiz," previously listed also under public service shows; for seventh and eighth graders, Friday, since October, 1956.

Hartford, Conn., WNBC: "Small Fry Talent Club," 9:30 a.m. Saturday, since October, 1957.

Washington, D.C., WTOP-TV: "Ranger Hal," 8:30 a.m. Saturday, since August, 1957.

Mobile, Ala., WALA-TV: "Captain Mal Show," since June, 1956.

Fort Wayne, Ind., WPTA: "The Jingles Show," a kidult program featuring Jingles the Court Jester of Boofland "who frolics in the magic castle" with puppet characters Herkimer Dragon and Cecil B. Rabbit; since September, 1957. Same station has a five-a-week full-hour version of the program from 4 to 5 o'clock.

Westinghouse's 'Kid Stuff'

Stations of the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. chain are as alert as any when it comes to the kid shows. Here's a rundown of WBC's contributions to such programming:

In Cleveland, KYW-TV slots such afternoon cross-the-boarders as: "Popeye," with Barnaby, played by Linn Sheldon, billed as Popeye's personal manager. Running since September, 1957;

"Six O'Clock Adventure," with Big Wilson as host; employing either syndicated half-hour films or nature films and deploying a live monkey. Has been running for two years, daily from 6 to 6:55 p.m., though Tuesday showing is from 6 to 7:30. An example of film segmentation combining live elements;

"Star Babes," with Viola Shoulin as hostess; kids dance and sing in a "Stars of Tomorrow" format; Sunday, 12:30 to 1 p.m.

In Pittsburgh, KDKA-TV's Monday-through-Friday kideo schedule lists: The 7 to 8 a. m. news-entertainment catchall which includes a cartoon for youngsters as a lead-in to the networked (CBS-TV) "Capt. Kangaroo." John Arthur is host of program, which is in its third month;

"Josie's Storyland," pre-school kidult show with Josie Carey, 8:45 to 9:25 a.m., consisting of song, dance, arts & crafts, cartoons, half a dozen puppet characters; Sterling Yates plays role of Mr. Wrinkle, "loveable old inventor of useless oddities, with disker Johnny Costa on the music;

"The Big Adventure," with Hank Stohl, slotted 4:30 to 6 p.m., consisting of two cartoons, feature film, live host-comedian, puppet

'Romper Room'

The most extensive live children's program fixture on television is the nationally syndicated "Romper Room." Formatted strictly for the pre-school set, it's seen on 54 stations in all regions of the country and as of May 1 picks up a couple of additional outlets. Most run pre-noon—Mother's most trying period, it seems—and stanzas are styled anywhere from a half hour to an hour.

"Romper Room" is run by a corporation of that name out of Baltimore, with Bert Claster as president and his wife Nancy as v.p. She's the "Miss Nancy" of the original (1953) Baltimore version, which is still going with her as "teacher." Each city has its "Miss" who is trained in Baltimore for a full week and then sent to a "Romper" spot of which she must be a native or resident. Aside from other values and endowments, each must have a college diploma, or its equivalent. Many are teachers and some are lookers. Age limit is about 32. (The wee ones don't go for granny types). The chief trainer is Nancy Claster, herself an attractive, vivacious woman.

After the tutoring period, the work begins with the program at given stations where the package has been sold and sponsors rounded up. The "Misses" are looked into by one of the head staff every five weeks, to make certain that the proper style and approach are being followed, with skull sessions held. There are eight producers in the fold who fan out across the Station WBAI, the FM outlet atop the N. Y. Hotel Pierre, is grooming itself for a flurry of new advertisers and fresh program features designed specially for the "intellectually acquisitive," according to Stephen F. Temmer, general manager.

WBAI Expansion Keyed To Hi-Fi, FM Radio, Stereophonic Upbeat

It is launching a two-year expansion plan in view of the increased sales of hi-fi equipment which includes FM radios; the upturn in FM radio manufacture; the installation of FM radios by larger car makers; the growth in FM stations in the U. S. and the coming stereophonic broadcasting on FM stations.

WBAI is currently broadcasting, exclusively in N. Y., the complete performances of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra's 1958 spring season and regular Thursday evening "live" concerts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra from Symphony Hall, Chicago, as well as Drew Pearson in a weekly news round, an FM exclusive. It plans to broadcast the Salzburg Festival of Music this year and within the next few weeks will announce the seguing of a name orchestra.

Bob Silverman, WBAI's sales manager, says this type of programming is opening many agency doors. Columbia Records and Benson & Hedges cigarets are recent accounts. In the past, FM outlet advertisers were primarily from hi-fi records, tape and equipment outfits. Nowadays agencies are buying time for motion picture campaigns, imported beer and air travel and other transportation, book publishers, imported goods, brokerage houses and other advertisers catering to discriminating listeners.

WBAI is planning stereophonic broadcasting on one of its multiplex channels shortly or as soon as stereo adapters for present FM receivers are available to consumers.

Currently there are 16 FM stations operating or authorized in the New York metropolitan area. Five applications are pending for two vacant channels.

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau's latest reports on feature films and their competition covers 120 cities. Each week, the 10 top-rated features in a particular city will be rotated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained from a multiplicity of station and other data.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

See It Now

"See It Now" hit a new plateau as the top documentary series on video last Sunday afternoon (30) when it explored the hazards of nuclear fallout. It was a frank, awesome wrapup of the chances of mankind's survival in this atomic age and no viewer, of whatever political persuasion, could remain complacent under the impact of this 90-minute stanza. The show had double significance in view of the Rusians' decision the following day to unilaterally suspend all A-bomb testing.

The Ed Murrow-Fred Friendly staff presented the case for and against the continuation of atomic bomb tests in the form of a dilemma with biological and political implications that were literally deadly. On the one hand, the risk to man's basic germ cells from atomic fallout was conceded by all sides. On the other hand, the military risks of suspending further research in atomic weapons were given its due weight by Government spokesman. "See It Now" made every effort at objectivity in presenting the pros and the cons, the sheer weight of the scientists' testimony and testtube evidence of the future medical horrors facing the human species weighted the show on the side of halting the atomic bomb race. As Murrow put it, mankind "is shooting craps with fallout."

Basically, the show was an illustrated debate between the Atomic Energy Commission, in the person of its science member, Dr. Willard C. Libby, and a large group of independent scientists, represented by geneticist Dr. Hermann J. Muller and chemist Dr. Linus Pauling. Both Muller and Pauling stressed the cumulative danger of raising the radiation level of the atmosphere by more atomic testing, while Libby maintained that the current level fallout was a "tolerable" risk in view of world politics and the benefits to be derived from peaceful use of atomic power.

Murrow handled Libby forthrightly and the latter did not make the best impression with his glib brushoff of the fallout problem. At one point, in fact, Murrow cracked: "Dr. Libby, you don't seem to be concerned with the fallout danger?" Libby denied this, but proceeded to scare the wits out of viewers by advising everyone to get a geiger counter, a battery-operated radio and a refuge as the best way to beat the atomic bomb hazard. It was a virtual concession that an atomic war was inevitable and the only thing to be done was to dig in.

The illustrative pictorial material included several atomic mushroom cloudbursts, which were more or less familiar, and some microscopic views of cells damaged by excessive radiation, which were entirely new and harrowing. Another excellent sequence covered the underground explosion of a bomb in a Nevada mine, a shot which supported Dr. Libby's evaluation of the atom's peacetime value. Sort of in passing, Libby also revealed that the U. S. was the "hottest" spot in the world with even the fallout from the Russian bombs concentrating in this part of the northern hemisphere.

Also participating directly and indirectly in the show's fateful argument were the Japanese scientist who examined the crew of the Japanese fishing boat, "The Lucky Dragon," after it was dusted with fallout; and various scientists engaged in determining the level of strontium 90 in the atmosphere.

There can hardly be a more important show for television.

Chevy Show

Ethel Merman took over the Dinah Shore Show for one frame on Sunday (29). However, it wasn't very clear what name the layout should have gone under—the Jack Paar Show or the Polly Bergen Show. Both these personalities appeared to have more time on camera than Miss Merman.

But even little bit of Merman is a rewarding occasion. She deemed to dominate despite her paucity of time before the lens. She booms out her numbers and seems to indicate who's boss around here just with a few well chosen songs.

Although individual turns were good, the overall layout lacked cohesion. It was one of those every-man-for-himself affairs.

Miss Merman, aside from her own turns, duetted mainly with Miss Bergen, a versatile performer. But it's Miss Merman who dominates. Whether doing a rib of Mary Martin or a Judy Garland medley, she gives out heartily and unstintingly.

Miss Bergen, with a constant tendency to overact, and Jack Paar did work that they would ordinarily do on their own show, and it turned out fairly well. The "Dragnet" bit by Paar and Genevieve, a regular on the Paar show, had an essentially funny situation that didn't quite make it.

Al Kelly seemed to know what he was doing with his doubletalk bits. He was off and on in two fasties.

Andy Williams' songs came off well. Jose.

Eye On New York

Bill Leonard's Sunday pre-noon WCBS closeup titled "Eye On New York" was more eye-on-the-Brussels Fair, with a footnote eye on the new automobile models and stylings. Time cover architect Edward Stone, who designed the U. S. Pavilion in Brussels, and Grover Whalen, an old World's Fair man from 'way back in 1939-40, were good subjects interlarded with Jean Dalrymple's informative reprise of the artistic and show biz elements and Belgian Tourist Commission headman in North America, P. A. DeMaerel, on the Cook's tourist pitch. Latter was wise in trying to offset the "sellout" and "tough to get accommodations" aura which already has been overaccented.

Miss Dalrymple revealed Westinghouse is sponsoring Benny Goodman; NBC will bankroll an original Gian-Carlo Menotti opera; Magna is donating "South Pacific" in Todd-AO; U. S. Commissioner to the Belgium Fair Howard S. Cullman has arranged for "Carousel" and hopes that "Sunrise At Campobello," with the original Broadway cast, might be flown over for the three "American days" (July 3-4-5). DeMaerel was more conservative than Leonard and estimated 500,000 U. S. tourists would visit Belgium this year.

Wide Wide World

Live cameras of "Wide Wide World" Sunday afternoon (30) focussed on the story of railroading. An NBC-TV staff, headed by emcee Dave Garroway, probably did an interesting wrapup of their subject as far as train fanciers were concerned. For viewers were whisked to such points as a Missouri whistle stop, a freight classification yard, New York's Pennsylvania station and a stretch of the Western Pacific's tracks in Sierra Valley, Cal., among other places.

Such a tour was strictly a surface, sightseeing inspection and no attempt was made to go beneath to examine the railroads' widely publicized financial plight. Program's non-controversial aspects no doubt stemmed from the apparent desire of sponsor General Motors to maintain an impartial position in light of the fact that trucks and passenger cars are the railroads' major competitors. Gilb.

Hy Gardner Calling

N. Y. Herald Tribune columnist-panelist Hy Gardner, whose split-screen telephonic interviews may have pioneered the "in depth" techniques of Mike Wallace, John Wingate et al., had former N. Y. Mayor Bill O'Dwyer and Polly Bergen as his interviewees over DuMont (N. Y.) last Wednesday (26) night. That metropolitan indie has been fulfilling its claim to "the lively channel 5" slogan with a number of offbeat programming items, Gardner among them. O'Dwyer ducked any opinions on the current N. Y. political scene but was not unsubtle about how his administration handled crime, both adult and juvenile delinquency, with accent on a stronger police enforcement.

Miss Bergen's opinions on femme singers on tv was on-the-button, to wit, there is a greater shortage of behind-the-camera creative talents (writers particularly) than competent performers. Miss Bergen might also have mentioned that what's opposite any particular show is a factor. Both were good interviews, in pro style, with Gardner's real-life secretary, Marilyn Boshnick, an efficient and telegenic assist. DuMont spotlight ads herald Benny Goodman & Scott Weldon, Pvt. Elvis Presley and Bob Harrison (publisher of Confidential), Mr. & Mrs. Ed Sullivan and Mr. & Mrs. Steve Allen for the next four weeks. Abel.

THE CASE FOR THE COLLEGE
With Nathan M. Pusey, President of Harvard College; guests
Executive Producer: Laurence O. Pratt
Producer: William F. Suchmann
60 Mins., Friday (28) 9:00 p.m.
HARVARD COLLEGE
CBS Radio (recorded)

Nil mortalibus arduum est (nothing is too difficult for mortals to accomplish) notably if they are Harvard men. If this program doesn't make former Harvard men shell out with moola for a much needed cause, nothing will.

Harvard College, a big time college, played the big time circuit in big time fashion when it served up "The Case for the College," on CBS-Radio, and it marked a first in the turbulent history of the fifth estate. Never before had a college sponsored a major league network air show. It cost the mortarboard set $16,000 of which $6,000 went into production costs. It was certainly worth the dough. Harvard handled the 60-minute stanza like a Palace pro with confidence and pride. It behaved like a venerable uncle who suddenly disovers he has bankroll trouble and must make a touch of relatives he hadn't gandered for some semesters. Harvard asked its far-flung alumni to help raise some $82,500,000 in a drive billed as A Program for Harvard College. To date some $35,000,000 in cash and pledges was assured.

William F. Suchmann did a svelte job of production and Poet Archibald MacLeish's editing of various tapes calls for a loud bravo. The commercials" delivered by President Nathan M. Pusey of Harvard were in the soft-sell category, almost in the subliminal perception technique, but they must have penetrated the minds and hearts of listeners.

There was talent galore with savvy speakers (alumni, students and teachers) on not too long, but just right, with their urbane utterances on what Harvard meant to them. Voices included former Harvard prexy emeritus James B. Conant; Sec. of Defense Neil H. McElroy; Sen. John F. Kennedy; Charles H. Malik, foreign minister of Lebanon; Devereux Josephs; Leonard Bernstein; Howard Lindsay; John P. Marquand; John Mason Brown; Tom Lehrer and Alex M. White. Harvard faculty includes Prexy Pusey, Dean McGeorge Bundy and Profs. Samuel H. Beer, Louis F. Fleser, Samuel A. Stouffer, Edward M. Purcell, Harry Levin, Howard Mumford Jones and G. Wallace Woodworth. Barbara Ward, British economist and editor, also made a beautiful pitch. Showbiz bits by Bernstein and Lehrer, former Harvard men, were delightful romps.

Students, like their elders, behaved admirably in front of the tape recorders. Their conversations were sharp; in fact, there was nothing dopey about the hour-long tour of various classrooms, Hasty Pudding Club rehearsal, Harvard Crimson editorial room, Harvard Glee Club rehearsal, morning service at chapel the eavesdropping on Robert Frost's talkfest with students and the flirting bit between a Harvard lad and Radcliffe femme.

Standout was the editing job done by production staff, particularly in segues of conversations of freshmen on the college grounds. Sophisticated gags and lyrics about Harvard abounded throughout the painless pitch for greenbacks to improve the lot of teachers and education in general. For example, there was Marquand's crack that "if you've ever been to Harvard, you will never be allowed to forget it" and the Bernstein-Alan Jay Lerner lyrics reminded Harvard men "that's the curse we share, the cross we have got to bear, for our indubitable, irrefutable, inimitable, indomitable, incalculable superiority." This material interwoven with the more academic made the Harvard eggheads sound as provocative as peelers.

STRANGE INTERLUDE
Writer: Eugene O'Neill
With Diane Cilento, William Sylvester, David Knight, Catherine Lacey, Oliver Johnston, Noel Willman
Producer: John Jacobs
90 Mins., Sun., 8:30 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

Eugene O'Neill's mammoth five-hour play, cut down to three hours and split into two instalments came to British viewers via the state web with all its many complexities. The first 90 minutes of "Strange Interlude" proved heavy going, but was nevertheless a compelling production which maintained gripping undertones that tided over the dull patches. John Jacobs did much to enhance his production by dubbing revealing thought speaking voices over expressive closeups.

The first half of the production has taken O'Neill's character, Nina, played by Diane Cilento, through several frustrating periods of her miserable life. Her father (Oliver Johnston) has earned her frigidity because of his jealousy and intervention into her intended marriage to a man who was subsequently killed, and has himself died. And Nina, seeking happiness in a baby married a man only to find that there was insanity in his family. She doesn't dare bear his child, but has a child by a doctor friend.

For all its morbidness, the play had real emotional values which were strongly brought to life by the excellent acting of the entire cast and the fine production. In such an imaginative and bold presentation, however, more attention should have been paid to quality of the telerecording, which marred the offering because of its coarse grain. Bary.

A MAN'S WOMAN
With Janette Scott, Eddie Byrne, John Cairney, May Craig, Peter MacKriel, Larry Burns, Jack Cunningham, Joan Phillips, Harry Hutchinson
Producer: George More O'Ferrall
Writer: Paul Vincent Carroll
75 Mins., Sun., 9:35 p.m.
ABC Network, from Manchester.

Based on an Irish play which ran for a few weeks in a London club theatre, "A Man's World" is a bitter little piece which is a variation on the theme that it's better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all. Paul Vincent Carroll is a distinguished Irish writer but this entry is strictly for the woman's magazine market. It owes very little either to native Irish wit or Irish passion and, without much loss, could have equally well been staged in any other setting.

Eddie Byrne, a very fine actor, was unusually glowering and subdued in the role of a rather irritable farmer in his early forties who falls in love, for the first time, with the young mistress of a worthless brother who has got mixed up in the "trouble." H's other brothers also fancy the young woman but she prefers the elder one until her former lover returns. Janette Scott, who is passing rapidly through the channels that led from child actress to adult, was a shade too young and unsophisticated for her role but she made the best of the few moving moments allowed to her.

John Cairney as the scapegoat brother and May Craig as the mother offered good support and most of the limited humor came from Larry Burns, as a hack driver whose motto is to love women but never get mixed up with them. Byrne made much of the final tragic moments but, mainly, the artists were at a disadvantage through the author's unimaginative dialog and George More O'Ferrall's stereotyped direction. The usual dependable Bertram Tyrer added to the debit side of this disappointing program by providing some outdoor sets which appeared as phoney as double-talk by a leprechaun. Rich.

JUCHTEN UND LAVENDEL
(Leather and Lavender)
With Albrecht Schoenhals, Sigrid Marquardt, Hermann Lenschau, Hans Reiser, Elfie Ott, Frances Martin, Ernst Stankowski, Theo Hermann, Anneliese Born, Starlet Choir, NDR Dance Orch under Alfred Hansen
Producer: North West German Radio
Director: John Olden
Writers: Helmut Kaeutner, Kurd E. Heyne
80 Mins.; Sat., 8:35 p.m.
West German TV, from Hamburg.

This little German 75-minute musical won special attention long before it was even shown on the local tele. Interest was created via two facts: Helmut Kaeutner, today a prominent German pic director, co-authored it more than 20 years ago when he was still a cabaretist. It was forbidden by "higher command" here in 1937, shortly after its preem in Leipzig and performances also in Duesseldorf and Munich. As the word goes, the Nazi cultural authorities objected to the unconstrained English way of life which allegedly was glorified. Be that as it may, piece's score got lost then and the whole thing fell into oblivion. Not so long ago, however, a music arranged for the piano was discovered somewhere and this music reportedly served this German tv presentation as basis.

"Leather (more accurately: Muscovy leather) and Lavender" has its locality in London in 1840, at a time when the whole city was making preparations for the wedding of Queen Victoria with Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. Action takes place on London's Bond Street, then in the fashion shop of "Keep & Smiling" and Tom's sculptor's studio. It all centers on a mysterious jewel robbery. Latter's traces lead to the fashion shop and, at Tom's, the thief is finally caught. Romantic interest, of course, is also provided and same goes for several dance and song duo sequences which, a definite plus, have nice swinging appeal.

In all, however, this can't be placed in the category of "sensational discoveries." It's pleasant entertainment of the average type, seen and forgotten.

The score itself deserves a fine classification. The tunes (all very melodious) are easy on the ear. Helped by partly amusing lyrics, they are even of refreshing quality. The dance scenes are nicely staged. Too bad that the story is a bit too much on the mediocre side—otherwise it would have been a more substantial treat.

Under John Olden's adequate direction, the performers come along with ditto performances. Cast, incidentally, includes a number of locally well-known names. This particularly applies to vet-actor Albrecht Schoenhals who despite his 70 years still looks mighty attractive, his actress-wife Anneliese Born, good-looking Hans Reiser, Frances Martin and Sigrid Marquardt. Lensing and other technical credits are average. Hans.

SAMMY
With Anthony Newley
Writer: Ken Hughes
Producer: Ken Hughes
40 mins., Wed., 8:50 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

Scripter Ken Hughes has turned out a masterful piece of work with this one-man play. His character, Sammy, is given three hours in which to raise $560 to pay off his debts to a strong arm bookie or wind up in hospital. The action takes place in the confines of Sammy's small apartment with the telephone taking the place of several characters. The action, although set in such confines, is continually gripping, has its full share of pathos, humor and drama and maintains a constant atmosphere near breaking point tension. Full honors go to Anthony Newley for a moving and understanding performance, which was strongly assisted by his natural flair for comedy. This offering, with slight dialog and setting alterations, is a natural for America.

Starting from broke, Sammy Ellerman, through numerous telephone calls sets about raising the cash by slick business transactions, and without any goods. He achieves this by playing his clients against each other. As the cash total rises so does the tension. To raise the last few bucks he sells the valuable chair in which his mother died. Finally, with all the money on the way the race against time before the toughs arrive results in almost unbearable tension. Final twist to the plot gives the offering a credible and neat conclusion. Bary.

Butler to WISN

Milwaukee, April 1.

James T. Butler, former station manager of WIRL, Peoria, Ill., has been appointed top aide to John B. Soell in the managing of the WISN Division of the Hearst Corp.

Soell is v.p. and manager of Milwaukee indie stations, WISN and WISN-TV.

seems even funnier from here

Take Danny Thomas. He has been a funny fellow for a long time. But it wasn't until he appeared on the CBS Television Network that a nationwide audience laughed him into the Top Ten—where he has been ever since.

Is he funnier than he used to be? Perhaps. For nothing stimulates a performer like applause. And programs in almost every category get the most applause on the CBS Television Network.

Take "Gunsmoke," television's highest rated Western.

Take "G. E. Theater," television's highest rated weekly drama.

Take "Alfred Hitchcock Presents," television's highest rated mystery.

Take "I've Got a Secret," television's highest rated quiz show.

Take the four "Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz Shows," television's highest rated "special" broadcasts this season.

And take the average program on the network's schedule.

This schedule has consistently won television's largest average nighttime audience in the 65 consecutive Nielsen Reports issued between July 1955 and now.*

country. They are part of an organization numbering 32. This includes nine "screeners" who pass on each toy to be used on the syndication belt. Toys undergo severe testing, and only a minimum number are able to make the "Romper" grade. Currently there are 35 such items that have passed muster—from rhythm band instruments to rubber balls. All are available at local stores. The toy element is separate and apart from local sponsors. These number from one way up to eight participants. There are quite a few regional sponsors or large outlets such as Walgreen Drugs, Newberry's.

Frown on Contests

Commercials are limited to three to four for a half-hour version—the most oft-used format. A full hour gets up to six blurbs, and there are restrictions both on the number of commercials and the text, as per agreement with Romper Room Inc. There is also a verbal agreement made with stations that puts a nix on contests or gimmicks, though some creep in from time to time. Answering of all mail from viewers (written, of course, by their elders) is a must; this is done on "Romper Room" letterheads, supplied by the packager and which bear no addresses or names, merely the signature—a Jack-in-the-Box, the show's visual theme.

In the survey by VARIETY of local live tv programming, quite a few references show up for "Romper Room." One of them is significant. In Indianapolis, WFBM-TV, as of the survey period, said it had no local live show of half-hour length except "Romper Room."

In Phoenix, Ariz. KVAR selected its "Romper Room" as tops in a specific category (children's shows). This one runs a full hour, from 11 to noon, and was launched in November, 1957. In Charleston, W. Va., WCHS-TV, naming its top live shows, lists the "Romper" on WSAZ as the leading competition.

Among the Westinghouse stations, the "Romper" of WJZ-TV, Baltimore, homebase of the syndication and the pioneer show, runs from 10 to 11 with the original "Miss Nancy" specializing in "reading, writing and revelry."

The "Romper Room" station lineup includes:

WTEN-TV, Albany; KGGM-TV, Albuquerque; WJZ-TV, Baltimore; WABI-TV, Bangor, Me.; WBRZ-TV, Baton Rouge, La.; WHDH-TV, Boston; WGR-TV, Buffalo; WGN-TV, Chicago, WTVN-TV, Columbus; WFAA-TV, Dallas; WOC-TV, Davenport, Ia.; WTVP-TV, Decatur, Ill.; KBTV-TV, Denver; WHO-TV, Des Moines; WWJ-TV, Detroit; WSJV-TV, Elkhart, Ind.; KSFA-TV, Ft. In Baltimore, WJZ-TV has "Romper Room" (see separate story for the "RR" roundup nationally) for an hour among its leading kid-appeal programs.

In San Francisco, KPIX rests its "kid case" on "Captain Fortune's Saturday show from 7:30 to 11:45 a.m. Dubbed the "Bay Area Pied Piper" by local newspapermen, it's described as a "flexible" kideo varying from week to week, with plot line either live or via film especially shot. ATV are based on a potential revenue of $28,000,000 for each of the networks, roughly comparable to the amount currently being netted by Granada. In its first financial year ABC showed a loss of $28,000 and in its second year (to March 1957) it is expected to show a profit of $840,000. For the current year the profit is expected to soar to $5,600,000 and a year later it is forecast it will reach $7,000,000.

The survey, which illustrates the countrywide growth of commercial tv with its constantly growing audiences, also spotlights the continuous expansion in advertising revenues. For the current year the total is around $90,000,000 and this is expected to top $100,000,000 next year.

10% of Total Ad Budget

In an appraisal of the success of tv advertising, the booklet stresses the influence of tv as an advertising medium which is already taking about 10% of the country's advertising (against 12.1% in the U.S.). New products, they say, have been launched with results that have not been equalled by any other medium. Existing products have had their sales doubled, even trebled, by judicious and well-timed commercials.

The growth of advertising expenditure on tv could have a disastrous effect on other media, with the national press as "the most likely sufferer." The survey names three national dailies which are already struggling and though powerful forces are rallying to their aid "it would seem that finally one or more may be forced out of existence."

The breakdown of advertising revenues is based on figures compiled by Media Records, but it is pointed out that these cannot always take notice of bonus spots, special rates and so on, which are a matter of negotiation between the network and the advertising agents. The figures, however, are considered to be accurate within 10% to 12%.

Under the heading "Economics and Politics" the pamphlet suggests that most of the original backers of commercial tv must be greatly impressed with the growth in revenues. This, however, must be put in proper perspective. In the first place, expenses have grown even more remarkably than revenue. From an initial annual total of $8,400,000 expenses have grown to around $56,000,000 annually, largely due to extended program times. Tv, it is noted, has got itself caught up in the "Alice in Wonderland" economics of the film industry. Accordingly, it finds it necessary to pay "the gentlemen described as lighting cameramen" about $140 a week for 52 weeks a year. Then, buying the best talent is an expensive, though necessary, business. Add to that, it states, the entertainment industry's noted ability of living like kings and paying (dividends) like paupers and soaring optimism returns sadly much nearer to earth.

The future, it opines, is likely to bring even more problems. Operating licenses expire in 1964 and there is far from certainty they will be automatically extended. Another worry must be the probability of a Socialsit Government after the next election and they may well decide to "hang some chains about it." The worst threat, it observes, seems to live in semi-official prospects to levy an advertising tax.

there are 263 women or 4.2% of the total, according to AWRT, who hold "the highest executive position in administration and or management."

(2) Other station exec posts held by femmes show continuity in lead with 725 (11.7% of total), and traffic director in second place, with 663 (or 10.7%).

(3) On-Air broadcasters are 539 with 365 in radio and 174 in tv. (4) 7% of wome nradio-tv station employees handle more than one job. (5) Total average length of service for distaffers in the industry is 1.64 years.

Survey was coordinated by Marion Annenberg, of New Orleans' WDSU Radio-TV, and she points out that, while revealing "encouraging picture of job opportunities in the radio and tv field, it is not a complete industry survey as it does not include networks, package firms, agencies and other allied firms."

Jeannie Carson

by ardent fans who thought she might have included a trip on her last visit to London.

Huge banners proclaimed "Welcome, Jeannie!" at the outposts of the town. Many stores and firms gave their workers time off to catch a view of Miss Carson.

One townsman described the visit as "just like English Royalty."

Hundreds of women gave up their shopping trips to stand for hours waiting on her arrival by car. Many had bought gifts for the actress as a souvenir of Dunfermline.

Actress was received officially by the town's Provost (civic head), 73-year-old John Allan, at the civic chambers, and signed her name in the honored visitors' book as "Jeannie Carson, Dunfermline."

She was whisked through the town by limousine, and received a rapturous welcome from jam-packed streets. She also visited the Andrew Carnegie birthplace memorial, a hospital, and the historic 800-year-old Dunfermline Abbey, principal showplace of the district.

Provost Allan told Miss Carson: "Thanks to you, our town is famous all over the world. We are grateful to you."

Bagpipers played "Scotland the Brave" and other stirring tunes as she toured the town and spoke to residents. When she left, she was loaded with gifts of damask and silk, rayon and linen, Scotch whisky and guide-books.

It was proof indeed of the modern power of international tv.

Jeannie Carson is set to return to Scotland April 12 for exterior lensing of new Rank pic "Rockets Galore" on Hebridean isle of Barra.

She was last in Scotland two years ago as star of the Emile Littler musical "Love from Judy."

Sheldon

WABD noontime interview segment and for teenagers and parents ("big sister has something to say about buying for the children too") his afternoon "Studio Party." Also for adults, such radio as Tex & Jinx, Ken Banghart, Jack Lacey. He's using the same patter as he expands his distribution into other markets, like Boston, buying major kid-appeal daytime tv personalities.

How Sheldon got into the business is one of those once-in-a-lifetime situations that every performer dreams of. Couple of Brooklyn doctors who used to feed their child patients lollypops after each visit came up with the idea of putting vitamins in lollypop form after a mother gave out with the old saw about "if he'd only eat his vitamins the way he eats his lollypop!" Doctors brought in a chemist, and after some two years, worked out the proper formula, eliminating the bad taste, extraneous elements and narrowing down the contents to Vitamins B1 and B12.

Having gotten to that point, they began to think about how to market it. They knew nothing, by their own admission, about marketing, but thought of Sheldon as the right vehicle through whom to reach their customers, the children, on the basis of Sheldon's track record over the years with kiddie products. They approached Sheldon through his old associate, Nat Schepps, about a year ago.

Sheldon & Schepps began studying the idea and the process, going over all the ethical drug angles, Government regulations, competitive situation, packaging and manufacturing problems, et al. Then, they came to an agreement with the originators of the product. The doctors and chemists would operate the manufacturing end, while Sheldon & Schepps would handle sales and distribution. They formed Edro Products (based on their wives' first names), hired the Cohen & Ayleshire agency (formerly Harry B. Cohen), and by Christmas were ready to go. Sheldon kicked it off with WABD's all-day Christmas cartoon show, took on four weeks alone, started spreading the commercials to his daytime colleagues elsewhere, and was off to the races with a winner.

NABET Prepping Retaliation On ABC Radio Outs

In anticipation of what it figures are almost certain firings, the National Assn. of Braodcast Employees & Technicians is going to repeat 1956 history, and slap ABC with a "work restriction" edict. Move is against axings of technicians in the wake of the general retrenchment of ABC Radio, in which some 10 to 14 non-technical employees (including salesmen) already have been given notice.

NABET's own estimates of the number from its ranks due to be ousted vary widely. Without any actual word from ABC so far, union figures as few as four men could be put on notice or as many as 25.

NABET's intended restrictions are designed to either prevent firings or insure the return of fired employees after a short time. Demand by NABET against ABC Radio will be for "adequate relief" for those employees remaining. NABET will tell the network that it "cannot countenance cuts if people in other areas are working excessive overtime." Excessive overtime, according to the union, will be work of more than 44 hours a week.

In 1956, the union points out, ABC had a big firing but similar "work restrictions" forced the web to bring back 20 of the 30 men fired.

As a rule, radio engineers, coming as they do from an older medium, are themselves older than tv technicians and engineers, and have a great deal more seniority. NABET also intends insuring that anyone let go will be from the bottom of the network's overall seniority ladder, that includes video. Hence, a removal of tv technicians at bottom seniority will necessitate ABC-TV using older radio technicians in their places. The union believes that the 50 and 60-year-old radio technicians, at least in ABC's way of thinking, might prove too old to push cameras, etc., in keeping up with the supercharged production of tv shows.

only for Chicago but for New York as well. For several candid reasons:

(1) "Everyone knows our climate stinks. Nobody in his right mind, save dyed-in-the-wool Chicagoans, wants to stay more than one winter or summer in Chicago. They don't even want to stay in New York. If a New York star, producer, or writer can finagle his way to the West Coast, he'll do it with great imagination and energy.

(2) "We have talent, but there isn't the tremendous amount of it, and great diversity of it, that exists on the East and West Coasts. Much of our best talent has had to leave because they are tired of starving here."

(3) The ad agencies, even the Chicago agencies, don't want shows to originate from here. "Our agency boys like to travel. They love those expense accounts."

Listener's quote, from a study by Motivation Analysis, Inc. which showed C-O stations are more authoritative than their leading Independent competition... and as a consequence, their commercials are more believable.

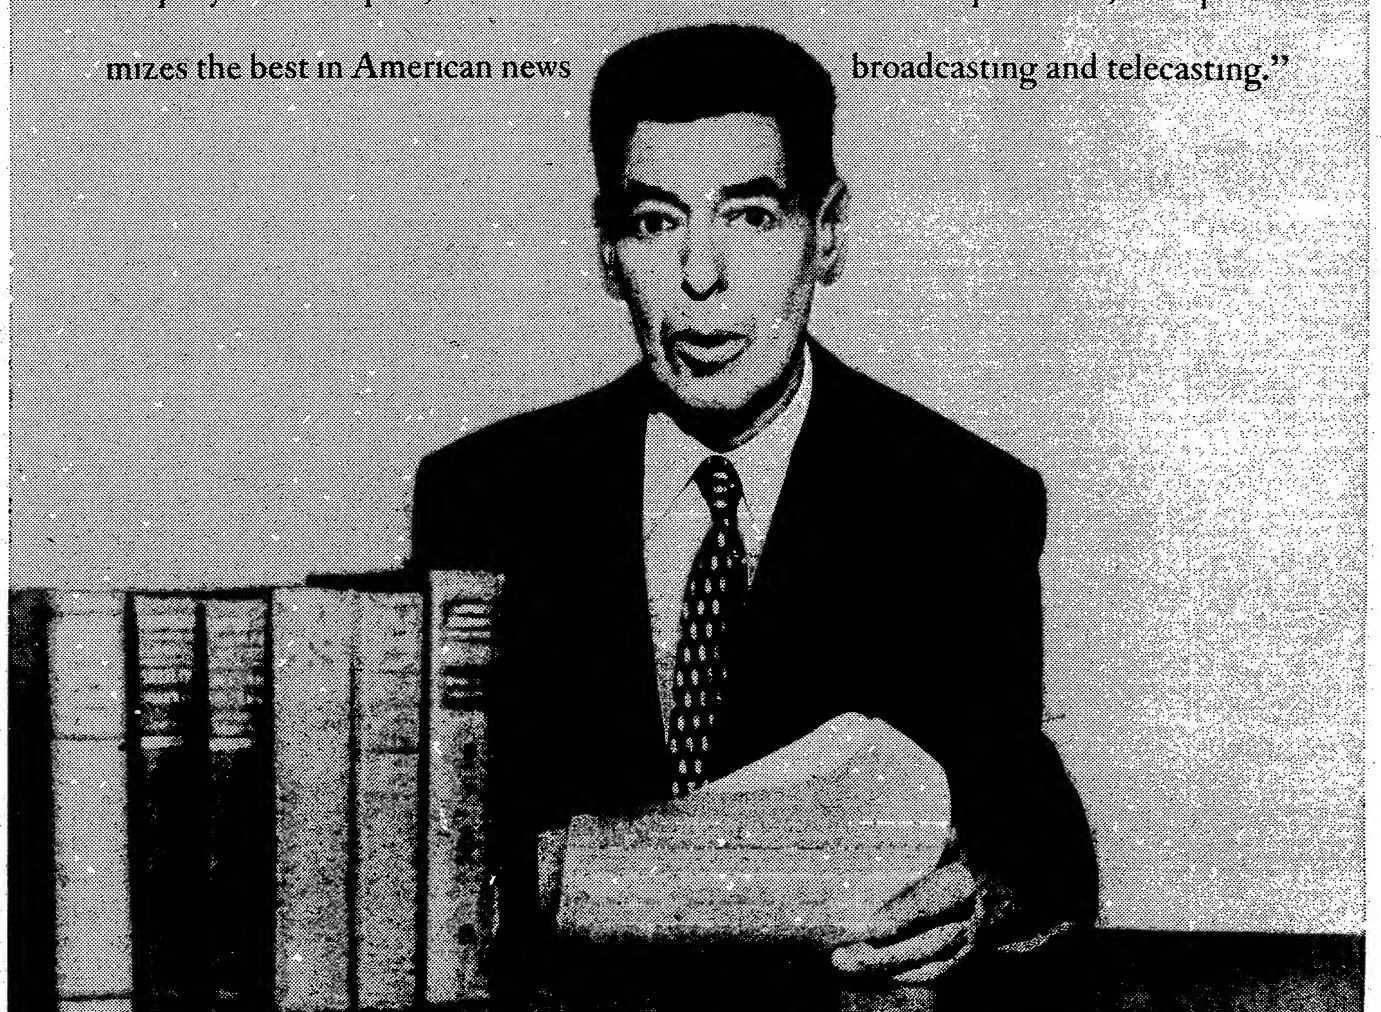
DuPont Citation to CLIFTON UTLEY of WMAQ and WNBQ, Chicago:

"Cited for his authoritative, intelligent, responsible and literate reporting and analysis of public affairs in both radio and television. Insistent always on distinguishing between fact and inference, he couples fluent delivery with minute detail and orderly sequence, and the result is an analysis of current affairs that flows in logical order from primary thesis to conclusion. Refusing to oversimplify the complex, or to over-inflate the trivial and ephemeral, he epitomizes the best in American news broadcasting and telecasting."



WMAQ and WNBQ salute Clifton Utley on this memorable achievement in the field of broadcasting journalism. It is added to the long list of awards, longer than that of any other Chicago station, presented to WMAQ and WNBQ in recognition of their regular offerings—which have set the standard for entertainment and service in the Midwest.

META, and perhaps top echelon administrators of Catholic parochial schools in the five boroughs.

Meanwhile, in Albany, The Regents established two new committees to aid in the upcoming tv deal on WOR-TV. A five-member committee from The Regents was chosen, consisting of Dr. T. Norman Hurd, Ithaca; as chairman; Chester H. Lang, Schenectady; Dr. Dominick F. Maurillo, Brooklyn; Charles W. Millard Jr., Buffalo, and Edward M. M. Warburg, N. Y. C.

An advisory council on educational tv was also established with Jacob L. Holtzmann of N. Y. C. as chairman. Holtzmann, who spearheaded the campaign to lease WOR-TV's facilities, steps out as a Regent this week, his term having expired. Other advisers on the council will be announced shortly.

Gray is hoping that The Regents will assign a knowledgeable educational-tv head to integrate the entire works. To represent the station he has asked Dr. Claire Corbin, assistant professor at Fordham U, and a capable freelance worker in tv-radio, as liaison with the N. Y. group assigned to actual programming of the in-and-out of school features. Gray will also choose a WOR-TV production man to work with the school people.

Gray made it clear that it was not the intention of WOR-TV to lease any additional time for educational programs. Only the station's daytime hours would be available and that its evening hours would remain commercial. Several educators, highly optimistic about the WOR-TV deal, thought that in the event it is a signal success, the Board of Regents might approach officials of Channel 9 with an offer to either buy the station or lease more time in the evening. WOR-TV said it would nix such an offer.

It was learned yesterday (1) that Dr. Jansen had detached Dr. Maurice U. Ames, principal of the Frank D. Whalen Jr. H. S., Bronx, and a former supervisor of science for the Board of Education from active duty in order to embark on a cross-country survey of key educational-tv centers under a grant from the Ford Foundation.

Dr. Ames, who received his M.A. from Columbia U and his Ph.D. from N.Y.U., will start his country-wide survey soon after the Easter Holiday. He will spend approximately two months on his in-depth survey of the potentials of tv as an educational medium. Undoubtedly, his findings will have considerable bearing on the role the N.Y.C. Board of Education will play in the transmission of in-school programs over WOR-TV.

K&E Boss

in their minds is the advertiser, of course."

Cox said that he had called on the principals of several other large agencies before addressing the management group, and "two ideas came through in every instance. First this problem of inflexibility and the ill will it is causing. And, second, the impression of extravagant talent costs."

Cox said that the "poor little million-dollar advertiser," the institutional advertiser and even some major consumer advertisers are being barred from television by its inflexibility. "Why shouldn't the network provide the editorial and let him provide the advertising? NBC, of course, has made a fine start in this direction. You still have 'Tonight' and 'Today.' I am told that 'Wagon Train' can be bought in 13 half-hour segments. And there is an attractive deal on 'Suspicion' for the spring and summer months.

"But is this enough? What I am trying to say is that network television can never achieve its great possibilities as a marketing force until it becomes an instrument to serve all the country's major advertisers, and until it adapts itself to the business needs of business."

On the issue of program control, Cox declared that "eventually you must truly control your programming. The road ahead does not lie in the direction of advertisers or their agencies developing their own properties for the air." The agencies' "overwhelming concern should be to plan well and buy well for our clients—and then to polish and perfect our skills as advertising men until our commercials sparkle with creative salesmanship . . . We look to the day when all shows, regardless of who originates them, will be bought through the networks—and when editorial responsibility will rest squarely in your hands."

Mutual Affiliates Elect Vic Diehm

Washington, April 1.

Victor D. Diehm, prexy of WACL, Hazelton, Pa., was elected chairman of the Mutual affiliates at last week's advisory committee meeting, held in the capital for the first time. Diehm succeeds Willard Deason, head of KDET, Austin, Tex.

Huddle served two-fold purpose of electing officers and rallying the affiliates around Mutual's recently elected executive committee. Held on eve of annual Radio-TV Correspondents dinner, it also served to introduce Mutual reps to government biggies and Congressional reps attending the brass-plated fete.

Innovation at huddle was election of George C. Hatch, KALL, Salt Lake City, as group's first resolutions chairman, an office created to help coordinate activities of the 13-man advisory committee. Carter C. Peterson, WCCP Savannah, Ga. was elected vice-chairman, and Mike Layman, WSFC, Somerset, Ky., was named secretary.

Mutual officers, led by executive v.p. George Vogel, addressed meeting and asked ideas from affiliates. General satisfaction, put into formal resolution, was expressed with web's news-and-music format. Discussion centered around plans for strengthening and expanding news coverage. Other officers included following: Robert Hurleigh, Washington, v.p. and news chief; Roy Roberts, treasurer; Harold Wagner, program chief; Charles King, station relations director, and his assistant, Jack Irish; and Frank Erwin, director of cooperative programs.

Chas. Tranum, Hal Weaver Form Packaging Outfit

A talent agent and an ad agency executive have teamed to start a new tv production company, Weaver-Tranum Productions. Principals are Chuck Tranum, prexy of Charles B. Tranum Inc., the talent-model placement house, and Hal Weaver, tv director at the Monroe F. Dreher ad agency.

According to Tranum, outfit will package both live and film properties. First package, he says, is already off the blueprint board.

which ran last fall at 6:30 to 7 a.m. cross-the-board and this spring is airing at 7 to 7:30. Helen Macy, director of Heritage, said she anticipates a wider book-buying audience of the calibre of the "Sunrise Semester" viewers by virtue of the Sunday afternoon exposure. Dr. Zulli will use the same set as he does on "Sunrise" and the same format. Only difference is that NYU won't participate and the show will be sponsored—"Sunrise" must be sustaining under terms of the WCBS-TV agreement with NYU.

Deal was set via the Franklin Spier agency. Taking bows on the sale, reportedly the first of its kind, is Sherman Adler, account exec with the CBS-TV Spot Sales office in N. Y.

portant nighttime segments to more venturesome thrusts toward "uplift" programming," or at the least to the westerns, which are still a hot tv network commodity.

But the game shows apparently have no boundaries and they're now spilling over into the nighttime areas. Witness, for example, last Saturday's premiere of "Top Dollar" on CBS-TV, under Brown & Williamson's sponsor auspices. Then there's the upcoming "ESP" half-hour game show, played with a deck of cards and supposedly extolling the virtues of extrasensory perception, which Chesebrough-Pond's has bought for nighttime showcasing. Standing in the wings and ready to go last night (Tues.) 8:30 slot on CBS-TV was the Jan Murray-packaged "Wingo," played with tiles. And Liggett & Myers is interested in a French import, "Brain Or Brawn," as its replacement for "Dragnet" Thursday nights on NBC-TV.

Next season—and what remains of this season—they'll be all over the daytime skeds, with "How Do You Rate" already bowing this week. This one's a psychological game-quiz. CBS is playing around with a new Goodson-Todman entry, "Play Your Hunch," to go into the Garry Moore morning slot. All these, of course, are independent of such existing fare as "Dotto," "Treasure Hunt," "Price Is Right" (which get double exposure nighttime and daytime), "Tic Tac Dough" (also doing the two-way stretch); the longrunning "Truth or Consequences," "Name That Tune," "To Tell the Truth," and the host of others. And last night (Tues.) $64,000 Question" was to introduce its postcard game for viewer largesse.

It's estimated that, as of this week, there were no fewer than 30 game shows making the agency rounds in search of potential sponsors.

Reasoning of the client is understandable. The average game show is geared for low-cost-of-tv-living and can be brought in for $20,000—at the most $25,000. This reduces the cost-per-thousand hazard. Plus the fact that with a live entry, his worries about 26-week and 39-week firm commitments on a filmed show are at an end. This gives him flexibility to cancel when he wishes.

There's one other major factor, too. This has been the season of disillusionment for too many sponsors on sponsor identification with filmed shows, particularly on westerns, with or without a rating. (The "Restless Gun" client, even enjoying a way-up-there Nielsen and Trendex, would gladly dump half if someone else would step in.) With a live game show, he can have a continuing 30-minute exposure (via placards, banners, etc.) and enjoy the impact of a live commercial.

on subscription tv, he said "the only thing I know is what I have read in the trade press and in the newspapers and since that is one of the matters which I might be called upon to render a decision, again I would have to beg the question and say I would depend on the record."

Q. "Do you think that is a policy matter that should be decided by the Congress or do you think that it is a practical matter that should be decided by the Commission?"

A. "Well, I think that the Commission is probably within its rights . . . to make that decision, but I certainly think again that this is an arm of Congress, that this is a matter in which the Commission could well consult with the Congress."

On the question of multiple ownership, Cross said he would need more information before giving his views on whether five VHF stations is too many for one licensee. As for newspapers owning tv stations, he said it would depend on circumstances.

Q. "I think it is important that we find out from you some of your thinking. Do you think that multiple ownership would be an evil "

A. "Yes, but I have never been in a position of making a determination in that regard, so I haven't given it too much thought."

Q. "Can you think of a situation where it would be good if one man owned all the communications media in one great metropolitan area "

A. "No, I think that would be bad."

The Committee meets in executive session April 16 to consider the nomination. A recommendation to confirm is practically certain.

WABD

Sillman's variety show. But station felt that it had improved so much since the shaky premiere that it decided to keep it on.

Since the beginning of the season and also the beginning of extensive live on WABD, the DuMont Broadcasting key has retained Art Ford's Friday "Greenwich Village Party." The show received favorably by the critics at the very outset when it had a sponsor, has been riding sponsorless during its second 13 weeks, yet the station figures that somebody's going to come around with coin in time.

Lack of coin for local production has resulted in WABD having to "wing" (do without camera rehearsal) most of the time on its shows. But the local video disciplines are beginning to take hold and "winging" isn't quite the problem to WABD it once was, according to programmers there.

This working on a shoestring has had its benefits. An afternoon quiz, "Bingo-at-Home," is hot both with audience and advertisers and has since been sold by its producer in other local markets, and the original WABD live show, the late-night "Night Beat" interviews, is "okay" insofar as sponsors are concerned. (It has four out of six spots sold.)

Hy Gardner began a Wednesday prime time interview sesh a few weeks ago, and although it too is without full sponsor, station figures it's inexpensive and interesting enough to chance waiting for an indefinitely extended period for a sponsor to see that also.

Meantime, Gardner is carrying three spots a week, which WABD says are "program spots" and can be preempted for a regular bankroller.

60-Min. Shows

as an hour locationer dealing with the Florida sheriffs' files.

At ABC, where next fall's programming plans haven't crystallized to the point of the other webs, the hour series will play an important role. Web pioneered the hour programmer with its "Cheyenne," which has flirted around the Nielsen Top 10 all season this year. It made its biggest strides of the year with "Maverick." And with Warner Bros., creator of both shows, as its producing partner, there's no doubt that more hour programmers will be moved in.

If the hour programmers represent a safer bet for the networks in terms of more consistent entertainment and ratings, they represent a risk also in terms of lessening prestige and a declining training area for the medium's writers. Out of the hour anthologies have come some of tv's finest, most memorable moments, and some of its best contributions to the nation's arts via theatrical and motion picture versions of the original teleplays. It's a safe guess that the western or mystery programmer will neither produce such high spots nor such contributions.

Beyond this, the hour series represent some twists in production technique, particularly if they're on film, as most will be. Rather than one principal character, they need at least two in the case of weekly shows, as in the style of "Wagon Train" and "Maverick." That's because film production scheduling for an hour series with the same lead character and group of characters is so grueling that it requires some 50 to 52 weeks of actual filming to complete 39 films.

This kind of schedule can produce havoc if a single lead character falls sick or becomes otherwise incapacitated ("Wagon Train" shot Ward Bond with a broken arm this year). The answer is to distribute the load by using two leads (Bond and Robert Horton in "Wagon Train," James Garner and Jack Kelly as Bart & Bret Maverick in the ABC-TV'er). This gives each the chance to rest or do outside work as a matter of course but to step in for shooting in case of emergency. CBS' "Perry Mason stanza couldn't lick that problem because of the character of the show, and the web will probably turn out only 26 episodes next season.

account for about 30% of the total gross of a syndicated property.

If such markets sign up, as they did on Official's "Decoy" and now on TPA's properties, the "rejects for syndication" concept would no longer be valid. The syndicator would have enough coin to "sell-off" the rest of the country and sail the syndication route rather than the network one. Additionally, such key market "prior to release" deals brings down the cost of selling, a hefty item on any syndicators budget.

Incidentally, the new TPA syndication entry "It Happens in Spain," was filmed by producer Martin Gosch in Spain, and stars Scott McKay. It's in the mystery-comedy category.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

WCBS-TV will close-circuit part of the New York City Board of Education's principals examination on April 8, piping in two simulated classroom sessions from CBS-TV Studio 72 in Manhattan to the auditorium of the George Wingate High School in Brooklyn, where 802 teachers will be taking the test.

Purpose of the closed-circuit is to stage two classroom sessions for the candidates for principal posts, each of which has certain faults which the applicants will have to criticize in written essays. In the past, the board of examiners has sent the applicants in groups to actual classrooms, a prolonged and expensive process. As a result of the single closed-circuit session, all teachers taking the exams will get this phase of the tests in a single sitting.

Station, which did a similar closed-circuit for the Board of Ed three years ago, is footing half of the $4,500 bill, with the Board picking up the other half. It represents a savings of nearly $10,000 over previous methods to the city.

Sam Cook Digges, general manager of WCBS-TV, was singled out for praise at the recent META luncheon at which the Brotherhood Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews was presented to the educational-tv group for its presentation of "The Negro in American Life—A Long View." In accepting the award, Dr. Alan Willard Brown, president of META, saluted Digges for his cooperation in the presentation of META's cultural broadcasts, including the prize-winning hour-discussion on Negro issues. Two META execs, Richard D. Heffner, director of programs, and E. Arthur Hungerford, director of operations, also came in for kudos for their programming efforts.

ABC-TV homeoffice has asked WBKB, its Chicago o&o, to videotape its new early morning educational series, "Science '58," in entirety. (The network's videotape Centre locates in Chi.) It's presumed the web is contemplating a network showing of the 13-week science survey or film syndication to educational stations and universities. The half-hour shows are produced by the Chi shop in collaboration with the U. of Chicago and are beamed in the Windy City at 7 a.m.

WLIB, N.Y., scored a number of "specials" the past few days, slating "Passover 5718," and a celebration of Senator Herbert Lehman's 80th birthday, on Sunday (30) and a memorial program for the late W. C. Handy Monday (31) evening. Joining in the Handy memorial were Nat King Cole, Oscar Hammerstein II, and Lester Granger, pres of the National Urban League. Personalities highlighted for the Lehman birthday special were Adlai Stevenson, Mayor Robert Wagner, AFL-CIO prexy George Meany and Carl Sandburg.

Elmer Lower, CBS News' director of operations, has been awarded a one-year fellowship by the Fund for Adult Education and will take a leave of absence from the network next fall. Under the fellowship, he'll do graduate work and research in political science at Columbia U. during the '58-'59 academic year.

Lower, who was general manager of CBS-TV's (and radio) political conventions and elections coverage last year, will do his research on "Mass Communications and the Presidential Election Process in the U.S." He was one of 40 newspapermen, educators and broadcasters to receive the fellowships.

If agency execs are caught at their desks playing games, it's all the fault of CBS-TV. In a campaign to spur interest in its new psychologically-slanted daytime quizzer, "How Do You Rate?," CBS salesmen have been sending out mailing pieces to agencies which include samples of psychological tests. Tests, same as those to be used on the show, are aptitude and personality quizzes, and involve such problems as figuring out the motion of a gear & belt arrangement (mechanical aptitude), judgment of space, memory, recognition, etc.

In Chicago, National Telefilm Associates' "Big Night" next fall will have to be Saturdays instead of Fridays, the night intended for other stations in the NTA film web. Reason is that Friday p.m. has been WGN-TV's big night this season.

Scot TV's Tonsil Yen

Glasgow, April 1.

Three leading Scot singers are to have their own tv series.

Robert Wilson, kilted tenor, will have his own regular series on Scot network of BBC-TV, using guest acts, including Scot country dance bands. Iain MacFadyen is producing.

Alistair McHarg, young baritone currently featured daily in Scot indie tv's "One O'Clock Gang," is pacted for a BBC-TV series, "Presenting Alistair McHarg."

Kenneth McKellar, new star tenor, who makes a U.S.-Canada trek Sept. 10 with Auld Lang Syne vaude unit, tees off on new all-network BBC-TV series April 29.

Minneapolis—As a public relations gesture, WCCO Radio during the current Holy Week has replaced the middle commercial on its six major 15-minute newscasts with one-minute meditations.

TV Clearing House Folds; Creditors Seeking Dahlman

Television Clearing House, the controversial company which bartered merchandise for television time, has shuttered, and its president, for the time being, cannot be located by creditors. A lien was placed on TCH by the Internal Revenue Bureau for $3,867.70 in unpaid taxes and on Monday (March 31) the Feds held an auction of TCH office equipment assessed at $700.

TCH was headed by Louis J. Dahlman, whose company had been in difficulty before. A spokesman for Group Five of the tax department said that the unpaid taxes were of recent vintage, but Dahlman, who has apparently left town, left owing money to his creditors, among them being a newspaper (for advertising space) and his press agent.

In a broad sense, Dahlman's business procedure was to solicit manufactured goods from various companies, then give it to tv and radio stations in return for airplugs for the manufacturers. His theory was to take a certain percentage of the barter goods given him by manufacturers as payment for arranging the liaison. He was to sell his percentage privately.

However, during the past year he had gotten into fights with various stations and with at least three manufacturers about the distribution of the material.

The Revenue executive believed that Dahlman has left New York for Florida. Attempts were made to reach Dahlman by phone through a Mamaroneck, N. Y., exchange, but the number has been discontinued. A new number was supplied by the telephone company but that also was inoperative.

KSL To Impresario Miss Utah Pageants In Radio-TV Remotes

Salt Lake City, April 1.

Local radio station promotion is taking on a new dimension here, with KSL taking over the handling of the Miss Utah pageant eliminations in the annual Atlantic City Miss America competitions. Radio outlet will stage the entire statewide series of contests, doing radio and television remotes for each of them and thus getting programming as well as promotional mileage out of the job.

Project involves 18 county pageants, each of them to be covered by remote radio broadcasts, along with a final week's pageant in Salt Lake City with some 50 finalists. Latter would involve airplane flights, a parade, a Governor's reception, a grand ball and a coronation ball. Two of these events at least would be simulcast by the KSL stations. Idea for KSL to take over the Miss Utah promotion was that of station's promotion director, Robert O. Pusey, who now has the job of general chairman of the event.

as it stands," but have made no definitive steps to get out.

The meeting, at the Waldorf-Astoria, had nothing to do with the affiliated station advisory board, an official group, but was called by four self-appointed station affiliates—Alex Keyes of WFAA, Dallas; Don Davis, KMBC, Kansas City; Roger Clipp, of the Triangle stations, with Otto Brandt, of KING, Seattle, in the lead.

After a private powwow, they asked the network to a luncheon meeting "to give the benefit of our thinking," according to Brandt. He added that no assurances were asked and none were expected, and at this point none of the stations present at the one-day sesh wanted to bail out of network radio.

Edward DeGray, who has assumed command of ABC Radio now that Robert Eastman is quitting, explained after the meeting that for now the network is going to stick to the restricted lineup it has, except for the addition of some fresh news shows at the 55-minute mark of each haur. As of Monday (7), web will have five-minute news every hour, at five-minutes before the hour, from 8:55 a.m. to 11:55 p.m., with but two exceptions—at 9:55 (so as not to interfere with Don McNeill) and at 6:55 (because of the proximity to sponsored evening news shows).

Stations told DeGray they'd like more news "actualities" and more overseas pickups. When "live fun radio" was being sliced, affils previously got ABC to agree to a jazzed up quarter-hour morning news strip, which has since come through.

for that particular market. The NTA Film Network reserves the right to sell the three programs nationally via the filmed net by July 15. Participating stations, additionally, get an equity in the property. In toto, the station's equity in the three series totals about 25%, although the equity of each individual station ranges from 5% to half of 1%, depending on the market and other circumstances.

Stations signed up already have accounted for a little less than $2,000,000 in gross billings, or about 40% of the negative costs on the three series. The method adapted reduces some of the financial risks of the NTA Film Network and insures product to the indies. The filmed net can utilize the contracts for financing.

Here are the stations already lined up: WGN-TV, Chicago; KFJZ, Dallas-Fort Worth; WMSP-TV, Minneapolis-St. Paul; WTIC-TV Hartford; KTVU, San Francisco; XETV, Santiago; KTTV, Los Angeles; KPHO-TV, Phoenix; KTNT-TV, Seattle-Tacoma; and WTTV, Indianapolis. NTA is awaiting the greenlight from the Federal Communications Commission for its purchase of WATV, N.Y.-New Jersey, which is apparently slated as the N.Y. outlet for the filmed net. Other markets to bbe finalized for the deal shortly include Washington, D. C., St. Louis, Detroit, Philadelphia-Wilmington, and Milwaukee.

In terms of product and time for the fall lineup, there's a potential buy of $28,000,000 spun by the NTA Film Network.

Flying A

the importance of point of sale tie-ups.

The gimmicks vary from p.a. tours to self-liquidating sale of merchandise to personal endorsement of the products by the stars. More reflective of kid audience appeal than the ratings, the Flying A prexy feels, are the sales of comic books based on the show, "Annie Oakley," published by Dell, sells in the number of 1,000,000 a month.

Flying A, in association with CBS Film Sales, is pitching a pilot, "Winning of the West," based on factual dramatic incidents. Pilot stars Scott Brady, but plan is to use rotating feature players as locales and stories change in the western anthology.

Deal with Continental Baking calls for the introduction next season of 13 new episodes, the rest reruns drawn from the backlog of 81 shows, for the remainder of the year. Heavy play of reruns is based on the long time span dividing the re-airing of the episodes and the new crop of kiddie audience just getting its feet wet in tv viewing.

Flying A, with CBS Film Sales, has been fortunate in landing national spot sales with a number of its shows. Wrigley Co. had Gene Autry for three years and Mars Candy had "Buffalo Bill Jr." for two years. Both properties again are being pitched for national spot sale.

works, has never gone in for internal package creation; as a matter of fact, none of its shows are produced from within. In such an event, Moore, as he explained it yesterday (Tues.), will be mostly concerned with the administration of the department which arranges for outside program buys. He said there is no change contemplated in the structure or personnel makeup of the department, with Ted Fetter, director of programs, taking a stronger role within the framework of his present title. Other key personnel are creative exec Dan Melnick, program business chief John Green and daytime programmer Armand Grant.

ABC-TV prexy Oliver Treyz was admittedly sorry to see Aubrey go. He was Treyz's second-in-command for some time after he came to the network in late 1956, and, for awhile, was being considered as executive vicepresident of the tv network, which would have given him broader administrative responsibilities. Throughout the weeks Aubrey's promotion was being considered, web was trying to find a man to replace him over programming, but the search came to no avail.

Naming of Moore to the program vicepresidency came quickly on the heels of Aubrey's resignation, and was a surprise to many, since his background chiefly has been in sales. Before joining ABC a few months back, he was general manager of CBS Film Sales.

Mullen last week inked Dodge and Plymouth to 1958-1959 renewals on the Saturday and Monday Lawrence Welk shows. It was only shortly after that he was lined up by Treyz as Moore's sales replacement. Mullen intends indefinitely to continue handling automotive sales directly.

ranging from writing to direction to production). He'll borrow from MPO's regular production and creative crews whenever a live industrial package comes along.

Beauty of the thing, in MPO's eyes, is that the initial investment is low in doing industrial shows; a company established in "allied" fields can always lend men to Shevelove's division or, when absolutely necessary, go out and hire the right men. Still further, the small investment can deliver substantial returns, some live industrials having been packaged at between $500,000 and $1,000,000.

MPO is setting up a sales-service office in Detroit, which the company hopes will deliver most of its newly-sought business.

This move by MPO leaves plenty of room for speculation about the entry of other filmers into live industrial competition. Some months ago, it became apparent that there was a top limit to what could be made from blurbs, if only because there was just so much tv airtime for blurbs and no more. It would seem, under these circumstances, that diversification is in order.

'Top 10 Dance Party'

"Top Ten Dance Party," a syndicated live tv series, had added the following new stations: WFGA-TV, Jacksonville, Fla., WJBF-TV, Augusta, Ga.; WSLS-TV, Roanoke, Va.

Sponsors in all markets are local soft drink bottlers. Series is produced by Alan Sands for Victor Richards agency.

crews, he expects to get the setup into operation, and hopes this will be within a couple of months. Once the Gotham operation is rolling, he'll start the Coast setup, then the midwest studio.

Union Problem Licked

Though he won't disclose the arrangements, Meighan said he's got the union problem on the new tape operation virtually licked. Both Screen Actors Guild and AFTRA are vying for jurisdiction in the field, as are the technical unions and the film cameramen guilds. Meighan said the union problems are complex, but that they are being worked out and doesn't anticipate any problems on that score by the time he gets rolling.

Major agencies have indicated that they'll be handling him plenty of business, Meighan said, "otherwise I wouldn't have gone into this." He expects to charge as much or more for taped commercials as agencies presently pay for film, but the one-day shooting schedule and the elimination of film processing will reduce agency overhead considerably, as well as providing the kind of speed necessary in these days of hot advertising competition.

Meighan said that there are already 100 Ampex machines delivered to networks and stations in the U. S., and though he didn't know exactly how many are in the hands of stations alone, he reported that Ampex is now selling its recorders at the rate of one a day. By the time agencies are using taped commercials, they'll be able to cover most of the country's television population by spot tape. Use of the term Videotape, incidentally, is trademarked and is the exclusive property of Ampex and Meighan's firms.

ance to take a dominant position in the industry, since this is the most pressing problem we face. Such a tax move would put all companies out of business; it would hit the indies in an industry where the indie functions best.

"We plan to raise money for this campaign. There will be as much money as we believe we need. We don't know the exact amount until we know the procedure to be followed—and this will be told us by the steering committee. When you're fighting cancer, you're not concerned with the cost," said Morton emphatically.

tion to the stations has increased. The amount of money we are paying NBC Radio affiliates has quadrupled over two years ago."

Sarnoff credited Joe Culligan, v.p. in charge of the radio web, with its comeback. He described Culligan as "a salesman with a missionary belief in the power of salesmanship and with an inborn desire to sell iceboxes to Eskimos. The problem facing him, to sell some of the then current product against the power and glamour of television, was even more challenging than iceboxes."

uled to start this month. The pickle producers, Maconochie Brothers Ltd., are using 15-second spots and seven-second reminders on all commercial tv outlets to boost its Pan Yan sweet pickle, from April 28 to May 24. Areas not covered by tv will be blanketed by advertisements in the provincial press. The tailor, Montague Burton, is using 60-second and 30-second spots on all tv channels from Fri. (4), to announce a new line in slacks.

Houston—Pete Dreyer has joined the disk jockey staff of KILT here, coming from New York. He takes over the 6 to 10 a.m. spot. Lee Perkins moves into the all night slot, coming to KILT from sister station KTSA, San Antonio.

Perry Como (RCA Victor): "KEWPIE DOLL" (Leeds*), a swinging item with a neat luric, is sold to the hilt by Perry Como who should keep right on riding on the hit lists with this one. "DANCE ONLY WITH ME" (Stratford*), from the "Say Darling" legit score, is a big lilting ballad also delivered in top style.

Tony Bennett (Columbia): "THE BEAT OF MY HEART" (Bourne*), the oldie, is belted all the way home by Tony Bennett for top commercial impact. "CRAZY RHYTHM" (Harms*), another great standard, is also belted to a fare-theewell by Bennett.

Everly Bros. (Cadence): "ALL I HAVE TO DO IS DREAM" (Acuff-Rose†) is a solid ballad in a moderately rocking format which the Everly Bros. project with click impact. "CLAUDETTE" (Acuff-Rose†) is a pleasing fast rhythm side.

Frank Sinatra-Keely Smith (Capitol): "HOW ARE YA' FIXED FOR LOVE" (Tomarisk*), smart ballad material, is niftily sold in this duet production. "NOTHING IN COMMON" (Morris*), from the "Paris Holiday" pic, is another clever song routine.

Sammy Davis Jr. (Decca): "NO FOOL LIKE AN OLD FOOL" (Evans*), a classy ballad with a good beat, is delivered in swinging style. "UNSPOKEN" (Marvin*) is a lush melodic ballad which Sammy Davis Jr. gives a very effective reading.

Lu Ann Simms (Jubilee): "THE MOOCH" (Hecht-Lancaster-Buzzell*), no relation to the old Duke Ellington standard, is a clever teenager number attractively vocalled by Miss Simms. "BYE UM BYE" (H-L-B*) is a bright novelty entry.

Joni James (MGM): "DOES IT SHOW" (Ross Jungnickel*), a pretty ballad, shapes as excellent material for this songstress' warm style. "NOTHING WILL EVER CHANGE" (Roosevelt†) is another pleasing side.

Jerry Vale-Mary Mayo (Columbia): "THIS IS THE PLACE" (Korwin*), an excellent ballad with a smart lyric, is given strong commercial impact via this duo's vocal. "GOODBYE NOW" (Korwin*) is another fine ballad with good chances.

Moon Kim (RCA Victor): "ORIENTAL HOP" (Famous*), a catching chop suey of rock 'n' roll and Chinese rhythms, gets a bright workover that could stir some noise. "I'M DINGY DONGY OVER YOU" (Tee Pee*) is a fair ballad delivered by this songstress.

Gale Storm (Dot): "ANGRY" (Melrose*) is an okay rhythm ballad effectively projected by this songstress. "YOU" (Instant†) is fair rocking ballad material.

Tommy Prisco (Epic): "O BELLA MIA" (Rosemeadow*), a lush Italo-styled ballad, is given an effective, wide-open vocal by this crooner. "CHEWIN' GUM" (Regent†), reverting back to the rock 'n' roll genre, has a cute peg which the kids might go for.

Bob Holt (Vik): "POLKA RE, POLKA RA" (Reserve†) dishes up the polka beat in colorful, commercial style. Bob Holt handling the vocal nicely. "ARE YOU THE GIRL" (Reserve†) is so-so straight ballad material.

Mickey Michaels (Felsted): "KOFFEE SHOP ROCK" (Lowery†), par for the rock 'n' roll course, is belted in unexceptional style by this singer. "ALWAYS" (Lowery†), not to be confused with the Irving Berlin old'e, is a fair slow rocking ballad.

The Kingpins (United Artists): "LINGUA" (Conley†) is a catching instrumental number with some incidental jungle sounds. It runs on both sides, which is longer than necessary.

Scott Engel (Orbit): "THE LIVIN' END" is familiar rocking material delivered in typical fashion by this young singer. "GOOD FOR NOTHIN'" is a fast rhythm item handled in the same way with guitar backing.

Wanda King (Glory): "RANDY" (BMI Canada†), a catching rock 'n' roll entry, is projected in winning style by this songstress. "OOH, WHATCHA DO" (Bryden†) is another bouncing rockabilly side.

Baby Dee (Zebra): "I CRIED THE LAST TIME" (Fomark†), a rocking item with a blues lyric, is belted strongly by this songstress. "YOU DON'T HAVE TO BE A FOOL TO FALL IN LOVE" (Fomark†) is more heavy rhythm ballad material.

Lee Andrews & The Hearts (United Artists): "TRY THE IMPOSSIBLE" (Spinmill-G&H†), a well-written, slow rocking ballad, is neatly delivered by Lee Andrews. "NOBODY'S HOME" (Spinmill-G&H†) is an uptempo entry which doesn't go very far.

The Double-Daters (Carlton): "THE SENIOR STROLL" (Jones†) is an okay juve-angled number that explores familiar ground. "HEY, BLONDIE BABY" (Jones†) is routine rhythm stuff.

Ganim's Asia Minors (East West): "HALVAH" (Monument-Progressive†) is an offbeat number with a Mid-East flavor that might stir some attention. "DADDY LOLO" (Monument-Progressive†) is a try at an Oriental rock 'n' roll that doesn't quite come off.

Wynona Carr (Specialty): "THE THINGS YOU DO TO ME" (Venice†), a bluesy number with a good lyric, is belted stylishly in the modern manner by this songstress. "TOUCH AND GO" (Venice†) is more conventional rhythm material, but delivered very well.

Henry Mancini Orch (Coral): "THE LONG HOT SUMMER" (Feist*), title theme of the 20th-Fox pic, is an excellent melody lushly produced by this orch. "PARIS HOLIDAY" (Morris*), title song of the United Artists film, shapes as a colorful instrumental for a bright change of pace.

Fred Carter (Lode): "FREELOADERS" (American†) is a cute rocking number delivered in infectious style by this singer with guitar backing. "I'M IN LOVE" (American†) is another good tune in the same groove.

The Chants (Capitol): "LOST AND FOUND" (Rush†), a jumping rhythm tune, is neatly bounced by this new combo. "CLOSE FRIENDS" (Rush†), a rocking ballad, is run-of-the-mill.

Hanz Lorenz (Crest): "BUTTERCUP A GOLDEN HAIR" (Choice*), a good country-styled number, gets a highly attractive vocal by this skilled folk singer. "OLITA" (Choice*) is another fine side which could draw many spins due to the interesting performance.

Toni Arden: "The Italian Touch" (Decca). Toni Arden works out her trilling pipes on a trio of Italian tunes, including "Come Back to Sorrento," "Mattina" and "Scapricciatiello," all of which she does in the original Italian lyrics. On the flip side, Miss Arden gives a wide-range performance to two U.S. ballads, "If I Forget You" and "Sand In My Shoes."

Album Reviews

Andre Kostelanetz Orch: "Blues-Opera" (Columbia). The orchestral suite from Harold Arlen's opera, which will preem this year, is an ambitious and interesting pop-jazz composition. Consisting of two parts, the suite expands on a variety of blues themes, many of which are traditional, and unifies them via a pervasive atmospheric quality. Suite, which takes up one side of the LP, is backed by four great Arlen melodies, "Out of This World," "That Old Black Magic," "Stormy Weather" and "Blues In The Night," played in Andre Kostelanetz orch's shimmering style.

Ronnie Gilbert: "The Legend of Bessie Smith" (RCA Victor). Although Ronnie Gilbert (femme vocalist with the Weavers) lacks the elemental vigor and rhythmic drive of Bessie Smith, Miss Gilbert sings this blues repertory with taste and intelligence, backed by a fine jazz combo. Included are such memorable songs associated with the late blues singer as "You've Been A Good Old Wagon," "Nobody Knows When You're Down and Out," "Yellow Dog Blues" and of the more "shocking" numbers, "Empty Bed Blues."

"The Young Lions" (Decca). Hugo Friedhofer's score for the 20th-Fox film, "The Young Lions," has been fashioned into a compelling soundtrack set. Unlike so many other pic scores which are only appendages to the screen image, this score, in several sections, stands by itself as music strictly for listening. Lionel Newman conducts the studio orch. Another Decca pic soundtrack package. "And God Created Woman," with music by Paul Misraki, also has several musically attractive sequences in a polite jazz groove, plus some narration in French by the pic's star, Brigitte Bardot. The album jacket is noteworthy for the restraint with which it displays the Bardot frame.

Les Baxter Orch: "Space Escapade" (Capitol). In tempo with the headlines, Les Baxter heads out into space in this instrumental sputnik. It's a pleasing melange of original numbers which although titled out of this world are actually not too far out on a limb. It sounds like down-to-earth, romantic mood music performed by a slick orch.

Giorgio Tozzi-Kathy Barr: "The Desert Song" (RVA Victor). Sigmund Romberg's perennial "Desert Song" score turns up in a fine new disk version. Giorgio Tozzi, operatic basso, belts the sweeping melodies in authoritative style, while Kathy Barr, as the femme lead, displays some pleasing soprano pipes on her solo and duets with Tozzi. Other vocals feature Peter Palmer, Warren Galjour and Eugene Morgan with orch under Lehman Engel's baton.

Norman Brooks: "I'm Sitting On Top Of The World" (Verve). As long as Al Jolson's memory lingers on, there'll always be a place for Norman Brooks. In this collection, which is frankly pegged onto the late singer, Brooks does his accurate takeoff on Jolson on such trademarked tunes as "April Showers," "Toot Toot Tootsie," "Sonny Boy" and "Swanee," among others. There's no question but that the vocal texture and the intonations are uncannily like the original.

Leon Berry: "Giant Wurlitzer" (Audio Fidelity). Since the advent of the hi-fi movement, the organ has come into its own on disks since it can cover the widest possible sound spectrum. In this package, Leon Berry exercises a giant theatre pipe organ on a medley of standard pops and marches, all played in a way to showcase the organ's range and versatility.

Stan Getz-Wardell Gray-Zoot Zims-Paul Quinichette: "Tenors Anyone?" (Dawn). Sides by four standout modern tenor sax exponents have been assembled into a neatly varied jazz collection. Lester Young, though not present on this disk, shows his impact in numbers by Paul Quinichette and Stan Getz, while the late Wardell Gray's warm ballad style is showcased on "Talk of the Town" and Zoot Sims' swinging tenor has several fine solo spots.

Billy Vaughn: "Sail Along Silv'ry Moon" (Dot). Title for this set is taken from one of Billy Vaughn's recent pop single clicks. It's a tip-off on what the album's all about. Like the single click, the package is a sampling of Vaughn's tasteful instrumental styling. In addition to the title song there are such nifties as "Sunrise Serenade," "Sentimental Journey" and "Sweet Georgia Brown."

Machito Orch: "Kenya" (Roulette). This is the Afro-Cuban jazz representation for Roulette's new "Birdland" series. It's torrid stuff with the Cuban percussion instruments like the bongos, congas and timbales giving most of the musical heat. The cover photo by Lester Krauss is a knockout.

Enoch Light Orch: "Waltzes for Dancing" (Grand Award). For those who've caught the dancing-at-home bug Enoch Light's waltz roundup is worth looking into. The maestro has picked a standup repertoire of fave waltz pieces and developed them into highly attractive items for the terp crowd. They'll even appeal to the wallflowers. Herm.

'58 STAR: STEREOPHONIC DISK

Pushbutton Programming

Protesting that "conformity strictly to charts in airing records is a mistake," Los Angeles disk jockey Peter Potter's resignation from KLAC, L.A., in rebellion against "pushbutton programing," is heartening. That he may be a cry in the wilderness of a currently very wild music business is something else again. Coming from Potter, a deejay vet on the Coast since 1938, it is not casual.

This standardized format is the very thing the recent deejay conclave in Kansas City spotlighted and which a sizeable segment of the platter-chatterers abjured.

The stations' predilection for the strict music-and-news formula and top 40 lists as the economic pattern has induced this cycle of thinking. By accepting the music charts as the most surefire programming ingredients the station managers seem to feel that the tried-and-true top pops should constitute the basic formula ingredients. The personality deejays know that this is a short-cut to the tired-and-through, but seemingly the indie stations lack the vision or just don't care.

They should know that the history and the current realities of disk jockey programming permits the wax Belascos freer rein. Their ingenuity, if true, reaffirms their standings as impresarios of the hour, two-hour or longer marathons of wax works. The top pops are for the prosaic record-turners and not the real business-churners, which a successful deejay really is. Those with ingenuity mix up their wares from segments of artists and/or groups to stylings and even LPs as further change of pace.

"Pushbutton programming" is not only the short-cut to tune-outersville for the deejays but it's a shortsighted station operations concept. Peter Potter may prove to be a pioneer of no small stature in his dramatic decision to oppose record entertainment "strictly by charts."

Imperial Like the Name; Chudd Sets Own Firms, Distrib Links Abroad

Hollywood, April 1.

Lew Chudd's Imperial Records is undergoing a vast expansion via formation of Imperial companies in Europe and in Canada. In doing so, Chudd is also setting up his own European Music Co. The label prexy is convinced that by forming the new Imperial outlets he can control the distribution and promotion sales of records on a higher level than the present system, which allows foreign firms to do so.

Chudd feels that the record business in general is still far from its peak, and that the time has come for more creativeness and the establishment of new outlets.

The Imperial topper leaves for Europe April 25 to finalize a tieup with the Aedeo Corp. in Frankfurt, Germany, whereby the German electronics firm will package plastic stereophonic tapes and machines exclusively for Imperial to distribute in the U. S. and Canada.

Chudd has also concluded a deal with Corporacion Nacional, a company in Mexico City that would press his records there for distribution in the South American market. Firm will also handle Imperial's distribution in that country. Negotiations are currently on with firms in Brazil, Argentina, Panama, Chile and Bolivia to distibute Imperial records in their respective countries.

"The South American market has not even been touched," says Chudd, "and yet, the potential in certain countries is bigger than in many European countries."

Imperial brings out its first stereophonic tape releases in June. Electric jobbers, rather than records distribs, will handle the line.

Under Chudd's expansion move, the same catalog will be released all over the world under the Imperial label.

Flanagan to Imperial

Hollywood, April 1.

Ralph Flanagan has exited his RCA Victor pact and signed with Lew Chudd's Imperial Records. Latter label is entering the "big band" field and signing of Flanagan marks its first such artist.

Initial session, under Chudd's supervision, was held in Chicago Monday (31) with Von Dexter conducting. It was waxed in stereophonic sound and will be released as an LP comprised of "cocktail hour" music.

Vik's 'Marty Gold Month' In April With New & Old

Vik Records, RCA Victor subsid, has set aside April as "Marty Gold Month." For the drive on arranger-composer Gold, the label is issuing two new LP's and has formulated a special sales plan for his four previous albums.

To push the four previously released Gold packages, Vik is offering a program whereby distributors who buy 12 Gold LP's will receive two albums free. The Gold sets in the program are "Wired For Sound," "Organized For Hi-Fi," "Sticks and Strings in Hi-Fi" and "Higher Than Fi." The two new releases are "Sticks and Bones" and "Hi Fi Fo Fum."

JUST A QUESTION OF WHAT SYSTEM

The disk industry's transition into the stereophonic phase may not be as smooth as first anticipated, according to engineering developments now being made in the major company laboratories. While there's no chance that any conflict similar to the bitter "battle of the speeds" of 10 years ago will break out between the majors, there's now a possibility that more than one type of stereo disk will be put on the market this year or next.

Columbia Records introduced a new angle in the stereo picture last week when it demonstrated a stereo disk that could be played with acceptable results on standard monaural equipment. Up to that point it was believed the industry was moving in the direction of a stereo disk which could not be played on present monoaural equipment. Despite the demonstration, however, Columbia exes have still not decided to issue commercially such a "compatible" stereo disk.

'Compromise,' Sez RCA

RCA Victor execs made no bones about their negative attitude toward the Columbia demonstration disk. It was tagged "compromise" stereo since it was claimed that to make stereo compatible with a monaural pickup, Columbia compromised with the best quality inherent in stereo. Since stereo grooves are cut with simultaneous vertical and horizontal components, any attempt to make the grooves playable by a monaural pickup, RCA manager of recording William Miltenberg asserted, had to involve a compromise so that the needle would track. Other major disk companies, such as Capitol, Mercury and Decca, agreed with the Victor stance.

Goddard Lieberson, Columbia Records prexy, said that he regards stereo as a "refinement"

Peppin's Col Post in L.A.

Paul Peppin has been set as Coast operations manager for Columbia Records' branch operation. Peppin will be based in Los Angeles and will assist Norman Goodwin, manager there, in branch administration.

In another shift in Col's branch operations, Don England was transferred from his post as Kansas City branch manager to the Detroit outlet. He'll be replaced by Donald Morse, a salesman in the K. C. area for many years.

Tanz on Promo for R&B

In an expansion of the new indie, R & B Recording Corp., Irving Tanz has been tapped to handle diskery's promotion. He'll tee off plugging "Kiss and Make Up," which was recorded by the Crowns.

Tanz, who's been associated with various publishing firms in the past, begins his diskery affiliation this week with a midwestern deejay plugging trek. The R & B diskery is headed by Doc Pomus, prexy, and Fred Huckman, veep.

Col Spots Sales Aides Cross-U.S.; 10-District Span

In a reorganization of Columbia's field sales force by William P. Gallagher, label's national sales manager, Mort Hoffman and Al Fishman have been moved as district managers. Hoffman will head District No. 1 based in Boston and which includes Portland, Albany and Syracuse outlets; and Fishman will head District 4, based in Detroit and taking in Cleveland, Toledo, Cincinnati and Louisville branches.

According to Gallagher, the recent appointment of new distributors in the southwest prompted the changes in district responsibilities.

In another shift Gene Block, formerly singles product manager, takes over district manager responsibilities for the Los Angeles area. Col's new lineup now includes James Turnbull as district manager for the New York area, including Newark, Hartford, Buffalo; Gene Weiss as district manager in the Philadelphia market, and Harry Hostler as head of the newly developed District 5 (Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines) which now gives Col a resident district manager in the Chicago market. Warner Pagliera, while continuing to h.q. in St. Louis, will now head the newly developed District 7 (St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Indianapolis).

Col's sales setup is now divided into 10 districts.

Series of slashing attacks at ASCAP members who bring suit against the Society or complain to Congressional committees highlighted the annual membership meeting yesterday (Tues.) at the Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y. Ned Washington, writer-board member from the Coast, said that anybody who sues ASCAP, after exhausting the complaint mechanism of the Society, "must be either an egomaniac or he must have larceny in his heart."

L. Wolfe Gilbert, another Coast board member, said, "Who knows what the courts will decide when you go to a judge who may know the law but does not have knowledge of the music business? A wrong decision may throw us into a panic." Gilbert referred to the "Three L's" (John Jacob Loeb, Carmen Lombardo and Hans Lengsfelder) as those "who are jeopardizing the overall security of the Society."

Loeb and Lombardo recently lost their suit for more performance credits on the Arthur Godfrey theme song, "Seems Like Old Times." Lengsfelder currently is the plaintiff in a N.Y. Supreme Court action challenging ASCAP's weighted voting system.

ASCAP prexy Paul Cunningham notified members that negotiations for a new contract with the radio industry would start some time this year. The current contract runs out at the end of 1958. A new four-year television contract was signed a few months ago.

Cunningham also urged strong support for the bill amending the

Spier Pubbery's Greenwich Label As a Showcaser

The publishers' do-it-yourself disk kick was spotlighted last week with the launching of Greenwich Records by Larry Spier Inc. Unlike the publishers who have been cutting their own platters with a master-sale to an established record company in view, the Spier subsid has been blueprinted as a permanent disk setup.

Along a somewhat similar line is Hill & Range's plan for its Big Top label. Like Spier, H&R will operate with its own distributor network and with a design to showcase new material and talent. Big Top plans to work through independent artists & repertoire men.

The Greenwich setup will be a&r'ed by Hal Webman who recently joined the Spier organization after a stint as a&r steffer with Decca Records. Greenwich's first disking was cut by the Chiefs, a vocal-instrumental group who were directed for the date by Sid Bass doing "Apache!" and "Dee's Dream." Both are Bass compositions, incidentally.

In addition to the Chiefs, Webman has signed a teenage vocal-instrumental group, Ritchie & The Playboys, and Buddy Thompson, a rock 'n' roll crooner from Louisiana. Webman already has them in the groove awaiting release.

According to Belle Nardone, Larry Spier Jr. and Webman, who run the firm, their move into the recording business was designed to expand its activity but in a way that will not interfere with the firm's publishing interests and operation. The recordings, they say, will be made of material that would not ordinarily be submitted for recording to other artists on major or indie labels.

Greenwich currently is rounding out its distributor network with outlets in the east and midwest already established. The company will handle its business through Greenwich Sales Corp.

Wiesbaden, March 25.

A poll just completed of the bestselling single platters and albums at the American Air Force Exchanges for the last six months reveals some surprising facts, according to Anthony deCarlo, chief record and phonograph buyer for AFEX.

Glenn Miller beat all comers to rank as the top-selling orch, followed by Xavier Cugat, Harry James, Mantovani, Hugo Winterhalter, Les Elgart, Andre Kostelanetz, Frank Chacksfield, Les Baxter and Fred Waring.

Elvis Presley scored as No. 1 male singer for the AFEX record buyers, followed by Pat Boone, Bing Crosby, Frank Sinatra, Mario Lanza.

On the female listing, Doris Day ranked first, with Judy Garland, Ann Russell, Jo Stafford and Kay Starr following, while top jazz vocalist was Ella Fitzgerald with Anita O'Day second.

Norman Luboff, Three Suns and Four Freshmen placed in that order as the most popular vocal groups.

Most popular instrumentalist was Carmen Cavallero, with Liberace second.

Erroll Garner scored as top jazz instrumentalist, leading Charlie Parker, Dave Brubeck, Gene Krupa and Oscar Peterson down the line.

Count Basie won out for the jazz orchestra slot, followed by Buck Clayton, Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton, and Norman Granz Presents placed fifth.

"Tastes vary because the people are so scattered through the 10 countries where Air Force personnel are stationed in Europe," deCarlo explains. "Climate may have an effect, too. In a hot jazz climate I don't think jazz will be too good.

"The most popular recording stars on our AFEX charts are not the same as the first-spot stars in the States. This may have to do with the terrific areas covered by AFEX.

"Another reason is the dfference in time element between here and in the States. For instance, I'm now buying records to be delivered in Dharan in July, and we get our Christmas listings in March.

"It would help a lot if the large record companies would get timely information to us ahead of time. It's fine for stateside buyers to get Christmas informaton in October, but that's too late for us."

Stereophonic Disk

and not a "revolution," and hence they would figure out a system which would not upset the existing business patterns. George R. Marek, RCA-Victor v.p. and general manager, was categoric in his rejection of the "compatible" disk, declaring that it was a "step backward." He stated that the compatible stereo disk, played on a monaural machine, gave results that were inferior to existing LP's.

Demonstration

Victor engineers demonstrated their case in their studios last week. They matched up the "compatible" stereo disk with a 100% stereo disk to prove the superiority of the latter when played on a stereo machine. Played on a monaural machine, the compatible stereo disk also fell off in quality as against the same number played on a conventional LP. While true stereo disks may not be compatible with present equipment, Victor engineers stressed that present monaural LP disks are not only compatible with stereo machines but actualy sound better. Hence, present LP libraries need not be obsoleseced by the introduction of stereo.

Marketing of stereo disks will be launched some time this summer with Victor definitely getting into the act by the fall at the latest. RCA's phonograph division, along with virtually all the other major phono manufacturers, are gearing for the new stereo development and will have machines on the market before the end of the year.

One disk exec, in fact, stated that all the "mystereophony" over stereo was provoked by the equipment manufacturers who wanted a new gimmick to sell their hi-fi machines. Most disk execs, however, view stereo as a fundamental new advance in the history of disk music, equivalent in some degree to the changeover from mechanical to electrical recording techniques in the late 1920s.

Among the equipment manufacturers, Magnavox is demonstrating its latest developments in stereo disk sound reproduction at the Savoy Plaza, N.Y., today (Wed.).

Inside Stuff—Music

Congress, which gets around to all things, is in process of rectifying an injustice to harpsichords and clavichords. The House has just passed and sent to the Senate a bill to reduce the duty rate on imported harpsichords and clavichords to no more than that on imported pianos. Seems they were all under a 40% ad valorem tariff. Since then, the duty on pianos and their parts has dropped to 18% and will go down to 17%, commencing July 1 next. But, Uncle Sam's bite on harpsichords and clavichords brought in from abroad is down to only 36%. So Congress will eliminate the discrimination.

The theme "Music to Sell Shoes By" is being advanced by the Penobscot Shoe Co., Boston Manufacturer, in tieup with Cadence Records. In a promotion for its "Tres Jolie" line, Penobscot has enlisted an endorsement from Cadence crooner Andy Williams and is pushing his disks via posters, direct mail and a national ad campaign. The shoe retailers are also being supplied with order blanks whereby a customer can purchase the Williams disks directly from Cadence.

Boston's cuffo cultural combo, the Arts Festival, is readying for its seventh stand, June 6-22, in the Public Garden after winning a decisive victory over the park department which sought to ban it from the Hub beauty spot because of damage to the grass and posies. The event traditionally combines art exhibs with legit, ballet, poetry, jazz, opera. This year, a legit attraction, dance group and opera are being set, plus a jazz night.

Old bandleaders never die—they just start their own television shows. CBS' new St. Louis outlet, KMOX-TV, is now featuring a Monday-through-Friday variety show headlining former maestro Buddy Moreno backed by former maestro Carl Hohengarten, now back in baton territory again as leader of the band for the show and as musical director of KMOX-TV.

Publisher Larry Utall is cashing in the disk companies' master-buying vogue. His latest master sell is "Please Buy My Record" to George Goldner's indie End label. The disk, incidentally, was recorded by Addie Lee, Utall's secretary. Previous week Utall sold his master of "Screamin' Ball At Dracula Hall" to Roulette Records.

David Kapralik has been named manager of singles sales administration and field communications at Columbia Records. He'll continue to edit such field publications as Insight and Newsletter. In his new post, Kapralik will help develop field communications for the singles department, working in association with Col's singles' promotion chief Frank Campana.

Shifrin's 'Have Roulette, Will Travel' Sales Spot

Jerry Shifrin has been tapped as Roulette's national sales manager, replacing Don Carter who is leaving the diskery to set up his own indie operation.

According to Joe Kolsky, Roulette's exec veepee, Shifrin will travel extensively visiting label's distributors, conducting sales meetings, covering key accounts, rack jobbers, one-stops, etc. Shifrin came into the disk business in 1953 as manager of Archie Bleyer's Record Center in Hempstead, L. I.

ASCAPers' Pre-Trial Vs. BMI Gets Into AMP's Longhairs Via OK to O.O. Data

The ASCAP songwriters' suit against Broadcast Music Inc. and the broadcast webs is now expanding into the longhair field, according to the line of questioning to be explored in future pre-trial examinations.

The plaintiffs, represented by attorney John Schulman, are planning to probe the relationship between the Associated Music Publishers, a longhair BMI subsid, and orchestra leaders.

Last week, former Federal Judge Harold Kennedy, who is sitting as special master in the pre-trial testimony, denied a motion by AMP to block the plaintiffs from examining their records. The plaintiffs are seeking a list of documents pertaining to meetings between Oliver Daniel, AMP exec, and orch leaders and other data as to the selection and programming of music in concerts and recordings in which AMP or BMI participated.

AMP argued against the production of such data on the grounds that the documents involved AMP's methods of operation, a confidential matter which may become available to its competitors. Kennedy stated that he "was not persuaded that Mr. Daniel's knowledge of the musical inclinations of various orchestra leaders should be protected as a trade secret." Kennedy made a similar ruling earlier in permitting the defendants to examine all of the performance records of ASCAP, which is not a party to the case although 33 of its songwriter members launched the suit.

Meantime, the BMI motion to dismiss the case, which is arguable in N. Y. Federal Court tomorrow (Thurs.), will undoubtedly be deferred to a later date. The plaintiff's attorney is expected to ask for more time to prepare his answer in view of the volume of documents referred to in the defendants' brief.

Dancehall Goes to Church

San Antonio, April 1.

What was for years a dark, red-lanterned dancehall known over the country for its rockin' stomps and western bands has undergone a Christian conversion.

Past patrons of "The Barn" wouldn't know the place since its new birth. In a week's time a platoon of 40 men, women and children have turned the 90 by 75 building into a church.

About the only traces of the old place is a 50-foot bar, now a snack counter.

DOT NAMES DE LUGG MUSIC CHIEF IN EAST

Bob Thiele has started the ball rolling as Dot's new veepee and artists & repertoire chief by bringing in Milton De Lugg as east coast musical director. Thiele moved over to Dot from his previous a&r berth at Coral Monday (31).

De Lugg, an arranger-conductor-composer, has worked on radio-tv with Jan Murray, Herb Shriner and Paul Winchell and has been on disk dates with Dinah Shore, Bing Crosby and Frankie Laine. Among his tune credits are "Orange Colored Sky" and "Hoop Dee Doo." He'll be assisted in his Dot chores by George Brackman.

Capitol Folds Prep—No Hits

Hollywood, April 1.

Capitol Records is giving up on its subsidiary Prep Records, formed a little over a year ago. While there's no confirmation by diskery, it's understood the towel was thrown in on Prep because of its inability to come up with a hit disk. Several of the artists who waxed under Prep, such as the Four Preps and Earl Holliman, have been switched over to the Capitol roster. Four Preps' most recent hit platter, "Twenty-Six Miles," is on the Cap label.

Jim Gordon, who headed Prep on the Coast, is jumping over to Capitol, as is Stan Hoffman. Latter was western promotion man for Prep and now will hold post of western district promotion man of Capitol Records Distributing Corp.

An announcement disclosing the folding of Prep is expected out of the Capitol Tower this week.

The Prep label was formed originally to introduce new artists but the lack of sales by the company was the decisive point in Cap's decision to fold the subsid.

SCOPP SCOOPS UP 3-YR. RENEWAL AS BIG 3 G.M.

Mickey Scopp's pact as general manager of the Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller) has been picked up for an additional three-year term. Scopp took over as head of the publishing combine in 1953.

During Scopp's tenure, the firm has expanded its foreign affiliation especially via the recently launched Affiliated Music Publishers Ltd. in London. Scopp also broadened firm's standard music operation through the recently organized Standard Exploitation Dept. and expansion of firm's print division.

D.C. '59 Hi-Fi Show For Nat'l Symph; O.O. O'seas Exhibs

Washington, April 1.

A nine-day international Hi-Fi Music Festival will be held here starting next Jan. 31 for benefit of National Symphony Orchestra. Plans for the elaborate combo of music performances and electronic demonstrations were announced here by Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Washington socialite and orch patron, who will act as chairman of the festival for National Symphony, and M. Robert Rogers, who masterminded town's previous four annual hi-fi shows and who will direct next year's program.

Marking first time that an audio trade showing will be expanded to a fulldress music festival, announcement of plans comes close on heels of the recent record-breaking show, when 16,000 hi-fi fans crowded the exhibit rooms at Shoreham Hotel. Tied in with the usual exhibits and demonstrations, a special hi-fi concert by National Symphony will be held at Constitution Hall.

International flavor will be accented by exhibits of foreign manufacturers and governments, and by recordings from famous music festivals which will be played in a special Music Festival hall.

Mrs. Shouse leaves soon for Far East to enlist foreign participation, while Rogers will travel the European circuit. Details of the financial arrangements were not disclosed. In past, rental of 50 exhibit rooms paid overhead, and Rogers' take consisted of gate.

4-TISSIMO FRESHMEN; 5½G IN PITT 1-NITER

Four Freshmen cleaned up in one-night stand last week at Carnegie Music Hall, getting around $5,500 at a $3.60 top. Combo practically sold out the 1,800-seat auditorium, with teenagers their chief draw.

First time, aside from a single appearance with a jazz package at Syria Mosque couple of years ago, that the boys have ever been headlined locally away from a night club. Promoter was Lenny Litman, owner of Copa, where Freshmen have appeared several times. They more than made up for Litman the recent Count Basie concert at same site which barely returned an even break for the cafe-operating impresario.

Vancouver AFM Local Suing Booker for Pay

Vancouver, April 1.

Local 145 of the AFM is suing West Coast Varieties Ltd. The writ served, in a case expected to be heard this summer, alleges pay is owed a six-piece combo, booked by WCV to backstop the Bill Kenny nine-city British Columbia tour last September.

Booker's topper, Charmaine Klenman, said her lawyer had filed an appearance for summer Assizes court. She stated WCV will fight the issue, and counterclaims that there was a discrepancy in the musicians' verbal contract, against amount demanded by Local 145, "by several hundred dollars."

Scot Juves Going Back To Bagpipes? Dip in Sale Of Guitars Tips R&R Dive

Glasgow, March 25.

Is the rock 'n' roll era on the wane? One pointer to such a suggestion is noted here in a strong drop in sales of guitars.

Since the end of 1956 an estimated total of 15,000 guitars have been sold in city shops. One store sold 1,000 in 12 months, compared with only eight in a normally "good" year previously. All went to boys between 14 and 18 years old.

Average price paid here for guitars has been $60.

One dealer told VARIETY: "The demand has been fabulous but it is definitely falling off now."

Many hire-purchase stores moved furniture to make way for guitar displays. Now the furniture is going back.

Bennett VP-GM & 'In' on Liberty

Hollywood, April 1.

Al Bennett has joined Si Waronker's Liberty Records as veepee and general manager. Bennett, formerly with Hart Distributing as general manager and prior to that with Randy Wood's Dot Records, will supervise sales, merchandising, promotion and distribution. Deal calls for him to participate in company's earnings.

Waronker also disclosed that Liberty is moving into the stereo tape and binaural disk field this year. Company has 105 LP's on the market with 40 still unreleased and 50 in the works.

Meanwhile, Bennett is making the rounds of the distribs throughout the country to alert them on Liberty's new promotion plans, etc.

Distributor Notes

Westminster Records has tapped Portem Distributing Inc. to handle its line in New York City. Portem's territory will also include Long Island and Westchester County.

United Record Distributors, Houston, copped first place in Coral's distributor standings for 1957. Second place was Lieberman Music, Minneapolis, while F. & F. Enterprises, Charlotte (N.C.), took third spot.

Ralph Berson, national sales manager of Pickwick Sales Co., parent firm of the low-price Design and Crickett, kidiskeries, has set 12 new distribs around the country for both labels.

Maine Solon Votes For 'Straight Moon' to Help Songniks Retain Peg

Washington, April 1.

With Rep. Robert Hale (R., Maine), it's June-Moon 10-to-1 over Sputnik.

The 68-year-old Down East congressman sounded off the other day in defense of love and moon, and in trepidation over what might happen when earth starts bombarding the moon with satellites.

"It would be a pity," he said, in a speech prepared for delivery in his district, "while we are putting a lot of new satellites into the heavens, to destroy an old established institution like the moon." He said nobody sings about shining on, old "Harvest Sputnik," or "the light of the Sputnik on the Wabash."

"I am worried," he continued, "about how much target practice the old moon will take without suffering serious damage."

Something else for Tin Pan Alley to get ulcers about!

Leslie to O.O. Europe For Low-Price Design

The European market for low-price LP's will be explored by Cy Leslie, Design Records prexy, on his six-week tour of the Continent starting May 1. Design markets its LP line in the U.S. at $1.49.

Leslie expects to line up a distributor network for Design's albums and singles lines as well as the kidisk Cricket label. He'll hit England, France, Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria and Scandinavia.

Monty Takes Troy In 10G One-Niter Plus Radio Kudos

Troy, N. Y., April 1.

The tremendous following which Mantovani has attracted through his disks was demonstrated at the R.P.I. Field House Tuesday (25) night, when the Italian-born conductor from England drew an audience of approximately 5,000 and a gross of $10,400, at $1.50 to $4.20.

It was the second largest figure registered in the college arena by an orch of the type, exceeded only by the $11,000 which the Boston Pops pulled several years ago.

Rain did not affect attendance. A 250-seat cancellation of $3.50 chairs, by a local girls' school, held down the take.

H. L. (Jack) Garren, managing director of the Field House, said that a return booking had been arranged that evening, for next March 1—on Mantovani's third American tour. This will be a Sunday afternoon date.

Garren attributed Mantovani's boxoffice not only to his platters, but also to radio plugging for the local engagement. The Field House had a swap deal with WPTR in Albany. The Schine-owned station caught the fancy of the batoneer and of the crowd, via the presentation of a scroll to him as "The Most Popular Entertainer of the Geo-Musical Year." In accepting the award from Paul Flanagan—attired, with three other WPTR deejays, in tails—Mantovani chuckled over "Geo-Musical," as did the audience. It was a new term to all. Walt Maguire, national sales manager for London Records, introduced the WPTR quartet.

The Troy stop-off, the 54th of an eight-week swing, was preceded by a gross reported at close to $9,000 in the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, and another said to have been over $31,000 in the 11,000-seat Forum at Montreal. A Burlington, Vt., college date, in between, was on a guaranteed basis.

Following a Carnegie Hall, N. Y., showing Sunday (March 30), two additional college engagements will be filled, in Allentown, Pa., and College Park, Md. (The Carnegie date grossed around $6,800 at a $3.75 top. The concert was presented by Felix G. Gerstman.)

The Field House audience reacted enthusiastically to Mantovani's offerings, despite the fact the predominantly-American orch (only three English key men carried) did not produce the lush tone and some of the effects which trademark Mantovani's records. Jaco.

Show Biz Turns Out in Force For Billy Vine Memorial Nets $15,000

The Old Romanian, the largest nitery on Broadway, where Billy Vine was to have opened a little over a month ago, on Monday (31) sponsored a memorial dinner there for the comic who died two days before he was to have opened at the cafe.

The Troupers, the femme theatrical organization, plus a committee headed by his close friends Jan Murray and Phil Foster, gathered nearly a capacity house which paid up to $50 per plate and in which the bulk of the who's who in the variety field present in New York entertained or took bows. The estimated $15,000 raised through the event will go to Vine's family.

Attendance was about 900 despite the all-day rain.

There were three emcees. Milton Berle started, and as Al Bernie stated in the turn which followed immediately, contributed a few "well-stolen words." Jan Murray and Joey Adams emceed at length, and those introduced included Sophie Tucker, Joe E. Lewis, Steve Allen, Polly Bergen, Sid Caesar, Jana Mason, L. Wolfe Gilbert, Lou Wills Jr., Phil Silvers (who duetted with Berle), Alan King, the Mello Larks.

Columnists present included Earl Wilson and Louis Sobol. Others who either took bows or got up to perform included Paul Winchell, Jack Barry, Lillian Briggs, Lenny Kent, Eileen Barton (latter two in the cafe's show), Sandy Stewart, Henny Youngman, Mambo Jets, Al Kelly, Buddy Hackett, Judy Scott.

Because of the late hour, there were others who didn't get a chance either to get an introduction or perform. They included Denise Darcel, Sammy Lewis (booker for the Riviera, Las Vegas), John Croft (operator of the Beverly Hills Theatre Restaurant, Cincinnati), and Geene Courtney.

Gov't Files 2 Liens Against Monte Proser

Doylestown, Pa., April 1.

A Federal tax lien of $31,582 has been filed here against Monte Proser, former manager of the Bucks County Playhouse Inn.

The lien covers $23,544 in excise taxes and $8,038 in withholding taxes the Government claims were not paid on the La Vie night club Proser operated in New York.

Liens also are pending here against Proser for $35,684 in income taxes the Government claims he owes for 1947, 1949 and 1954.

Proser left the Bucks Playhouse in 1955. He is now operating the Tropicana nitery in Las Vegas.

Yankee Don Hooten in British Bow at Glasgow

Glasgow, April 1.

Don Hooten, U. S. comedian, made his U. K. bow at the Empire Theatre here on layout topped by English thrush Anne Shelton. He has been appearing for past two years in cabaret and service shows in Germany, Austria, Belgium, France, Spain and Switzerland, and is now mulling a tour of either Spain or Scandinavia.

Hooten made pleasant bow with his comedy patter, juggling and rope spinning. He didn't wow outfronters, but got by as well as any comparatively unknown (here) American act could hope for.

Anti-Bias Commission Gets 1st Upstate N.Y. Case, Negro Girl Vs. Swim Pool

Albany, April 1.

The first public hearing held by the State Commission Against Discrimination involving an upstate place of public accommodation, and the second of its kind in the Commission's 12-year history, will be held in Albany April 21. It concerns a charge made against the long-established Mid-City Swimming Pool, on Albany-Troy Rd., by Barbara Ann Sharpe of this city.

Miss Sharpe alleged she had been denied admission to the pool because of her color. The case, which subsequently underwent "a thorough investigation" by SCAD, was first brought to the attention of the state agency by Peter M. Pryor, legal adviser to the Albany Chapter, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Commissioner J. Edward Conway ordered the public hearing, after efforts to conciliate the complaint proved futile. This is the second hearing ever held by the Commission in the "area" of public accommodations. The other one involved a New York City swimming pool. The charges against the latter were sustained by the hearing commissioners.

Mid-City Pool is part of a one-time amusement park called Mid-City Park, located about a half mile north of the Albany city line.

Fran Warren reported clicko in the Copa Room of the Havana Riviera Hotel during her two-week engagement there. She replaced Jane Powell, deferred to later in the season.

Canobie Lake, N.H., Sold To N.J. Trio for 450G

Salem, N. H., April 1.

The Canobie Lake amusement park has been sold by the Canobie Lake Recreation Co., to the Canobie Lake Realty Corp., owned by three New Jersey men, with many years of experience in operating similar establishments, for $450,000.

Officers of the buying corporation are Claude L. Cantell, Camir Ulaky and Anthony Berni, all of Cliffside Park, N. J.

The park was purchased by the late Patrick J. Holland at a public tax auction in 1931 for $17,000 and has been operated profitably every year since that time. Since Holland's death in 1943, the business had been conducted by his widow and her son, Maurice J. Holland.

Vancouver Cave Cancels Virginia O'Brien; 'Obvious Pregnancy' or Thin B.O.?

Vancouver, April 1.

"Obvious pregnancy" was the reason given by Isy Walters for cancelling out Virginia O'Brien at end of the first week (24-29) of her slated fortnight at the Cave Supper Club here. Business was poor all week.

Miss O'Brien told VARIETY she thought the action "a little silly," and that "I feel fine. I don't expect the baby for four months yet, and I don't think it shows."

GAC artist performed in a widely flared dress, chiffon-sashed.

Nosedive in bistro's boxoffice was hardly attributable to Miss O'Brien. Ostensible reason for saggy wickets is local teamsters and electricians' strike, plus indefinite shutdown of Woodfibre pulp and paper plant. Many logging camps are still closed.

Walters has been running display ads all week, "Doctor orders me to sell my Cave Supper Club." In view of this and the fact that during what would have been Miss O'Brien's closing week the hospice's bar shuttered two separate days, Election Day (31) and upcoming Good Friday (4), local feeling is that the singer was an economy victim.

All her immediate contracts will be fulfilled, Miss O'Brien said. Stu Allen, comic, has been upped to billtopper this week. "We shall fill with local people," Walters said.

Arness in St. Loo Noose

St. Louis, April 1.

James Arness, of the "Gunsmoke" teleshow, has been signed to top the lineup of the St. Louis Police Circus to be held for 11 days starting April 24.

Arness is also slated for a string of fair dates later this year.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Be there such a thing as a hex town, femme magico-hypnotist Joan Brandon will swear it's Lincoln, Neb. Before World War II Miss Brandon headed a vaude unit at the old Orpheum Theatre as a magician. One of her stunts required a fresh egg which she'd break at the end of the act. But one night a young drugstore clerk gave her a hard-boiled egg by mistake and the aud broke up when she attempted to break it.

Last week Miss Brandon returned to top the Home Show at the Pershing Aud. Before she could go on, County Sheriff Merle Karnopp intervened after an anonymous letter alerted him to an old state law forbidding hypnotic practices. Producer Carl Olson said no one with the show or Miss Brandon knew of the 1911 law. But Sheriff Karnopp said no go.

Can. Govt. Bears Down on 15% Tax Bite With 'Personal Touch'

Vancouver, April 1.

Vancouver officials of Canada's national revenue department are currently using the "personal touch" to collect 15% income tax from "foreign" artists working this area. Payroll tax bite was applied to the Irish Variety Show, at Georgia Auditorium, much to acts' surprise, and to promoter Dr. R. J. Hanna. Latter, who brings in a shamrock show every year, said "I was amazed." Paying income tax under the new ruling were Thomas O'Brien, and Pete McNulty & Co.

Basic reciprocal tax arrangements between Canada and America are unchanged, it would seem. Americans or other nationals are permitted a no-tax deal if working in Canada less than six months, and earning less than $5,000, but the tax is still payable "at the source," and the adjustment is made by refund at the end of the tax year, or is claimed as "foreign tax credit" in the country of origin, according to Howard W. Kellond, an official of the tax department.

"All they (non-resident acts) have to do is file a tax return here at the end of the year, to obtain a full refund," he said.

Kellond pointed out that the pay-as-you-work income tax arrangements came into effect Jan. 1, this year. "Places like the Cave here, and Famous Artists, are already aware of all this, and deduct the tax," he said. "It's mostly the service clubs, who bring in striptease acts, or lecturers, who usually need to be reminded."

Tax official stated that the 15% levy is applicable only to the net income, after an act's expenses have been deducted. "We shall be sending out a form letter giving all these details about deductible expenses, and it should be in the hands of most impresarios within a week," he stated.

Nitery Acts Pay Tax

Vancouver, April 1.

Thrush Virginia O'Brien, comic Stu Allen and marimbaist Nina Rae are the first nitery acts to pay the "at source" 15% Canada income tax, according to W. H. Robb, area's director of federal taxation. Acts are current (to April 5) at the Cave Supper Club.

Regarding the change in taxation of entertainers, Robb, referring to previous arrangements, said, "We used to let them (acts) come in and fill out a statement that they would not be earning the $5,000 (ceiling before tax),

EDDIE RIO'S MERGER WITH COAST TWAIN

Eddie Rio, now a Coast personal manager, has merged his office with Leonard Poncher and Robert Van Grove. New firm name is Poncher, Rio & Van Grove.

Rio was formerly Coast regional director of the American Guild of Variety Artists, resigning to become talent buyer of the Royal Nevade Hotel, Las Vegas. He recently settled for $4,500 a damage suit against the union for putting him on the unfair list when the hotel folded.

New Nitery in Dallas Woos Cavallaro for Bow

Dallas, April 1.

The 3523 Club is scheduled to be opened here May 2. Owners Jimmy & Betty Vouras and Ray LaComb are negotiating for Carmen Cavallaro as their opening headliner. He would be signed for a three-day stint.

Cavallaro is scheduled to appear at the Shamrock Hilton in Houston prior to the bow of the local club. If work on the cafe progresses according to schedule and open on May 2, it will be possible for Cavallaro to appear, otherwise the opening will be postponed for a few days and negotiations started on another headliner.

Willis' Scot Comeback

Glasgow, April 1.

Dave Willis, vet Scot comedian, is set to make a comeback April 7 as headliner of new spring vaude season at local Empress vaudery. He will top a bill staged by impresario Pete Davis. Willis is also mulling plans for a summer season at Rutherglen Repertory Theatre, near here.

Now 64, Willis was once a top star in Scotland, but has had difficulty in getting dates in recent years following a spell as a hotel owner.

Arabian Nights Post-Dunes Hypo For Acts: Riddle

Las Vegas, April 1.

As the Dunes Hotel prepares its second anni celebration since Chicago trucking tycoon Major A. Riddle took over, the record shows that the main show room consistently breaks its own attendance records. More than 200,000 have seen the various editions of the Harold Minsky revues which preemed Sept. 5, 1957. A short while before this date, the tab version of "Pajama Game" was a hefty draw.

Impresario Riddle will present Frankie Laine for a four-framer with Jack E. Leonard doing the comedy assisst starting Thursday (3). Minsky returns on May 1 with "Life Begins At Minsky's" starring Pinky Lee.

Dunes exposure has proved of great value to the acts, with many of them snagging important tv and film dates as a result of their efforts in the Arabian Room. This same prestige factor has also held true for the Sinbad cocktail lounge, according to Riddle, where such instrumental groups as the Ink Spots, Johnny Olenn, Debbie Hayes & Her Six Madmen, Al (Rubber Fingers) Morgan, the Jadimars, Ray Peterson, and Jackie & Roy have appeared.

"The hotel has been running at almost 100% occupancy, casino action has been good, in fact, so good the management is now preparing to break ground on a 19-story, 300-room addition—the tallest building in Nevada," Riddle said. "We have set mid-May as our starting date. All of this has had great appeal for A-plus star name acts, and some surprising big-name bookings will be materializing for the Dunes before summer."

Fla. Carillon in Again With Acts After a Gap

The Carillon Hotel, Miami Beach, is resuming shows Saturday (5) with a layout comprising Lenny Kent, Betty Madigan and McKay & Charles. Denise Darcel is set for April 15.

The hotel opened during the season with name layouts, the Andrews Sisters being on its premiere show. However, the shows were dropped with the advent of bad weather and subsequent slow biz. Hotel apparently found that, to keep up with the rest of the Gold Coast inns, it would be better to resume with names. It's now starting to shop around for next winter.

Izzy Grove as Promoter

Agent Izzy Grove has turned promoter. He'll handle the Alan Freed touring show in its Newark (N.J.) stand May 10 at the Armory.

Grove is guaranteeing Freed $6,000 for a matinee and evening show, with 50% over $12,000.

100% CONTROL & SELF-INSURANCE

The AGVA Welfare Trust Fund is being prepared for a complete takeover by the, American Guild of Variety Artists. Through the medium of economic pressure upon trustees representing the employers, and preparatory appointments within the office of the fund, it is seen that the balanced setup now partially in effect will be destroyed in a short time.

As run under the fund charter, the group is administered by six trustees—three representing the union and three acting for employers.

During the past few months AGVA, through its national administrative secretary, Jackie Bright, has been preparing for a unilateral control by the union, and is seeking a rubber-stamp board. He already has achieved one phase of that aim, by dismissing the old AGVA trustees, which comprised outsiders, and substituting Union board members whom he controls. The union has been instrumental in getting one of its members, Alan Walker, to be the office manager of the fund.

The takeover of the fund by the union is preparatory to the fund going self-insured, which would mean that it would process all collections and claims. Currently, Lloyds of London is the insurer, but notices has been given that

2d Tea Party On Tap as Hub Eyes Drinking License

Boston, April 1.

A $1 license for booze imbibers, aimed to raise revenue for the state and curb abuse of liquor laws by teeners, alcoholics and welfarites, was proposed by the Boston Licensing Board Friday (28).

The annual report of the BLB also asked for a law to authorize local agencies to level fines on violators of the law. The board suggested a nominal fee—probably $1—for permits to drink in niteries, bars, cocktail lounges or make package purchases.

Town & Country Suffers Big Rap From Judy Garland 'Incident'; Lots Of Creditors; Denise Darcel Subs

One of the stormiest nitery engagements ever to take place in any cafe in the country ended Sunday (30) in Brooklyn when Judy Garland announced from the mike after two songs at the Town & Country Club, to a full house of 1,700, that she had laryngitis and wouldn't be able to sing. The mike was cut off and Miss Garland, moving offstage said, "It doesn't matter, I've just been fired anyway." Maksik said it was to prevent her from a streak of offbeat words.

Just who did the firing and the events leading up to it will most likely form the basis of a series of claims and counterclaims between Miss Garland and operator Ben Maksik. Denise Darcel started as a replacement Monday (31).

According to Maksik, the events transpiring on Sunday, before the storm broke, started with a call from Miss Garland stating that she was ill and wouldn't be able to go on. He then called Norman Weiss, a Music Corp. of America exec who services the T&C, and was told that she would certainly perform that evening. He brought Miss Garland in from a rented home in Neponsit, L. I.

A lot of customers in the spot wouldn't pay their bills. One organization party didn't shell out a $2,300 tab on the ground that Miss Garland didn't give a show. Others similarly refused to pony up at the end of the evening. Miss Garland was booked for 25 days at a salary of $25,000 weekly, with extra shows going at $1,750 each.

Roster of Creditors

Maksik said that prior to going on that evening Miss Garland and her husband, Sid Luft, whom she is suing for divorce and who had

Circus' 115G Break-In

Charlotte, N.C., April 1.

Likelihood now is that RB-B&B Circus will have annual break-ins prior to opening at Madison Square Garden, N. Y. First pre-N. Y. opening at the Coliseum here resulted in a whopping $115,000 for eight performances in five days last week.

Record five-day take for the arena was achieved only after one of the heaviest exploitation jobs done in this area. Coliseum manager Paul Buck staged parades, had the elephants give free rides to the kiddies and billed the event as far as 100 miles away.

Ringling N.C. Bow With New Smell & Record Gross

Charlotte, N.C., April 1.

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus held its 1958 premiere here Wednesday (26) in the Coliseum. It was the first time—certainly in modern history—the circus has opened a season in any city other than New York. It ran for five days before packing out for Madison Square Garden.

The thing most impressive to the press and audiences for this first non-New York opening was the "new smell" of the circus. Most reviewers and commentators spoke of the fact that the show was "clean" or "sweet smelling." Several daily papers editorialized on this aspect.

The circus' new look of indoor performances, more girls and fewer animals, is responsible for its cleanliness and its change from the traditional opening in Madison Square Garden. Instead of sawdust, the circus performs on green rubber padding which is hosed down after each performance.

Now that the circus travels with only 40 horses and 20 elephants,

Bennie Berger's Health Capsule

By LES REES

Minneapolis, April 1.

At a time when many niteries everywhere are falling by the wayside or experiencing economic hard going due to the 20% cabaret tax, television competition, video's exposure of their talent, name headliners' skyhigh asking prices and frequent unavailability and shrinking amusement buying power, there's an entirely different story at local Schiek's.

Owner Bennie Berger credits that establishment's comparatively inexpensive nine-year-old floor entertainment — capsuled musical comedies and other such presentations employing only local, moderately salaried talent—with having converted the spot from a "just getting by" high class eating place into an equally high class theatre restaurant bonanza whose prosperity has continued uninterruptedly from the very start.

In fact, asserts Berger, its soon-ending fiscal year is certain to be the most prosperous of all of its nine big years. And it'll go into its 10th year with nary a change in its policy.

Floorshows' cast comprises a youthful singing sextet, an equal number of girls and boys, and there's a four-piece local orch, a Minneapolis producer, Glyde Snyder, and rented costumes, all of which add up to an approximate $1,500 weekly nut. That's less, for example, than the Hotel Radisson Flame Room, the Twin Cities' only supper club, pays most of the time for its single act.

Started with Sauerkraut

Schiek's was established in 1887 and always has been famed for its German food and been one of some dozen leading and fine eating places here. Theatre circuit owner Berger acquired it from the founding family in 1944. He operated it for four years in the same manner as his predecessors—as a restaurant, sans any kind of entertainment.

Because it only was "about breaking even" and he foresaw no money-making potential, Berger put it up for sale. When he couldn't find a satisfactory buyer and feeling that an experiment was in order, he correctly decided floor entertainment might stimulate patronage.

It also occurred to him that his favorite radio program of that time, the "Great Northern Hour," comprising the best songs of musical comedy hits, could be the basis of a Schiek's floorshow that would appeal to its and other carriage trade.

Berger called in Snyder and detailed to the latter what he wanted—a 30 to 40-minute capsuled version of musicomedies with three

DICK JONES ELECTED TO PHILLY AGVA BD.

Philadelphia, April 1.

Dick Jones, long a stormy figure in the American Guild of Variety Artists, has returned to the political arena of the union. He has been elected to the Philly branch executive board.

Jones recently won a libel verdict against national administrative secretary Jackie Bright and his predecessor Jack Irving. Bright's tab was picked up by the union and a $20,000 settlement was made.

Lease B'port Amus. Park 5 Years to Bert Nathan

Bridgeport, April 1.

Bert Nathan has leased Pleasure Beach amusement park, long owned and operated by the City of Bridgeport, for five years for $10,000 guarantee annually plus 7 to 10% of gross.

Park will go in for more entertainment this year. Leon Newman Agency which will book the resort, is now lining up shows as well as name bands for the season. The entertainment budget is being enlarged this year as a means of perking attendance.

Operation of the island resort, connected to the mainland by bridge, has been a steadily losing proposition, with anticipated loss of more than $4,500 weekly this season, according to Mayor Samuel J. Tedesco. Latter had even figured on possible closing of park because of outlay on repairing bridge.

One of major attractions at Pleasure Beach is Connecticut's largest ballroom, featuring name bands through the summer. John Molloy, longtime manager of Pleasure Beach, will now concentrate on city-run Klein Memorial auditorium in Bridgeport proper.

recently come into New York, had demanded money for the remainder of the engagement in advance. Maksik said he had refused on several counts, one being that a load of third-party orders requiring deductions for certain of Miss Garland's creditors had been served upon him. Also MCA had asked him to pay directly to them. Included in those who had obtained liens were the State of New York for $5,000 in back taxes on 1951 earnings; the Federal Government, to which she had agreed to pay $10,000 on an indebtedness of $30,000, and others. There was also a tab for $8,700 from coutouriers Bergdorf-Goodman.

In addition, according to Maksik, he has made advances which when totalled, he said, would tally almost $40,000. Included, he said, were three $5,000 advances prior to her opening. Several times he gave her $500 according to her needs. Maksik said that Miss Garland told him that she had never received any of those checks inasmuch as Luft handled all her finances.

One of the surprises of the occasion was the behavior of MCA, says Maksik. Had Weiss not forced her to go on, according to Maksik, it's quite likely that she would have lost one evening only, and may have gotten well enough to go on the following night, and thus the rest of the engagement would have been salvaged.

House Rental, Etc.

In addition to these expenses, Maksik says he was also tapped for $1,600 rental of the house she was occupying; $1,000 security on furnishings; a C.O.D. for $360; he paid for a high chair, a bed and a mattress for her baby; several C.O.D.s for liquor; $280 for the rental of a car; rehearsals for her musicians; $500 for her conductor and musicians; several payments to her voice teacher, along with other expenditures. Maksik, on Monday, after stories on the situation had broken in the press, received a phone call from a supermarket in Neponsit asking whether he would remit a $360 charge by Miss Garland. In addition, Maksik said that he had his chef prepare food to be sent to the house occupied by the singer.

Maksik said he shuddered to think of what the phone bill would be like. He said she spoke to Luft at least once daily before he came in from the Coast. Maksik said that Miss Garland also called him at home at all hours of the night, complaining that the phone was being tapped. One evening, he said, he advanced her $500 and she took the family to the Waldorf in a $175 suite.

Trouble started almost from the beginning when Miss Garland said that she couldn't do two shows nightly without a night off. A compromise was made wherein she would do one show a night on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays, and two on the other nights. Maksik claims a refund is entitled him on that basis.

Maksik suspected that things would be amiss Sunday afternoon when Miss Garland failed to show at a party he gave for her son Joey which was attended by 60 kids.

Miss Darcel is tentatively set to play out Miss Garland's time until April 13. Jack Carter plays one week and then Sophie Tucker comes in April 21.

Maksik figures his loss on the balance of the engagement will be between $50,000 and $75,000. He sent out wires to MCA, Miss Garland and Luft holding them responsible for termination of engagement.

Generally, it has been a disas- moneymakers were Jerry Lewis and Harry Belafonte.

'A Pall Over the Audience'

Barney Tolk of the Madison Ave. Biderman & Tolk industrial promotion partnership was present at Town & Country and provides an eye-witness account as a non-pro. He estimates the room 95%, with a preponderance of preorganized parties, many from Brooklyn temples and clubs. He was there on the charity tap via his wife. When the first announcement was made that Miss Garland would not appear his table discussed at some length whether to pay the bill. He believes that similiar huddlings were in progress at other tables throughout the large room and that this reached management through the waiters.

"We had the impression that she was pressed into service to just make an appearance and get the house off the limb. The lyrics of her song, an apology, sounded very strange. When she started to address the audience, revealing she was fired, the microphone immediately was cut backstage and she made her other remarks without magnification. The whole episode cast a pall over the audience and made everybody feel embarrassed and cheated."

each locally recruited feminine and masculine singers and appropriate staging and costuming. He wished to give this a whirl to see if Schiek's couldn't be made into a winner. Incidentally, the policy had been tried with varying success in one of Chicago's Hotel Sherman rooms.

At Schiek's the experiment proved an instant click. As an added inducement for dinners—coupled with the topdrawer food, including table d'hote dinners priced at $3.50 up, the same as at the city's other leading restaurants, which offer no entertainment, it began packing 'em in.

SRO Dinner Shows

The room in which the shows are presented on a stage seats 260 and over the nine years has been and still is, almost without fail, sold out every night by advance reservations for the 8:15 p.m. dinner presentation. The dinner show take carries the operation, but the supper show at 11:15 p.m. also draws well enough to justify its presentation and is especially profitable weekends. Its patronage is helped by the difficulty in gaining admission for the early show, says Berger.

Shows are changed every two weeks and from time to time there are changes, too, in the singing cast. The spot is closed Sundays. Snyder has remained as producer.

During the first years, dinner show patrons who paid their food checks before the show's start were not charged the 20% cabaret tax—a help in getting the policy off to a fast start. However, the internal revenue department finally stepped in and required the tax's assessment. Early in the policy, too, Rodgers & Hammerstein compelled Berger to stop using the names of any of their shows in Schiek's publicity and advertising and, after that, none of the advertising contained such information. That didn't halt the capacity dinner show business.

Site Getting Garage, Wivel Will Travel

The Wivel Restaurant, one of the oldest niteries in New York, has closed its doors (23) after 30 years. The property was taken over by the City of New York which plans to erect a 600-car garage on the site. Svend Jorgensen, the owner, is looking around for another site and hopes to be able to open by the fall.

The Wivel, one of the earliest smorgasbord eateries in New York, generally used performers who were getting their first break in Gotham. Many of those who got their early experience there are now standards on the cafe circuit.

R&R at B'klyn Par, or Alan Freed's 'Big Beat' Loaded With Amateurs

The latest edition of Alan Freed's in-person rock 'n' roll show tagged "The Big Beat," runs off like a test of human endurance. Where, in former years, Freed emceed a stageshow that ran for a relatively long hour, with a feature film break, now he's graduated to a concert format spreading over two-and-a-half hours with only a short midway break for lobby smokes and Cokes.

At the Brooklyn Paramount last Friday and Saturday (28-29) in the kickoff of a cross-country tour, Freed show may have given the kids a lot of what they wanted, but most of it hardly rated as professional entertainment. Of the 16 or so turns, only a handful were of a pro calibre. The rest were juve combos that got lucky with a disk hit but do not rate as stage acts. Without the echo effects of a recording chamber, in fact, most of these combos sounded far flatter than they do on platters.

Even the kids at the Brooklyn Paramount, who paid up to $3 for their reserved seats, were getting hep to the obvious no-talent fare. Unprecedented for a rock 'n' roll show, where the youngsters are usually so square that they will take anything just so long as it has the modern beat and the sound, the kids booed some of the more pathetic combos, most of which followed each other in monotonous succession during the first half. The second half was a decided improvement.

After a rocking instrumental dished up by Sam (The Man) Taylor, heading a group of paid-up Local 802 members, the various vocal ensembles were brought on stage to do a couple of songs with the standardized uh-uh-uhs and the same, laughable choreographic sight stuff. The costuming of the various combos also followed an iron rule: the flatter the singer, the gaudier the getup.

Danny & The Juniors, which clicked with "At the Hop," did three numbers, mixing up the ballads and the uptempo numbers but making everything come out exactlly the same way. They were markedly flat.

The Velours, another quartet, followed with more of the same toneless music, succeeded by Dickie Do & The Don't, a quintet which was easily the most incomprehensible turn on the show. As a change of pace, the Shirels, a femme foursome, followed with their click, "I Met on a Sunday," but it was a smalltown amateur night performance.

The first breakthrough of talent was screaming Jay Hawkins and his son in a couple of wild numbers which at least had the kids jumping, even though Hawkin's chief stock in trade is something which in most other contexts would be called noise. Following Hawkins, the parade of combos started again with the Twin Tones, a couple of twin juves whose flatness was extraordinary; the Beltones, a quartet slightly less flat; the Pastels, another quartet equally skilled; and the Thunderbirds, a quintet of two gals and three men who at least know how to move around the stage and sing passably.

In the second half, the talent quotient was considerably higher. Larry Williams, backed by an instrumental quintet, generated strong excitement with powerful sounding on the piano and some completely uninhibited vocals in which he did a modified strip, throwing his shoes, ties, shirt, etc., into the audience.

Buddy Holly & The Crickets, a trio, were standout clicks. Holly, a first-rate guitarist and folksinger, knows all the wild rockabilly mannerisms and used them to lift the kids out of their seats. Another fave is Chuck Berry, a talented songwriter and a singer with a regular, pronounced beat to which the audience can stomp and clap to. In the solo department, Ed Townsend registered moderately with the kids with his more or less legit crooning voice, while Jo Ann Campbell, a petite blonde thrush wearing a tight fitting gown to delineate her chassis, added the sole bit of sex appeal on the show. She was a big click.

Winding up the show was Jerry Lee Lewis, one of the current top rockabilly performers. Even after the frantic acts that preceded him, Lewis was able to reach new heights of frenzy in his vocalizing and banging on the piano. Of such stuff is the rock 'n' roll movement made.

As emcee, Freed kept his chatter down to the barest minimum, mostly serving as a traffic cop to get the heavy pedestrian flow of combos on and off expeditously.

The tour is shaping as a box-office click. In five shows at Brooklyn the package racked a strong $33,000. On Sunday (30) at the State, New Haven, $21,000 was pulled in from three shows. At Loew's Paradise, Bronx, the rock 'n' rollers drew $12,500 for two shows Monday (31) and the following day hit around $16,000 at Convention Hall, Philadelphia. Today (Wed.) the troupe is playing a concert-dance at New York's Coliseum with a $22,000 sellout indicated. Herm.

Alhambra, Paris

Paris, March 26.

Georges Ulmer, Nitwits (10), Martin Bros. (2), Don Lurio & Co. (3), Serge Davri, Blondine, Kokkers (2), Irene Lecarte, Claude Bolling Orch (19); $1.50 top.

Georges Ulmer is a singer-clefferm-mime-impressionist-comedian. He is breezy and personable, with an agreeable voice and proper projection. Yet, all these talents have not yet been properly joined. Songs treat human foibles, and touching heights, but impressions and comedics tend to be sketchy. However, he goes big here and his various facets look to click soon. A solid staple star now, he may yet be a real bigtimer.

Ulmer is aided by Blondine who is okay in breathless voiced chirp sessions or duets. But she looks to remain mainly of orch level and still seems to lack the personality and individuality to go on her own.

Nitwits (10), an Anglo parody orch, were in the last Lido nitery show. They are just as funny in a theatre; they clown while belting out arrangements on various folk and standard melodies. Timing and capers are traditional, but given freshness by an impeccable serio-Anglo approach for big yocks and mitts.

Serge Davri is another zany who all but breaks up the place in a takeoff on an old ham with dust-raising costumes and an ancient mariner. He explodes things, breaks dishes on his head, sprays the aud with water and powder, and turns this into a madcap routine for big mitts. His comedy is shock in value but it goes over big. He might be worth video or boite usage in the U. S.

Martin Bros. are a rapid juggling team who handle firebrands blindfolded and keep up their pace to a carioca backing. It is topnotch for opener or filler use and a natural for Yank vaude stints.

Don Lurio & Co. has the Yank choreographer-terper giving out with some breezy, athletic interludes aided by two femme lookers. Fast inventive and deft, he has concocted a fine house or cabaret act. Lurio did the modern terp choreography for the Francoise Sagan ballet, "The Broken Date."

Fokkers are a big woman and a little man in a knockabout, lowdown act high in laughs. Familiar but perennial, this is a solid standard filler. Irene Lecarte has matured in technique and displays a dramatic verve in her ballads and street songs. But her resemblance to too many Gallic headliners puts her only in the support groove.

Claude Bolling Orch (19) adds some well orchestrated medleys and backs the numbers well. This emerges as a cohesive, eye-catching show and looks in for three weeks of good biz. Absence of the usual femcee is not missed in this fast moving house entry. Mosk.

Apollo, N. Y.

Imperial Gospel Singers (4), Pilgrim Harmonaires (6), Gospel Clefs (6), Harmonizing Four, Bradford's Specials (5), Ward Singers (6), Fred Barr & Doc Wheeler, Gilbert Adkins; "Day the Earth Stood Still" (U).

This marks the seventh appearance of WWRL's Doc Wheeler & Fred Barr Gospel Caravan production at the Harlem theatre and show is already pencilled in for another engagement in May. Management is convinced there is a healthy patronage for the gospel type of singing and current audience reactions bears this out remarkably well.

Imperial Gospel Singers (three girls at the mike and one at piano) are making their first appearance at this house, scoring heavily with such sturdy numbers as "I Found Him" and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot." Garbed in pale blue choir gowns, they make a wholesome appearance. Pilgrim Harmonaires, six boys with one on guitar, also make their initial appearance here, drawing much applause, especially for "You Gotta Move."

Gospel Clefs, six male singers in black choir robes, warm the house with their interpretations of "Steal Away to Jesus" and "Go Down, Brother Moses." An affectionate bit is turned in by Wheeler & Barr, emcees, with their version of "Jesus Lifted Me." Both Barr and Wheeler are warmly received and do a fetching job of emceeing, making both audience and performers feel right at home.

Show stealer is Gilbert Adkins, remembered for his appearance in "Finian's Rainbow," and screen treatment of "Face In The Crowd." His deliverance of James Weldon Johnson's "The Creation" is a piece of powerful poetry reading and his handling of gospels is artistry. Harmonizing Four, four boys in gray suits, also click with patrons. Their highspots are "One Day," "Motherless Child" and "Were You There?" Both Tommy Johnson and Jimmy Jones have standout voices in this quartet.

Ward Singers, six females in brightly-garbed choir robes, do "Get Away" and "Packin' Up." Clara Ward's "Somebody Bigger Than You and I" brings shouts of "amen" from a house ringing with religious fervor. A Chicago group, Bradford Specials, five male singers in white and gold robes, offer "Trampin'," "I've Got A Job" and "It All Belongs To Him," numbers penned by Prof. Alex Bradford, leader of the group.

Prof. Herman Stevens provides additional music at the Hammond organ. He does it with knowledge and bounce. The current Gospel Caravan is a long show filled with the best of hymns and certain to draw from both Harlem and other parts of the city. Rans.

Empress, Glasgow

Glasgow, March 27.

Issy Bonn, Milton Woodward with Millicent Cooper, Henri Vadden & Partner, Cassandras (2), Billy Redmond, Jimmy Nicol, Jimmy Warren, Norma Goldie, Hal & Winnie Mack, Arthur Roynan Orch.

Issy Bonn, longtime English entertainer, has an indefinable magic of humanity that can hold an audience, a la Sophie Tucker. In fact, his homespun songalog and philosophizing bear strong kinship to the Tucker variety. Rotund, easy-going singer, using poise that derives from ong experience, scores here at head of an indifferent layout, and ranges nostalgically through fave tunes and oldtime ballads, telling story of his own show biz life via the various tune highlights.

Henri Vadden, assisted by femme partner, manipulates a large cartwheel atop spiked he'met after balancing the wheel and tossing it for downward drop on to spike. The Cassandras are lively acrobatic mixed pair who indulge in skillful tumbling with comedy seasoning. Billy Redmond tinkles the xylophone, Jimmy Warren is a new comedian with n.s.g. material, and Jimmy Nicol, Glasgow comedian, doesn't rise to situation with hoary, outmoded gag folder.

Norma Goldie is a fresh-faced soprano with talent potential who merits attention from bookers. Hal & Winnie Mack fill the opening dance slotting, but minus polish. Milton Woodward winds the first-half segment with his novelty drinks-bar, conjuring up drinks at audience request and using a group of outfronters as onstage jury the while his distaff partner walks on and off in quick change of gowns, act, longtime established in vauderies here, is ingenious and entertaining despite its familiarity to regular showgoers.

Arthur Roynan batons resident orch. Stage sets are a minimum and suffer from shabbiness. Apart from Bonn and Woodward, layout has little pulling power or newness, and is a poor example of what British vaude can offer. Gord.

AGVA Grab

firm that the policy is being dropped; AGVA would take over on its own.

See Political Football

Fear is being voiced, not only by union members but by outsiders as well, that the fund, if its present format is successfully made to conform with the administration plan, will become a political football played for the benefit of the present AGVA administration. It's pointed out that the union's sick and relief fund already fits that description, and it would not be long before the welfare fund becomes administered along identical lines.

The administration plan became evident sometime ago when it sought to substitute its own counsel, Harold Berg, for the incumbents Silverstone & Rosenthal who wrote the present trust fund charter. When the employer trustees refused to go along, pressures of various kinds were introduced without any appreciable effect. The employer trustees, spearheaded by the then chairman Nat Abramson, having refused to substitute attorneys, economic pressure was brought into play. Abramson, whose major income in derived from cruises booking, is likely to get the present cruise scale hiked from $50 weekly to $125, already recommended by the AGVA national board. Other employer administrators face other economic sanction unless they comply with AGVA's wishes. So far, they've been holding firm for administration of the fund along present lines.

Self-Insurance Hazard

An actuarial report has already been made. This, according to insiders, recommends that the union become self-insured. What provision it will make for disaster insurance isn't known as yet. It has been pointed out that one plane crash carrying a complete show could bankrupt the fund.

Presently, the fund derives its coin by employer contributions exclusively. The employer pays sums ranging from $1 for one-nighters to $3.50 for outdoor engagements weekly per performer. Difference between actual cost of the policy to the fund and the sum collected from the employer has resulted in a reserve now estimated at about $250,000. Policy provides for $7,500 in the event of loss of life, and medical expenses of varied sums.

Thus far, the trustees have been fighting most of the encroachments, but how long they'll be able to hold out under an economic squeeze is speculative. They are awaiting the next move by Bright. Some fear that they may not even be able to resign when the time comes to vote against any AGVA proposal because of possibility of retaliation which could work a hardship on an employer who is a trustee.

Aside from Abramson, who has served as chairman of the fund for several terms before stepping down, other employer trustees are George A. Hamid Sr., president of GAC-Hamid, and Charlie Rapp, a major mountain resort booker.

Windsor Hotel, Montreal

Most authentic of the bilingual chirpers seen to date in the Embassy Room of the Windsor, Monique Gaube establishes her Gallic charm and flavor immediately and builds steadily. Born in Paris, Miss Gaube has made her home in Montreal for the past three years and present engagement is her first major cafe try in Montreal.

Previous experience has been gained through the French-Canadian television network, a brief stint in Palm Beach and several weeks at Chez Gerard in Quebec City. Femme is short, a brunet with a neat figure that is nicely proportioned and an appealing manner both on the floor and with a song.

Songalog is evenly divided with French and English tunes and she wisely stays away from the routine Gallic items. This strengthens her act and gives her more individuality. Patter and explanatory gabbing is in English and she seldom resorts to the usual coyness about her lack of English as do other refugees from the Gallic boites. Arrangements are interesting despite signs of a limited budget and overall piping has warmth and clarity.

Given excellent support by pianist Max Chamitov and his group, Miss Gaube exhibits plenty of show biz determination and a sincerity that deserves more than a casual listen. Newt.

DARRYL STEWART

Copa, Pittsburgh

Young Australian singer should have no trouble finding a wide and ready market for his wares in this country. A recording star, vaude personality and legit player (Lieutenant Cable in a touring "South Pacific") Down Under, he could repeat on all the same fronts hereabouts without much trouble.

Stewart has the appearance, the voice and the style. He has a warm and engaging manner on the floor, occasionally drifting up to the ringside with a hand mike for some direct attention to a customer—a femme, natch!—that is effective, and he generally manages to ingratiate himself in other ways, too.

Australian seems to get a kick himself out of what he's doing, and it becomes contagious, with result that you can look around the room and find a variety of happy faces, all of them taking their cue from the boy. Stewart isn't of the low register school but has a full, strong set of pipes and uses them to advantage. Right now, he's apparently sticking to the standards, and could wisely mix them up a bit more, but on the whole Stewart makes a strong impression and looks like a good bet for any and all kinds of rooms.

Copa is his first cafe stand in America and a general idea of his potential is the fact that Lenny Litman, who owns and operates the room, has already booked him back for May, with a couple of options after that riding. Cohen.

Ringling

the huge circus trains are gone. Some of the single performers travel in leased railroad cars, but all families drive their own cars and pull house trailers.

It's a long drive from winter quarters in Sarasota, Fla., to New York. Too long, circus authorities decided, and Charlotte's big Coliseum (10,000 seating caypacity) is just about halfway.

John Ringling North came here to see finishing touches put on the 1958 edition of the Greatest Show on Earth. North, who usually travels by private rail car, drove down from N.Y. He remained in Charlotte through the local engagement, then returned to N.Y. for the opening in the Garden tomorrow (Wed.).

Europe, he says, produces the best circus acts because of its apprentice system. A performer takes a youngster under his wing, gives him the family name, and teaches him the skill and tricks of the act. Within a few years the apprentice has grown into a full-fledged performer himself.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Vic Damone, Jane Kean with Ron Fletcher, Copa Girls, Ted Morrell, Mimi, Danii & Genii Prior, Michael Durso and Frank Marti Orchs; $5.50 minimum.

The spring bill at Jules Podell's East 60th St. cellar is bright and winning, thanks to headliners Vic Damone and comedienne Jane Kean teamed with terper Ron Fletcher.

The weight of the bill rests on Damone's pipes and he carries it off with ease and assurance. In a recent N.Y. outing at the Waldorf-Astoria, Damone bogged down under a cargo of unnecessary patter and overly cute mannerisms. In current stand, however, he's sticking to the business at hand-singing—and he wins 'em handily without the extra dressing.

He's got a fine repertoire of oldies and he delivers with a simplicity and sincerity that turn them into winners all over again. He mixes up the rhythm and the ballads in a way that keeps his turn alive and vibrant. After a brisk "I Like New York In June" opener he goes through such as "Bewitched," "I've Got You Under My Skin," "Someone To Watch Over Me," "Can't Take That Away From Me," "September Song," "Night and Day," his current disk, "Gigi," his last-year click, "On The Street Where You Live," etc. It's a bagful of goodies which he turns into a delightful songfest.

Miss Kean is a wide-eyed funster who builds a likeable turn out of song and dance. In latter department she gets a classy assist from Ron Fletcher who also helped stage the act. It's a slick nitery offering all the way. Miss Kean gets most mileage out of impresh bits. When she's carboning Louella Parsons, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Marilyn Monroe, Lena Horne or Sophie Tucker, she's way ahead. She's also in front with such tunes as "It's Great To Be Alive" and "Gotta Guy," and the terp sequences with Fletcher help round out the act in neat fashion.

The Copa cuties continue to hold up as eye-fillers in the production sequences and the Michael Durso and Frank Marti orchs are ever-faithful to the beat. Gros.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, March 26.

Jane Powell, Liberace, Matt & Matty King, Bill Alexander Orch (12); $5.50 minimum.

Thanks to a fortuitous spot booking after Martha Raye couldn't get out of sick bay, the Chi Chi Starlite room is hitting like M. Mantle this week. Trouble in Australia and trouble in Cuba left Liberace with a 10-day layoff before he is scheduled to hop to England Thursday (3) and from there to rep American performers at the Brussels Fair. As he has a home here, he gladly filled in for the ailing comedienne.

The fizzing Cuba revolt has also affected Jane Powell's booking into Havana. Irwin Schuman offered her split billing with Liberace. She accepted, thus solving Schuman's problem of what to use for an encore after Jerry Lewis' record two-week run.

Only hitch is that both Liberace and Miss Powell are featuring bongo drummers. The pianist's is a Cuban named Darius and the singer's is Jack Costanzo. Both are tour-de-force performers and it's doubtful if nitery habitues are quite that mad about off beat finger-tappers.

Liberace's act, shortened a little, is otherwise the same as used here a month ago. He gives what he knows of George Gershwin, saying he intended to feature this medley at the Brussels World's Fair. It is okay and proved Gershwin is really dead because Liberace doesn't fool around much with the compositions of live composers. He also plays some of "My Fair Lady," explaining that he was not permitted to do this in Australia and was glad to be back in a country where he could play what he "damned well pleased." This of course isn't any truer here than elsewhere but it got a hand.

He said Australian audiences were marvelous—but the critics! "One even resented I had a mother. Maybe he wasn't so lucky." Of course, this is o d Lib material, playing audiences vs. crix, but the recent hassle with the Aussies freshened it a bit.

His calypso song, ("I wrote it myself") is an audience-partic. tion thing with a chorus of "La de da de da de da" and music about as original as "Oh Susanna." It's dancing continues to be embarrassingly bad. "I'm no Belafonte, but then he's no Liberace" got its laughs; but the laughs didn't improve the time-steps. Finished with his medley of request numbers, ending on "Beer Barrel Polka" from a fellow-investor in Schlitz stock.

He's a hard man to follow, even for a film star like Jane Powell who, though small as a dime, can belt out a song like an opera star and has danced with Fred Astaire. Except for their bongo-getters, they had nothing in common, but nevertheless Liberace is an old hand at conning audiences vis-a-vis and Miss Powell is not.

Her novelty is a song from "Candide" with a huge jewel box. While singing "Baubles, Bangles" she decorates herself with ropes of pearls, rings, bracelets and ultimately a "diamond-studded" tiara. Then she takes them off and puts them back in the jewel box, still singing baubles, bangles, etc. It's at least an original number for a nitery but the music isn't of itself a smash success.

She does some Helen Morgan singing while parked on a piano and after a terrific duet of her singing "Whooo" while Jack Costanzo tears at the bongo drums she finishes with a distaste to see the evening sun go down. It's a quality act that will do better when not co-billed.

Matt & Matty King open as a dance team and are okay. Bill Alexander's orch keeps out of the way of Liberace's finger exercises and backs up all acts well. Scul.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, March 25.

Mickey Rooney, Joey Forman, The Lancers (4), The Cavanaughs (2), Dorothy Dorben Dancers (12), Showgirls (6), Ray Sinatra Orch (13); produced by Sammy Lewis; $3 minimum.

Although Mickey Rooney has been bringing virtually the same act into Vegas for the past couple of years, he opened this time with a sock turn that is almost brand new. Only his "Candid Camera" skit is encored for a solid bowoff, and very funny routine is a welcome returnee.

Joey Forman is again Rooney's partner in the romp, and the well-balanced team gets biggest yocks with a "Bridge on the River Kwai" takeoff and "Las Vegas Awards," latter spoofing Oscar Derby by handing accolades to best waiter, chef, dealer, and parking lot attendant. Rooney's celeb impreshes are good, and Forman is an uncanny soundalike of Louis Prima and Pete Smith. Writer Mel Diamond deserves a special nod for the fresh material.

The Lancers (4) are featured, and the Coral recording artists show here why they are one of the top pop groups in the biz. Not only is the quartet highly listenable with vocal tricks that add up to shrewd showmanship, it is an exciting visual act which scores in the comedy department. Jerry Meacham, Richard Burr, Bob Porter and Corky Lindgren give faithful imitations of the Ink Spots, Mills Bros., Four Lads, the Diamonds, and include in their songology "Straight Ahead," "Rock Island Line," "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "I'm Just Happy Being Me," latter an original written by the group.

Production numbers featuring the Dorothy Dorben Dancers and showgirls, with a smooth ice specialty by the Cavanaughs, are held over. Ray Sinatra orch expertly backs package. Duke.

Steuben's, Boston

Boston, March 27.

Pam Dennis, Trotter Bros. (2), Bunny Briggs, Don Dennis, Tony Bruno Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

Well-balanced show finds blonde looker Pam Dennis chirping a slick songalog for Steuben partyites. Caught opening night (27) and in for two weeks, the tall-stemmed piper opens with "Holiday for Strings," segues to "Last Time I Saw Paris," and gets off a big production number of "Somewhere Over Rainbow." She gabs with the customers, strolls with the mike, and sets the scene in New Orleans for modernistic impresh job on "Basin Street Blues."

Trotter Bros. win salvos with their puppets, a woozy sailor, poodle dogs and even a striptease lass. Bunny Briggs, fast stepping sepia tapster, amazes with intricate terp routines and goes off way ahead. Don Dennis brings down the house with "Seventy Six Trombones," marching through the aud with Tony Bruno following. Dennis gets heavy mitting with "Goodbye to Rome" for finale. Tony Bruno cuts the show crisply.

New Yorkers, Norton & Patricia, Git Johnson open Thursday (10). Guy.

Hotel Plaza, N. Y.

Jana Mason, Ted Straeter Orch, Mark Monte's Continentals; $3 cover.

Jana Mason, a comparative longtermer in show biz, has seen service in a variety of fields. Miss Mason has come up from the jazz rooms, where she is impressed as one of the brighter lights, has played the Copacabana and now moves into the rarefied heights of the Plaza's Persian Room, where she brings a know-how, competence and warmth that bespeak her long experience. Audiencewise, it seems she must start anew in each field she enters. Unfortunately, she must make herself known to a new set of cafegoers; but she'll leave a warm imprint upon the carriage trade with this engagement, and subsequent stands in the N.Y. class rooms should bring additional compensation to the boxoffice.

Miss Mason, it's remembered, plied the smaller rooms in New York as Jana Jones. When Joni James hit it big through disks, apparently Miss Mason felt that with the similarity in nomenclature, there would be some confusion, and so started anew under another label.

In her Persian Room bow, Miss Mason brings a charming mien and a tune collection that holds attention. Her numbers are mainly in the standard vein, but she infuses a knowing and sophisticated angle into these songs and makes for 40 minutes of delightful listening. Her approach to the numbers is geared to maximum responses inasmuch as she plays close to the crowd with a portable mike. Miss Mason shows variety and infuses her catalog with a lot of color.

Satorially, Miss Mason makes the class grade in a white gown and a silver-flecked coif. Her looks and tunes reflect elegance. She's a welcome addition to the inn circuit.

Per usual, Ted Straeter furnishes aid and comfort to the talent with his impeccable backing, and Mark Monte's dance relief is of the floor-filling variety. Jose.

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

Montreal, March 27.

Patricia Wilson, Johnny Gallant, Paul Notar Quartet; $2-$2.50 cover.

Comedienne Patricia Wilson brings a refreshing new note to the entertainment formula of the Ritz Cafe and the change is a welcome one. An equal with many of her predecessors in appearance and material in this attractive room, Miss Wilson, on her first Montreal engagement, makes a definite impression and should be a cinch for a repeat next season.

Although present act is still in its formative stages, Miss Wilson displays a fine sense of timing and a diversified selections of songs. With more judicious selection of numbers and the polishing of others, thrush should end up with a package adaptable to any of the better class rooms looking for a solid offbeat performer.

An inherent sense of humor and a nimble mind are two assets Miss Wilson has and takes advantage of. Both are evident throughout song session as she satirizes current fashions, exploits the mambo-samba set and kids the couch-and-dream boys. Piping is as different as her personality; a reprise of "Limehuose Blues" and I've Got Rhythm" come out as silkly smooth ballads, while a parody of a bosomy film actress with legit yearnings is belted in rousing fashion. These deliberate vocal changes make for an excellent change of pace and the effect on the customers is immediate.

Pianist Johnny Gallant and the Paul Notar combo combine to give Miss Wilson good backing during her two-a-night offerings and then do interlude music for dancing. Miss Wilson is in until April 15, followed by Celeste Holm who is skedded for two weeks. Newt.

Copa, Pitt

Pittsburhg, March 29.

T. C. Jones, Darryl Stewart, Jay Weston, Nikolai Knight, Al Shine Orch (5); $1 cover.

Entertainment in this lineup is as high as an elephant's eye, sparked by a return of T. C. Jones and the debut of a fine young singer from Australia, Darryl Stewart (New Acts).

Jones came in for four nights only, between Minneapolis and Detroit stands, with result that Jay Weston, comedy m.c. on bill, dropped his own turn after first two days and confined himself to the bare announcements for remainder of week.

Nikolai Knight opens with her puppet act, and it's a good one. Gal herself, in black leotard revealing okay pair of gams, manipulates them while standing on an elevated table, and her topper is one she prefaces with the statement that they've never permitted her to do it on tv in this country. There's a reason, but in a nitery, it's surefire—the story of a French poodle and an angry fireplug, with appropriate sound effects and score from the piano. A very cute piece of business, done well, and very amusing.

Stewart follows her and wraps it up with five or six standards in a full, warm voice, with loads of personality to underline an affecting style, and he sets the stage for Jones. This guys' still the No. 1 female impersonator in the business today, a worthy descendant of the Karyl Normans and Julian Eltinges. Smart, clever, satiric and flashy, Jones makes a handsome figure of a dame, his deep-throated, flip throwaways are firecrackers and he has material that's designed for the knowing but still isn't above the regulars. A new bit, Tallulah Bankhead about to start a Slenderella course, is a gem, but then practically everything T.C. does is that. Finish, "The Party's Over," continues to be a crack bit, and the oohs and aahs of disbelief when he takes off the wig and reveals a yulbrynner pate can be heard all over the room. The guy's in a class by himself.

Al Shine's orch is okay on show accompaniment and for a small combo (five) knocks out some slick dance backgrounds too. Cohen.

Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Juanita Hall, Howard Beder, Ish Ugardi Trio; 3.50-$5 minimum.

Juanita Hall, whose interpretation of Bloody Mary in the stage version of "South Pacific" made her an attraction on the supper club circuit a few years ago, has achieved a new lease through her work in the screen version of the Rodgers & Hammerstein opus. Miss Hall got many of the critical accolades in the pic despite the fact that her voice was dubbed in (by Muriel Smith) on the screen version. Why, is difficult to divine, according to her work on the floor at Le Cupidon. Her voice is strong enough to carry and has sufficient dramatic value to fill the role.

The Negro singer has a good catalog of standards that fits her well. But her highlights are reached with the numbers with which she's been associated in later years, namely the "South Pacific" stalwarts, "Bali Ha'i" and "Happy Talk." Her turn, in toto, registers well.

Preceding singer is Howard Beder who confernenciers the layout. He provides a tuneful warmup session and sets the scene nicely for Miss Hall's takeover. The Ish Ugardi Trio provides good backing.

The innovation in this room is the moveover of Robert, long the maitre at the late Versailles. Jose.

Crescendo, Houston

Houston, March 29.

Danny Costello, Martez & Lucia, Jose Ortiz Orch (5); $3 minimum Sat.

They kept calling Danny Costello back for more after he gave them "That Old Black Magic," and they'll be talking about him when he's gone. Costello is a handsome, dark-haired vocalist with an easy, relaxed manner, and his appeal is straight to the gals. He leans way out over the lights and sings to the dolls in the ringside tables. They love it.

Opening with a smooth "I've Got the World on a String," Costello soon has the audience under his thumb. This tuxedo-clad, personable lad has a good, well-controlled voice, and if he could develop a shade more originality in his style, he'd be on his way.

He displayed a touch of class with "All the Way" and "On The Street Where You Live," and with "Birth of the Blues" a handclapping audience was beating out his time for him.

Costello was winner on an Arthur Godfrey "Talent Scouts" in 1953. He's currently doing guest shots with Jack Paar on NBC-TV. The tour he's on is his first.

Dance team of Martez & Lucia is a Latin acrobatic act with a smooth manner. They're a Mexico City couple, and their numbers go naturally with the Jose Ortiz orch's subtle beat. They perform several class balancing acts, but the best comes when the blonde and lusicious Lucia sips a glass of wine upside down while doing a headstand on her partner's head.

Next Crescendo booking: Song & dance team of Jean Shannon & Brooks Bros., April 2-14. Harr.

Chez Vito, N. Y.

Leyna Gabrielle, Rose Marone, John Stanford, John Modenos, Leslie Feleky Orch (12), Alfonso Cancelmo (bar); $3.50 minimum.

Vito Pisa's Gotham counterpart of Paris' Dinerzade, Casanova, Don Juan, Grand Seigneur or Monseigneur—take your pick according to nostalgic choice—is unique in that, seemingly, it's the only fiddle joint that has maintained click proportions. If anything it's building its adjacent bar biz with guitarist Alfonso Cancelmo but it's the main diningroom that is the big draw with pseudo-al fresco thrushing and a battery of 12 fiddles who know their pizzicatos. Piano-maestro is Leslie Feleky who cues 'em like an expert stage prompter.

When the term "the boss' wife also sings" is utilized it conjures up a frustrated prima, suspiciously of over-caloried proportions, when actually Leyna Gabrielle (Mme. Vito Pisa) is a pro in her own right, a svelte personality soprano who knows her musicomedy and Italian and French ballads. She would be just as decorative on an operatic (she studied voice in Italy) and light opera podium as under the romantic soft lights of this posh eatery.

Working in relaxed style from a centre-of-the-room table or in rehearsed ad lib styling from the tables of favorite customers, the atmosphere outdoes the Continental originals because it's all done with American professional savvy.

Thus Rose Marone, the mezzo-sop ano, for the operatics; tenor John Stanford for the Kern-Porter stuff and barytone John Modenos for the operatic and semi-pop stuff give out with excellent change of pace backed by the fiddling groups.

Apropos of the strolling violinists, perhaps it is too difficult to make themselves unobtrusive but the phalanx style of surrounding the singers and/or at customers' tables creates a gang-up which, in truth, is a minor irritation. One, it's great closeup and close-harmony accomp for the singers but it blocks out their personalities. The customers, in the main, are either head-bobbing for a glimpse or just listen in the abstract. Same is true at the patrons' tables. A little thought to, or perhaps freer gravitation to achieve a more flexible vantage point, could solve that.

Chez Vito is unique in a major alternate respect, and that is the cuisine. It is ultra good cooking (Italian, of course) and the boniface's accent on the good groceries gives the mood atmosphere added weight. Vito started in less pretentious style in the Hotel Meurice but the plushery, on the site of an illfated French-cuisine restaurant called the Biarritz on East 60th, makes this Chez Vito a top spot in New York's changing nite life and restaurant scene. There's a suburban Chez Vito in Westchester on the site of the yesteryear Ben Riley's Arrowhead Inn which opens for the summer. The town spot remains constant, thanks to airconditioning. Not the least appeal is the soft-lights-sweet-music atmosphere which commends it to the hand-holding set.

Waxed by Columbia, but under his own label, Vito's $5 LP of "A Night at Chez Vito" has sold some 20,000 albums, including via such outlets at Liberty Music and Macy's. Abel.

Larry Potter's, H'wood

N. Hollywood, March 28.

Dixieland Dynamite, Oscar Cartier, Florence Delgardo, Les Parker Orch (5); $1 cover.

This North Hollywood nitery's current offering is comprised of no names and all together they come up with just a fair show. As usual, Larry Potter's Friday (28) opener was packed—mostly with regulars who turn out regardless of the billing.

A youngster named Roger Balph who tags himself "Dixieland Dynamite" toplines. Though he proves his excellence on both the clarinet and saxophone while accompanying instrumental records played on a hi-fi set, the act becomes monotonous after several selections. Balph could improve his turn by some patter or maybe a little footwork. But just to look at him blow tunes like "St. Louis Blues," "In A Persian Market" and "Deep Purple" falls short of good nitery entertainment.

Other talent includes French comic Oscar Cartier, who draws some yocks sporadically and has a good impression of Maurice Chevalier, and Philippine chirp Florence Delgardo. Latter, aside from the looks department, doesn't fare too well, except for one number, "Love For Sale." Lega.

Tony Bennett, The Leslies (2), Freddy Martin Orch (14); $2-$2.50 cover, $3 minimum.

Opening against the biggest entertainment package (Academy Awards) in the world is no easy task, but Tony Bennett took it in stride at Wednesday's (26) preem to a half-filled room at the Cocoanut Grove. From the moment the Columbia disker came on mike with "I should get an Oscar for opening against the Academy Awards," the crowd was with him and he held them throughout his turn.

Bennett is not a singer who is pure in voice throughout a song. Instead, he's comparable to a baseball pitcher who throws a ball in any direction the audience clamors. And by the reaction of the rounders, all his throws were true and on target.

Bennett is a fine song stylist and showman. He never lets up for a moment and with the assistance of a handmike envelopes the entire stage as he bounces from one end to the other.

His repertoire is long and includes standards as well his former disk hits. On several of the numbers Bennett receives top backing on bongos by Candido, excellent in his own right.

Also billed are the Leslies, mixed dance team who exhibit plenty of footwork during their 15-minute turn. Pair come across both in looks and ability, especially in their hoedown number with crowd participation via mitts. Freddy Martin, per usual, gives excellent orchestration throughout the show and also pleases with a special medley arrangement from "South Pacific." Entire show holds through April 8. Kafa.

Deauville, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, March 31.

Dan Dailey with Collins Kids (2), Four Grads, Camille Williams, Clark & Cross, Johnny Silver, Bob Regent Orch; $4.50-$7.50 minimum.

Bill Miller, who has been booking the Casanova Room of this newery since its reopening some weeks ago, has come up with his third click in a row in the new-to-this-area face of Dan Dailey in an in-person entertainer role.

The tall, limber ex-vaude and musicomedy song and dance man is as graceful a hoofer as he has depicted in many a screen assignment. He works in warm, easy, ingratiating manner and with it, takes up a storyteller's role in sock style to round out the big impresh he makes on tough-to-please cafegoers at this competitive circuit.

Dailey displays plenty know-how in this, his first nitery dating outside of Las Vegas. He's very much at home onstage, hubbing the fast-moving revue he's brought with him. The group is a plus, all also new to these parts, obviously gathered with the vaude-style, tab show staging in mind. The absence of "typical" night club entertainment seems to hit with the Casanova attendees.

Near show-stealers are a pair of youngsters, subteeners Larry Collins and his slightly older sis, Laurie. They're in the rock 'n' roll styling and wham with the lad's gyrations while guitar dueting and singing with his attractive sister. He climbs all over the mike in the shrewd staging that allows him to take off on some wild and wooly stringing. Young, attractive Miss Collins is an adept songstress as well; their fresh approach and zest add to visual impact that brings the big palm payoffs.

Dailey works in varied heel and toe patterns with several partners. Looker Camille Williams joins for some expertly smooth and effortless glides-taps-spins around stage, while Les Clark and Jimmy Cross are utilized throughout in routines that get across to big returns. These include a spoof on the old vaude turns, waltz clog variations to a dozen musical themes. But it's Dailey who makes the tight-knit whole take on the click aura. He's a versatile terpster, as noted, but it's the warm gab and new-sounding Irish dialect stories that bring the multi-talent glow to the whole. Dailey & Co. can play any situations, and not-so-incidentally, are geared for a tv special. Larry Steele and his "Smart Affairs" follow April 11. Lary.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

(FOLLOWUP)

Las Vegas, March 27.

Dinah Shore is showcased in a fine new act expertly staged by Tony Charmoli which is set for a nine-day run in the Flamingo Room. Throughout the turn, Miss Shore sings with relaxed smoothness, and her warm personality backdrops rich, friendly tones. One half of the "Even Dozen" male singers-dancers who appear with the star on her tv'er support her here with imaginative terping and songology which blend to top effect with the voice and personality of Miss Shore.

Handsomely gowned, she includes in repertoire "Simple Melody," "Thirteen Men," "They Can't Take That Away From Me," "Hello Young Lovers," "Falling In Love With Love," "It All Depends On You," "Sentimental Journey" and "Yes, Indeed." Conductor-arranger Harry Zimmerman with the Jack Cathcart orch (19) and 88er Ticker Freeman strongly assist.

Jackie Kannon, "held over from the last show by six cancelled checks," scored heavily in the yock department with firstnighters, as he did in previous Vic Damone stanza, and Little Buck repeats with his zingy, acrobatic tapping. Duke.

Chateau Madrid, N. Y.

Beatrice Kraft Dancers (3), Jose Duval, Princess Yasmir, Ralph Font and Panchito Orchs; $4-$5 minimum.

Although it maintains its Hispano franchise with one Spanish-flavored act, Angel Lopez's Chateau Madrid wanders to other parts of the globe for its new show. Chief among the exotic influences is the homegrown Beatrice Kraft & East Indian dancers. Miss Kraft, one of the foremost interpreters of East Indian terping, lends a spark to the Chateau proceedings.

Although one apparent Chateau regular, an advocate of Latino dancing, was heard to remark to her companion, "this is artistic," Miss Kraft and her two tall, bearded and colorfully costumed partners make a definite "popular" impression on the clientele with their interpretive movements. There is nothing static about Miss Kraft's group as it clangs barefootedly on the Chateau's tiny raised platform. There is a coordination between the feet and delicate hand movements that deserves the customer's comment of "artistic, a terminology, however, that is not a synonym for dull. The team's contribution is always lively and, at times, exciting.

Jose Duval, the Cuban singer, is welcome in his dual role of interpreter of songs in both English and Spanish. He has a big legit voice and hardly needs the mike to get across. He impresses with Cole Porter's "All of You" and in a dual language rendition of the popular "Fascination." Duval was somewhat handicapped by a rude, talkative audience, but for those interested in the show and not merely in the drinks and groceries, Duval proves to be a highly listenable and entertaining performer.

As an opener, both for the show and male orbs, the Chateau is again presenting Princess Yasmir, a belly wiggler from Algiers. She is an expert at her craft and her derriere and umbilical undulations are as pliable and supple as a glob of Jello.

Ralph Font's orch showbacks expertly and alternates with Panchito's crew for customer terping. Holl.

Amato's, Portland

Portland, Ore., March 26.

The Stylemasters (4), Lois Ray, Claydettes (6) with JoAnn Galvez, Julian Dreyer Orch (5), Dualtones; $1.50 cover, no minimum.

New fare at this plush showcase is loaded with pleasant surprises and enough entertainment to please all stubholders. Well-rounded layout should draw plenty of customers by word-of-mouth despite lack of marquee names.

The Stylemasters are a complete surprise. These four youngsters get the mitts throughout their 30-minute stint. Lads have terrific harmony, fresh approach, and an easy style. Handsome guys use no gimmicks to sell their talents. (Rich Hansen, Dick Mueller, Bill Snyder, Bob Larsen). Their presentation is heavy on ballads sans r&r. Score solidly with impreshes of competish groups. Snyder gets yocks with a comedy bit. Definitely ready for class spots, they beg off nicely with plenty of noise still filling the auditorium.

Lois Ray gets the show underway with four nice tap routines. She's well-stacked orb-filler who's "Girl With Ambition" story in dance is fine. The Claydettes (6) are on for two production numbers. The Hawaiian routine features petite JoAnn Galvez. Fifty-minute layout finales with a blacklite umbrella routine. Choreography and costuming are outstanding. Julian Dreyer and his house crew (5) play the background music for the show and get the dancers on the floor. The Dualtones (2) keep the lounge patrons entertained all night with piano, bass and songs. Paris Sisters open April 8. Feve.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

The longrunning Latin Quarter revue, now on its last lap, is putting on a strong finish with Alan King in the headline spot, and support from the new See Hee Family. At this point the nitery is in a state of flux, being in the midst of extensive alterations. At the end of this engagement, it will close for four days, and there'll be a new cinemascoped stage which will house a new revue staged by Donn Arden. Meanwhile, it's a little difficult for the acts in making their exits and entrances, but the latter is well hidden by curtains and the patronage suffers no inconvenience.

King is a returnee to this room. He has, since the previous LQ stand, gained a lot of stature in the industry, and returns a much heavier name than hitherto. One of King's major attributes is his ability to make the material look like on-the-spot-observations. His text on Presley isn't the kind that can be used before audiences comprising the faithful, but the elders found them exceedingly amusing. However, his bit on family life in exurbia produces the major plaudits. He holds forth on this subject for a long time and each of his points strikes home to this audience. He's a pronounced hit.

Another addition to this display is the See Hee Family, an Oriental troupe comprising three sons and a father, the latter supervising the operation. The sons are excellent hand-to-handers. The understander shows some prodigious strength in his lifts and many of the formations are automatic applause winners.

Most of the others on the show have been there for some time. Chandra Kaly is the central figure in some colorful East Indian dancing sequences which he has staged. The dance spots are by the Jamal Sisters (2), the divas of the diaphragm, and Martha Ann Bentley, who does a succession of spins en pointe for an excellent mitt. The house singers, India Adams and Walter Farrell, display good voices. The production holds up well.

Jo Lombardi gives an added strength to the proceedings with his sure backstopping. The Buddy Harlowe orch reliefs. Jose.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., March 28.

Rusty Draper, Double-Daters (4), Dorothy Dorben Dancers (10) with Clay Munday, Mary Fassett, Don Little, Jean Repinski; Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Barbary Coast Boys (2); $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

Youth has its fling in swank Beverly's current fortnighter. Rusty Draper, the trusty troubador who made a smash intro here seven months ago, is the pacemaker for the hour of highly charged cabaret entertainment. Greater Cincinnati cafe society also welcomes the return of the Double-Daters, song and dance topnotchers. Quality filling is supplied by the location's Dorothy Dorben line and Gardner Benedict's music backers.

Nicknamed for his matching hair, Draper turns on the heat in the last half of his 35-minute routine with expert picking of electric guitar and uke. Standouts of a dozen or so turns are "Who's Sorry Now," "Beautiful Morning" and his Mercury click "Freight Train."

Boy and gal teams, the Double-Daters, in matching dress, are in a class unto themselves for combining terps and vocals. High on close harmony, they likewise are nifty steppers, combining the two constantly. A sparkling 12 minutes in any company. Connie Towers and Georgie Kaye top the layout opening April 11. Koll.

Adolphus, Dallas

Dallas, March 28.

Phil Ford & Mimi Hines, Bobby Witters, Joe Reichman Orch (7); $1.50-$2 cover.

Century Room booker Maurice, who doubles as maitre d', has a sock 75-minute show that reaps mitting all the way. Advantage of the two acts playing prior local dates, in lesser spots, should pay off in the fortnight here. Their fans will click the turnstile.

Ford & Hines run through some slick bits, from sight gags, smart comedy lines and hoofing. Ford feeds the zany distaffer good straight lines and she clowns up the scene with the funny answers. Miss Hines even gets yocks with a brace of pratfalls. That doesn't deter her singing, which she does flat on her back. Surprisingly, she's a great vocalist who could do a fine straight singing job if she didn't want to do comedy. Ford accomps her song stints at the piano; they have a fine romp and the auditors at opening (27) were pleased.

Deadpan juggler Bobby Winters has been around here before, and he's a fave. If he didn't do anything at opening besides his top handling of sponge balls and Indian clubs, he aided ringsiders by a couple of remarks to squelch noisy hecklers. Winters' finale is still his exciting juggling bit with three tamborines, and he scores easily in a 20-minute opening stint.

Joe Reichman's band provides smooth showbacking and the floor is packed for terp sessions. Bark.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Bob Crosby and the Ames Bros. (4) are costarred in Stan Irwin's new Congo Room musicale. The pleasant package is punctuated with some fine terping by Bud & Cece Robinson and outstanding production numbers by Sonia Shaw and Bill Hitchcock.

Crosby, making his bow as a single, leans back to nostalgia in a turn written by Danny Shapiro. Star, who doesn't point to his singing voice as his claim to fame, utilizes his w.k. personality to put across gags about Bing, current events, and such songs in the repertoire as "Hut Sut Song," "Mairzy Doats," "Kalamazoo" and "Hold Tight." He mentions his early days when he traveled the country on a bus, weaving in tributes to the Dorsey brothers and Bunny Berigan. Crosby is personable and relaxed, but seems lost without the Bobcats.

The Ames Bros. reprise their Vegas act to good mitting with hep sound and showmanship in celeb impreshes and songs including "Little Gypsy," "Catch A Falling Star," "Clancy," "You, You, You," "Melody d'Amour" and "Fascination." Ed is effective with his "All The Way" solo, as is Joe with "Toreador." Group is joined in "Yes, Indeed" finale by the Saharem Dancers (12) which has dandy choreography and lighting.

Bud & Cece Robinson, who have long been faves here, show again why they're one of the top dance acts in the biz. From the Charleston to calypso to rock 'n' roll, they are true terp technicians with pleasing personalities.

Special nod should go to the "Spring Has Sprung" Shaw-Hitchcock production featuring vocalist Dick Summers, dancers Virginia Shaw and Patrick O'Gorman. Louis Basil orch (11) capably handles the many music cues. Duke.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, March 25.

Lee Wiley, Kingston Trio, Marx & Frigo Trio; $2.50 beverage minimum.

Lee Wiley, absent eight years or so from Chi, should pack 'em in for her two-weeker if her first-night (24) pull is an indicator. Veteran jazz thrush had an affectionate SRO audience which warmmitted her every effort and sent up repeated cries for particular faves. Her once rich voice is now a low-register instrument, but the sound is still evocative.

On the compensating side, besides, are the blues singer's old-pro class and savvy, qualities which often disclose the greatness of yore. And always, Miss Wiley delivers with warmth. Her ballads are authentically plaintive and misty, especially "Street Dreams," "Someday You'll Be Sorry" and "Woman's Intuition," latter coming as her surest offering.

Her opener is a valiant but ill-suited "Three Little Words," but then she gets down to the ballad business, several of which enable plugs for her new Victor album. One of the best is "Ace in Hole" a trump card for buffs in a song-along that also includes "Sugar," "Touch of Blues," "'S Wonderful" and an uptempo "Down With Love." Marx & Frigo threesome give usual adroit backing.

Kingston Trio are fresh faces under crewcuts, with guitars, banjo and bongo, ranging over funny, sometimes bawdy, beerstube songs. Youngsters are glib with a campus flavor that registers fine in intime settin, their nicely-paced 30-minute turn winning good applause. Best of their stuff are "Three Jolly Coachmen," a tongue-in-cheek Engish toasting tune; "Bay of Mexico," a sea song of yearning and "Slop John B." Act also makes points with a calypso number, a parodied Mexican love tune with comic interpretation en route, and, for a wind, sock belting of "Wimoweh." Trio's whimsy and engaging vitality make it a good bet for the smalleries. Only question mark is how long they can ride the campus identity. Pit.

Statler Hotel, L. A.

Hollywood, April 1.

Lucille Norman, Lucille & Eddie Roberts, Eddie Bergman Orch (11).

The Terrace Room at the Statler has a show perfectly tailored to its family trade, tired businessmen and convention groups, in the current bill headed by Lucille Norman, with the Eddie & Lucille Roberts mentalist team, backed by Eddie Bergman's orch. It's not a highly-charged hour but it is pleasant and entertaining.

Miss Norman dresses to the hilt, but not beyond, presenting a range of songs from "Un Bel Di" to "Twelfth Street Rag," handling either end of this extreme with taste and musical color. She is strong on the classical, giving audiences a chance to feel they are participating in culture while floating their eyeballs, and her jazzier numbers are not so lowdown as to offend.

The Roberts have a classic act (27 years in vaudeville and the bistros) and it still intrigues as the male member goes into the audience to ask his femme partner (blindfolded) to identify audience members, give their home telephone numbers, occupations, etc. They close to strong applause.

Opening night Miss Norman was on for about 30 minutes, with the Robertses on and off in 20 minutes. Eddie Bergman's orch does smooth backstopping and plays for dancing. Powe.

Eddie Condon's, N. Y.

Eddie Condon Band (7), Bud Freeman Trio; $3.50 minimum weekdays, $4 weekends-holidays.

After a dozen years of running a saloon in Greenwich Village, Eddie Condon was forced to vacate to make room for a housing development. It looks as if it will turn into a fortuitous evacuation. For in his new digs on East 56th St. adjacent to the Hotel Sutton, the dixielander seems to be whipping up a bigger storm than ever before.

It was ropes up on the Friday (20) show caught and the joint was jumping in the tippling and tootling department. The room, which until recently was known as Bourbon Street, has taken on an aura of uninhibited gaiety due to the swinging Condon crew and the Bud Freeman Trio alternating. It's a driving sound that comes through and it stirs up plenty of enthusiasm in the crowd.

On the podium with Condon are Cutty Cutshall, trombone; Herb Hall, clarinet; George Wettling, drums; Gene Schroeder, piano; Leonard Gaskin, bass, and Rex Stewart, cornet. Stewart has replaced Wild Bill Davison, who's out on his own now, but it remains the same inspired crew that kept the Villagers hopping. It's all dixieland and it's all socko.

In a less hectic but still musically exciting vein is the Bud Freeman Trio. It rounds out a solid musical evening.

According to Condon, the attitude on the eastside is much the same as it was in the Village. "Except," he says, "we see more furs here." Gros.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, March 28.

Viki Benet, Nicki & Noel, Carl Sands Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

Pair of acts in the Terrace Grill of the Muehlebach make it a compact show, combining Viki Benet with Nicki & Noel. Mlle. Benet is the linguistic songstress with the French background, and Nicki & Noel are the ballroom team with emphasis on the acro work.

Terp duo quickly shows it is adept at acro and aerial work, with "I've Got You Under My Skin" in a beguine temp. They have a novel touch in a Hindu type dance to American rhythm, and a romantic stanza based on "If I Loved You." As a closer they satirize the dime-a-dance hostess, and she pulls a switch to toss her partner about.

Miss Benet is a looker and petite and could easily pass for an American chanteuse. She quickly reveals linguistic skill, however, doing most of her numbers in both French and English, each impeccable. Such as "I Love Paris," "I Didn't Know What Time It Was" and "So Nice To Have a Man Around the House" she handles in this fashion, but "All the Way" she does all in English. She sticks to French for a medley of numbers from her Decca album and closes strongly with "Mon Homme" and "Hymn To Love" in the dual language versions. Her vocalling is on the thrushier level, and withal she is, indeed, tres continental, possibly a bit too much so for the corn-hog-beef midwest. Her work is topflight, but does not find the most appreciative audience here. Quin.

OBITUARIES

W. C. HANDY

William Christopher Handy, 84, the "Father of the Blues" and composer of numerous jazz classics including "St. Louis Blues," died in Sydenham Hospital, N. Y., March 28, after a four-day siege of acute bronchial pneumonia. Blind since 1943 as a result of a fall from a subway platform, he had been confined to a wheel chair for the past three years but still managed to attend several dinners in his honor.

Son of a Methodist preacher and emancipated slave, Handy became one of the nation's top songwriters, specializing in the blues idiom. He entered the music biz via politics in 1910 when he wrote a campaign song for Edward H. Crump who was running for mayor of Memphis at the time. The song, now known as the "Memphis Blues," outlasted Crump.

Earlier, at the age of 15, he entered a minstrel show which eventually went broke. Later, he ran away from home to the Chicago World's Fair of 1893 and wandered around the country down on his heels. He eventually wound up in St. Louis, jobless, broke and hungry, and out of that experience he wrote the classic "St. Louis Blues" in 1914. That song launched a whole new cycle of blues songs.

Among songs Handy wrote are "Roosevelt Triumphal March," "In The Cotton Fields of Dixie," "Yellow Dog Blues," "Joe Turner Blues," "Beale Street Blues," "Hesitating Blues," "Ole Miss," "Hooking Cow Blues," "Annie Love" (a waltz), "Hail To The Spirit of Freedom," "Afram erican Hymn," "Harlem Blues," "Basement Blues," "Loveless Love," "Careless Love," and "Chantez Les Bas." In addition, he wrote musical settings for various poems and Lincoln's "Gettysburg Address," and a symphony based on several of his blues themes. He also authored his biography, "Father of The Blues," and edited several anthologies of blues songs.

Handy set up his own publishing company, Handy Bros. Music, as an affiliate of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers in which he was a writer member. He was also a member of American Federation of Musicians and the Negro Actors Guild. In recent years, he was active in behalf of the W. C. Handy Foundation For The Blind.

Handy's last public appearance took place in New York on Nov. 17, 1957, when all segments of show biz held a dinner in his honor. Telegrams from all over the world, including one from President Eisenhower, greeted the songwriter. Handy was due to be the honor guest at the preem of his film biography, "St. Louis Blues," with Nat King Cole playing the Handy part, in Yonkers today (Wed.). Handy had his home in Yonkers for many years.

He is survived by Irma Louise Logan, his one-time secretary whom he married four years ago. She accompanied Handy everywhere. Other survivors are a daughter and two sons by a previous marriage, and a brother.

Born in Brooklyn, he graduated from the U. of Pennsylvania and Columbia Law School. He was working for the old Fox Film Co. at the time of its merger with 20th Century, which was organized by Joe Schenck and Darryl F. Zanuck.

Nafack became an executive at Metro in 1936. Nicholas Schenck was then president of Loew's Inc. He did not enter production until his return from the service in World War II during which he served with the Navy as a lieutenant commander in the South Pacific. He produced his first picture, "Border Incident," in 1949 and subsequently made 11 other pictures for Metro, among them being "Escape From Fort Bravo," "Forbidden Planet" and "The Power and the Prize." Nayfack recently formed his own company, Pan Productions, and had a financing and distribution deal with Metro on "The Invisible Boy," which was recently released.

Surviving are his wife, son, parents, and two brothers.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow (Thurs.) in New York.

Brown, a trombonist, helped introduce jazz into the Chicago area. The Musicians Union issued a statement that jazz was being played at the Lambs Club (not the theatrical organization) where he was working in 1915. The public came in heavy numbers to hear this new form of music.

Off-B'way Managers Burn at Unions; Cry Run, Seek Equity Recognition

Off-Broadway managers are in a sweat over demands being made by various theatrical unions. They claim that increased salary and employment requirements, plus other regulations, are virtually putting them out of business.

In line with this, the producers have been active on two fronts. They've been discussing modifications with the Fact Finding Committee, representing the New York legit craft unions, and, in another maneuver, have taken a stand against the unilateral establishment of off-Broadway rules by Actors Equity.

The conflict with Equity stems from the union's refusal to recognize the League of off-Broadway Theatres as the official bargaining agent for off-Broadway. The managers originally went along with the Equity refusal, accepting an offer merely to discuss their problems.

The League is dissatisfied with the results of the discussions, however, and is now appealing to the State Labor Board to schedule a meeting with Equity with the idea of demanding recognition. One of the League's major beefs pertains to the residual clause in the union's off-Broadway contract, which requires additional payments to performers in the event that a script is sold to films or tv.

Equity president Ralph Bellamy, has stated, however, that the union has no intention of recognizing the League. He says that Equity regards off-Broadway not as a group of employers but only as a group of actors.

Atlanta Longhair SRO On Mail Order Advance; Stampede for Metopera

By SAM LUCCHESE

Atlanta, April 1.

Georgia's longhair coterie is going through its annual spring bustle to corral season tickets to two cultural events, annual Metropolitan Opera season and 1958-59 All Star Concert Series. Ducat scarcity is attested by the fact that both opera and concert series will be sellouts long before curtain of either event.

Met Opera comes first. Five performances by Bing's boys and girls are slated in four days, April 30 through May 3. Opera is staged at Fox Theatre, Wilby-Kincey's 4,400-seat flagship here.

All Star Concert Series, Marvin McDonald, manager, sprang a blockbuster on an unsuspecting steady clientele by lining up soprano Maria Meneghini Callas, who will sing at Municipal Auditorium Oct. 21.

If there was any doubt that 1958-59 series would sell out, the Callas signing dispelled it. Muny Aud has 5,500 seats and they'll all be gone ere Danish National Orchestra, making its second visit to Atlanta, opens season Oct. 16.

Following Mme. Callas will be Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo Nov. 5, starring prima ballerina Irina Borowska, with National Ballet of Canada set for Jan. 10 and offering full-length production of "Sleeping Beauty."

Next two All Star attractions, Queen Elizabeth's Buckingham Palace Household Brigade, regimental band of the Grenadier Guards, Nov. 18, and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting, Feb. 15, will be presented in Georgia Institute of Technology's 7,999-seat Alexander Memorial Coliseum.

Igor Berodni, Soviet violinist, will play at Auditorium Feb. 24 and pianist Artur Rubinstein, perennial Atlanta favorite, will bring series to close March 9.

Van Horn Costume Co. To Open Office in .Y.

After a 106-year run in Philadelphia, Van Horn Costumes is expanding its operation to New York An affiliate Manhattan corporation has been authorized to operate on 47th Street between Broadway and 8th Avenue.

It's understood that growing stock business, as well as the television boom, cued the expansion of the firm, which has been a leader in the amateur theatre costume field since 1852.

Tommy Noonan Returns To Touring 'Tunnel' Co.

San Francisco, April 1.

Tommy Noonan resumes his co-starring assignment this week in the Coast production of "Tunnel of Love." He rejoins the Randolph Hale presentation tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Loberto Theatre, Santa Barbara, replacing Russell Nype, who succeeded him last January.

William Bishop continues as co-star in the production, which has been touring weeknights and playing the Alcazar Theatre here weekends since last March 16. As of that date, the Peter de Vries-Joseph Fields comedy had put in 23 weeks at the Alcazar. The production is scheduled to move next Monday (7) to the Hartford Theatre, Los Angeles.

'Mame' Will Have 5-Show Splurge

"Auntie Mame" will be blanketing the U.S. this summer. If plans materialize, five editions of the comedy will probably be on tap during the warm-weather period. That will take in the longrun Broadway presentation, a Coast company and three touring productions.

Of the touring entries, the Constance Bennett starrer is currently on the road. Another starring Sylvia Sidney is scheduled to get underway April 19. Both have been mounted by Bowden, Barr & Bullock, who are also planning a third company, starring Shirl Conway, for tent theatre bookings. Canvastop dates will also be played by Miss Sidney.

The Coast company is planned by the show's original Broadway producers, Robert Fryer and Lawrence Carr. Eve Arden is slated to star in that presentation. She had previously been mentioned as a possibility to succeed Rosalind Russell in the N.Y. company, but the assignment went to Greer Garson. Incidentally, Miss Garson's contract expires at the end of May, so another successor will have to be obtained if she doesn't renew.

The Warner Bros. film edition of the Patrick Dennis-Jerome Lawrence-Robert E. Lee comedy is currently in production, with release due next winter.

PLAN YEAR-AROUND SHOWBOAT AT TAMPA

Tampa, Fla., April 1.

A showboat for the presentation of legit stock entries is in the works for Tampa Bay. It'll be operated by vet showman Nat S. Jerome and will utilize a resident Actors Equity company. The boat, planned by Jean LaFerne and currently under construction, will be called the Bay Queen.

The three-decker vessel has a capacity of about 2,000, with a 250-seat dining room on the main deck, and will operate on a year-round basis. Lewis Pierce, who's had previous showboat experience, will direct the Queen productions.

Mike Ellis Will Start Early Again at Bucks

Michael Ellis, operator of the Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., is continuing his summer-stretch policy. The producer, who's been expanding the season at the barn in recent years, has a 20-week spread lined up for the upcoming season. It'll run from May 3-Sept. 20.

Ten shows, running two weeks each, will be presented at the theatre, with the first stock production of "Visit to a Small Planet" as the initial bill. That'll be followed by Ilka Chase in "Desk Set" and then a return engagement of T. C. Jones in "Mask and Gown." The latter show did smash business in a pre-Broadway tryout at the spot last summer.

Skedded for a June 16 opening is "Compulsion."

'Hooper' Current, Dallas; Switch 'Waiter' as Next

Dallas, April 1.

"The Hooper Law," Harry Granick comedy currently being preemed by the Margo Jones Theatre '58, will be followed April 15-May 4 by another new play, William Walden's "A Waiter Not Named Julius."

The latter work replaces the previously scheduled "The Good Meal," by Leo Lieberman.

Chi Opera House Dickering Film; Longhair Tizzy

Chicago, April 1.

There's much ado among local promoters over the possibility that Chicago will be without a house this fall for major longhair productions. The principals in the hubbub are the Opera House and impresario Harry Zelzer, both the biggest in their respective fields locally.

The Opera House is trying to book Cinemiracle, a new wide-screen process. However, that would apparently leave no available house for a number of ballet, opera and theatrical offerings that Zelzer hopes to present here. Zelzer was apprised of the Opera House's picture aspirations six months ago and accordingly contracted his shows subject to the availability of a theatre, so no one stands to get demolished.

Nevertheless, with the Opera House or without, Zelzer intends to proceed with the fall season. The Allied Arts Corp. prez says he is now "being offered" any of three large film houses as temporary spots for such productions as major ballet, the Metropolitan Opera, and the Bolshoi Theatre, but he declined to say which ones were "offered." He did indicate, however, that they might not be in the Loop.

Trade speculation rules out nearly every Main Stem filmery for several reasons, the principal ones

Iowans Lose 'Music Man' For State Fair in '58, But They May Be in Pic

Des Moines, April 1.

Despite the strenuous efforts of Iowa officials, "The Music Man" won't be a feature of this year's Iowa State Fair. However, loyal Iowans will probably see the touring edition of the Broadway musical early next spring. Also, they've been assured that the film version will be shot on location in the state.

Author-composer Meredith Willson is a native son and "Music Man" is located in a mythical Iowa town, so the tuner has become virtually the unofficial Iowa show. That sparked effort to have the projected touring production play this year's Iowa State Fair. However, the tourer is being produced on the Coast and won't finish its engagements there until late fall, too late for the State Fair.

Before leaving for Europe last week, Willson revealed that he, Broadway producer Kermit Bloomgarden and director Morton Da Costa plan to be partners in doing the screen version of the musical, with financing and release through a major studio. Referring to a suggestion that the picture might be filmed in his hometown, Mason City, which is noted for bad weather, Willson remarked, "We'd have to take the Iowa weather as we found it—that's part of the setup."

ATPAM Aims at Longhair

The Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers is clamping down on longhair. The union, which has had some representation in that field, has now determined that, effective next Labor Day, "all ballet and opera companies shall employ a manager and pressagent at regular legitimate-musical scales and working conditions."

Included in the ATPAM edict are any offerings that use costumes and/or scenery and properties and/or stage hands.

Equity Warming Up for Election; Ross Group Has Nominating Edge

Actors Equity is apparently in for another hot factional fight in its annual election, to be held in June. The dissident element in the union, after relaxing its campaign for control of the administration in last year's election, is reportedly back in full swing. That's indicated in the complexion of nominating committee members elected at the quarterly membership meeting in New York last Friday (28).

Of the 10 members selected, eight are regarded as belonging to the dissident faction headed by Bill Ross, one of those chosen. The eight-member spread gives the Ross element a one-member edge on the nominating committee, which also comprises five previously-selected council reps, all considered independents.

The strong position already gained by the dissidents appears to mean that an all-out battle will ensue. In view of this, it's predicted that no matter what ticket is chosen by the committee, an opposition card will be entered. The factional conflict is expected to be especially intense this year, since the election covers all officers and 15 councilors.

The general impression is that the dissidents were well organized for last Friday's meeting. A resolution introduced by Ossie Davis, recommending that the council urge the State Dept. to okay a limited passport for Paul Robeson to go to London for a legit appearance, was passed by a vote of 111-75. Ralph Bellamy, president of the union, opposed the resolution on the ground that the union's policy is to avoid entering into political matters.

The membership reps elected to the nominating committee, with the number of votes listed parenthetically, include principals Polly Rowles (195), Biff McGuire (172), Frederic Tozere (166), Nancy Walker (158), Bill Ross (157), Jane Hoffmann (153) and Harry Bellaver (152). The chorus reps include Brock Peters (188), Tao Strong (180) and Shellie Farrell (130). Of the 10, only Tozere and Miss Walker are regarded as independents.

Those in line as principal alternates include Mike Kellin (151), Jeffrey Lynn (151), Nydia Westman (146), Hilda Haynes (141), Tom McDermott (139), Ann Wickham (99) and Josephine Nichols (96. On the chorus side, the alternate lineup includes Cordelia Ware (116), Stan Page (111) and Ramona Robinson (100). Of these 10, all are rated as independents except Kellin and Miss Haynes.

'Porgy' Will Tour Barns But With Goldwyn Okay

Washington, April 1.

Two or three stock companies will take "Porgy and Bess" on tour of the strawhat circuit this summer. However, film producer Samuel Goldwyn will have final okay of the companies. That was disclosed last week by Mrs. Du Bose Hayward, widow of the author of the novel on which the Gershwin folk opera is based. Mrs. Hayward testified on behalf of the Smathers bill to divorce the broadcasters from BMI.

Goldwyn, who is making the "Porgy" film, apparently wants to protect his investment by preventing any third rate performances which would tend to tarnish the musical in the public's mind.

Only 10 British Names Have B.O.

Glasgow, April 1.

The number of legit stars with boxoffice draw has dwindled in 25 years from 30 or 40 to about 10. At the same time, it's growing more and more difficult to persuade established players to take assignments outside of London. That was noted by Charles Farrell, council member and honorary treasurer of British Equity, speaking recently at the annual meeting of the Scot branch.

Except for "certain eccentric gimmicks from television," who can fill theatres but sometimes "create disturbances" doing so, there are few names today who can be sure of attracting audiences. That, plus the reluctance of ranking players to undertake provincial tours, is making it increasingly difficult for theatres outside London to get shows, the Equity official asserted.

Local managers are filling the gap with government-supported company from various Continental countries, Farrell warned. Such troupes can afford to come to England and accept touring engagements, not only for the propaganda value, but because the performers are generally on guaranteed minimum salary.

These European companies are willing to take smaller guarantees than British shows with top sars like Laurence Olivier, Vivien Leigh, John Gielgud, and they find it wonderful experience to come to England with the back of their respective governments. "If we could only persuade our own stars to go on tour, to play Scotland and the provinces and fill our British theatres, the traffic in state-subsidized foreign companies would cease," Farrell suggested.

HUROK SIGNS FRENCH TROUPE FOR U.S. TOUR

Paris, April 1.

Impresario Sol Hurok has signed the Theatre National Populaire for a nine-week U. S. tour beginning next September. With a cast of 45, it'll be the largest French troupe to make the overseas hike. The lead performers include Gerard Phillipe, Jean Vilar and Maria Casares.

The company will present a repertory of five classic plays. Hurok, incidentally, planed back to New York last week.

Barn-Touring 'Sergeants' Opening at Paper Mill

Robert Weiner's strawhat-touring production of "No Time for Sergeants" will open the season next Monday (7) at the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, N.J. Emmett Rogers, who co-produced the Ira Levin-Max Hyman comedy on Broadway and staged the London production, is directing the show.

After a six-week engagement at the Paper Mill, the show will lay off for a week's tuneup rehearsal, then play a three-week tent stand at Westbury, L.I., followed by a week at Camden, N.J. Other bookings are being negotiated.

Seven Arts Center, N. Y., A Beehive of Show Biz; At Former Colony Club

The Murray Hill sector of Manhattan has gotten the cultural jump on the proposed Lincoln Square development further uptown. Although less elaborate than the arts projects planned for the Square, the Murray Hill venture takes in three theatres, an art gallery, audition and rehearsal halls, plus schools for drama, dance, music and voice.

The entire setup, however, is confined to a single six-story building, originally designed by Stanford White for the Colony Club in 1907. It's been refurbished at a cost of over $300,000 and converted into the Seven Arts Center. Directors of the operation are Oscar Lerman and Martin Cohen, who were represented on Broadway two seasons ago as co-producers of "The Vamp."

The three theatres, two proscenium and one arena, each seat under 200. They'll be used for student productions and commercial off-Broadway entries, either produced by the Center itself or by outsiders, in the latter case on a rental basis.

Space in the building has already been rented by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo for executive offices and a studio. The Center is also conducting its own classes.

Jean Stapleton withdraws April 12 from the cast of the Broadway production of "Bells Are Ringing." Her successor will probably be Alice Pearce.

Back to Methuselah

Theatre Guild (in association with Arnold Moss) presentation of two-act (six scenes) comedy by George Bernard Shaw, adapted by Arnold Moss; staged by Margaret Webster; scenery and lighting, Marvin Reiss; costumes, Patricia Zipprodt; electronic effects, Vladimir Ussachevsky and Otto Luening. Stars Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson, Arthur Treacher; features Valerie Bettis, Arnold Moss, Richard Easton. At Ambassador Theatre, N.Y., March 26, '58; $6.90 top Friday-Saturday nights $5.75 weeknights.

Cast: Arnold Moss, Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson, Valerie Bettis, Richard Easton, Arthur Treacher, Deirdre Owen, M'el Dowd.

The trouble with "Back to Methuselah," it's always been assumed, is its impossible length. Although Bernard Shaw considered it his "masterpiece," it has seldom been produced. Since it runs to 90,000 words, it was originally produced by the Theatre Guild in 1922 as three separate installments, each for a single-week run. The schedule was repeated for a second three weeks and then all three installments were alternated for a final week.

It was a boxoffice failure then and has invariably failed to attract popular audiences in its occasional presentations in various places subsequently. The reason, it's now clear, was not the play's length, but its dullness. For once, Shaw was in deadly earnest, and his earnestness is deadly.

In Arnold Moss' condensation, which he is presenting in partnership with the Theatre Guild, the play runs just about two hours, including one intermission. That's about a quarter of its original length. It's more or less the same version, but with a revised cast, that played a strawhat tour last summer.

With the present cast, it had a highly profitable tryout tour, mostly of one-nighters, and has thereby reached Broadway as a paid-off venture. It isn't likely to extend the scheduled six-week engagement, however, despite the three-star marquee lineup and the simple physical production.

"Methuselah" is a rather penetrating speculation by one of the most brilliant intellects the world has ever known. For that reason, and because GBS regarded it as his major work, it is reasonably interesting and even to some extent stimulating. But it's pure intellect, or perhaps Shaw would have called it moral passion. At any rate, it has no emotional projection for average audiences.

There are no individual characters—none, that is, with personal identity for the playgoer. There are only what amount to puppets representing the author's ideas. These symbols, principally as the eternal man and woman, are presented first in the Garden of Eden and, in six successive scenes through the ages "as far as thought can reach," to 31,958 A.D. Presumably Shaw regarded this world of the future as an ideal, but few playgoers are likely to share his feeling.

"Methuselah," thus, is an intellectual exercise, and not exactly fascinating even as that. In the despondency prevailing after the first World War it was apparently intended as an inspiring article of faith in man's indestructibility, of his ultimate salvation by the triumph of the mind.

But probably to considerable extent due to the influence of Shaw himself, there's been a good deal of philosophical thinking since 1922, and much of "Methuselah" now seems commonplace. As for its testament to man's immortality, man himself has made that a vanishing prospect with a little trick called nuclear fission.

For those who may be willing to concentrate on mental concepts, without human characters or more than a slight excuse for plot, and without the reward of any emotion whatever, this capsule "Methuselah" may have appeal, and of course the incurable Shavians will make it a pilgrimage. It will presumably be worthwhile for them, but for the general public it offers little.

The play is acceptably acted, but without distinction or fire. Tyrone Power, top-starred, plays Adam in the first scenes and then a succession of men with the secret of unlimited longevity. Faye Emerson, second-starred, plays Eve in the Garden scenes and thereafter a sort of recurring ageless woman. Like the other actors, they have little characterization to work with, so their playing tends to have the shallowness of revue-sketch performance.

Arthur Treacher, third-starred, is effective as a series of fuddy-duddies, while Valerie Bettis and Richard Easton are competent in secondary parts. Moss, besides being adaptor and co-producer, portrays Shaw himself as an amusingly bumptious m.c. and commentator. It's a useful device, giving the show virtually its only genuine life.

Margaret Webster's staging seems tentative, Marvin Reiss' scenery and lighting offer no surprises, Patricia Zipprodt's costumes are approximately adequate and the futuristic sound effects by Vladimir Ussachevsky and Otto Luening suggest science-fiction television. Hobe.

Blood Wedding

Patricia Newhall (in association with Robert Marquardt, Thomas De Marco and Joseph Tandet) revival of three-act tragedy by Garcia Lorca. Staged by Miss Newhall; settings, Charles Brandon; lighting, Mary Alma Dwyer; costumes, Clifford Capone; guitar music, Fernando Sirvent; choreography, Teresita La Tana. At Actors' Playhouse, N.Y., March 31, '58; $3.85 top.

Cast: Margot Lassner, David Faulkner, Ola Kaufman, Dolores Rashid, Jan Owen, Daniel Ades, Felicia Micolucci, Gerry Jedd, Harrison Dowd, Adele Lamont, Suzanne Harvey, Mimi Harris, Teresita La Tana, Jose Marques, Maria Del Romero, Estrelita, Maria Cristina, Jose Maldonado, Robert Dahdah, Manuel Duque, Don Lamb, Michael Roston, Alec Gunther.

Garcia Lorca's "Blood Wedding" is a play of seething passions in a Spanish climate that breeds fiery temperament. It's a story that must be told in flashes of lightning, so that the tragic denouement may have some of the ferocity of a sudden summer storm. As it happens, this revival at Actors' Playhouse has been staged with cool deliberation, pageant-like movement, with too much respect for the poetry, too little for the action.

Even the almost continuous offstage guitar music is soft, slow, well-mannered. Certainly Lorca didn't write a sedate tale when he envisioned the hatreds that would be aroused if a young married man ran off with a beautiful bride on her wedding day, stealing her from the side of her bridegroom and from the midst of her assembled family. Lorca was aware that in Spain such misdeeds carried the penalty of blood vengeance.

But under Patricia Newhall's studied direction, the performances at the Actors' Playhouse are genteel, the actors are ever so polite and speak in well-rounded phrases, dulcet tones. They seem under the impression that Lorca's writing is fragile, which it isn't. The only visible sign of fire and tempest is in a brief flamenco interlude danced in the wedding-day scene by Teresita La Tana and Jose Marques. Here is a heated mood that is never elsewhere achieved.

As a betrayed wife, Jan Owen plays with an emotional integrity that is keyed to the muted demands of the part. Harrison Dowd is amiable and dignified as the bride's father, while Adele Lamont, as the beauteous bride, implies passion without portraying them. Both David Faulkner, as the bridegroom, and Daniel Ades, as the young husband who runs off with the bride, are relatively static in their approach to Lorca's impetuous tale.

Charles Brandon's settings provide coolly attractive backgrounds. Opening night there was technical trouble backstage that reflected itself in faulty light cues, but the mishaps proved relatively inconsequential. The trouble is more basic. Geor.

Folies Legeres

(Light Follies)

Paris, March 24.

Paul Derval presentation of revue in two parts (40 scenes). Staging, scenery and costumes, Michael Gyarmathy; music, G. Tabet; H. Bettl, Fred Freed, Andre Hornez, M. Glandsberg, adapted by P. Larrieu. Stars Yvonne Menard; features Frederic Rey, Simone Claris, Chelo Alonso, Maia Jusanova, Del Monte, Micheline Roine, Lionel Vallin, Yves Thomas, Jackson Girls (12), Domenechs (2), Jacqueline Marcy, Nicole Parent, Roger Stephani, Rollos (3). At Folies-Bergere, Paris, March 23, '58; $4 top.

After running its last show four years and then being shuttered three months, the Folies-Bergere has opened a new revue that should be good for another four-year term. It's helped by the potent Folies title, the familiar nudity and the general production brilliance.

The new show, titled "Light Follies," alters the traditional formula a bit toward the policy of the Lido nitery, eliminating comedy sketches and using only production numbers and acts. That tends to become repetitious, but the lavish costuming, rapid scenic changes and nudity should maintain the appeal for both for French provincials and tourists.

Yvonne Menard is back as star and is being built as an m.c. She does the usual interlude with members of the audience, and sings in a throaty but acceptable manner. She does less nudity but is still revealing enough in her pony prancing to highlight big numbers.

The spectacular production numbers include a sumptuously costumed trip through history, a scene in the Tuileries during the Second Empire, a tale of seduction to which Miss Menard wins her next door neighbor by appearing nude on his balcony, a tale of a girl whose way with men saves a clothing store from ruin, and a reenactment of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" with swift scene changes.

Simone Claris displays ample fleshly charms in her heated sex terp segments with house dancer Frederic Rey, and Chelo Alonso is a fine addition in exotic and Latin terp sessions with adroit partner Del Monte, while Turkan Kan displays torrid belly rippling. Maia Jusanova is a competent hoofer with a feel for period work, while Nicole Parent and Roger Stephani dress up the usual eancan bit.

Michelline Roine handles her intro chores well and Jacqueline Marcy, Lionel Vallin, Yves Thomas are passable in singing stints. The Jackson Girls (12) and the Folies-Bergere Dancers (24) do okay terping, but are somewhat hampered by soace limitations on the apron to cover the lightning set changes. Solid meccano aspects, swimming pools, descending decors etc., are still a Folies backbone.

Domenechs (2) are a smooth hand-to-hand act in a takeoff on various nationalities doing this type of number. Rollos (3) are a fast roller skating number and Elsa & Waldo offer zany accentric dancing with impeccable timing, contortioning and fine comedy sense.

Thus, the Folies-Bergere is about the same, except for some streamlining to keep up with the times and a little budget tightening on production values. But it is still a frothy eye catching gambit whose tradition will keep it moving.

Biggest nut seems to have been the costumes which are outstanding in colors, taste and elegance. No sack dresses here except in 1920's numbers. The femme form is exalted, and that will always be the main draw, plus the heady packaging of Michel Gyarmathy. Old and new music is well blended by Pierre Larrieu. Mosk.

Anybody Here Seen Atkison?

San Francisco, April 1.

Recent visit of N.Y. Times drama critic Brooks Atkinson to Frisco, during the course of his cross-country trip to various legit centers, caused frantic scurrying among local little theatre groups. Each wanted to be sure he saw its presentation from opening curtain to finale.

One night, the audience waiting to see the Interplayers production of Arthur Miller's "Memory of Two Mondays" at the tiny Bella Union here, began to get restless as 10, 15 and then 20 minutes passed and still no curtain. Finally, director Leon Forbes walked onstage and announced, "Sorry about the delay, but we're waiting for Brooks Atkinson, the distinguished critic of the N.Y. Times, who promised to be here tonight."

From the rear of the theatre came an unobtrusive voice, "I've been here all the time." The show went on—immediately.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Broadway click of "Two For The Seesaw," with Henry Fonda and Anne Bancroft at the Booth, has cued reader queries on "how many other two-character plays have there been on Broadway in the past 50 years. Jan de Hartog's "Fourposter," with Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy (Mrs. Cronyn) was recalled.

Historians also hark back to the Al Woods production of "Jealousy," by Eugene Walter, from the French of Louis Verneuil, which ran for 136 performances at the Maxine Elliott, opening Oct. 22, 1928, with John Halliday and Fay Bainter. "Jealousy" was later revived with Basil Rathbone and Eugenie Leontovich, but didn't fare well.

Oscar Homolka and Flora Robson did a limited two-week engagement at the Embassy, London, in 1935 of "Close Quarters," by Gilbert Lennox, a German drama by Swiss playwright W. O. Somin. Two years later Lee Shubert tried it out in Princeton with Gladys Cooper and Philip Merivale. It expired on the road. It was a two-people play, but also had two offstage voices, plus the usual assortment of other devices—telephone, telegram, radio, letter chute, police siren, newspaper headlines, etc.

A one-character, one-act play, by Frank Merlin, titled "I Got Shoes," is on the fall agenda of Joe O'Brien and Rhett Cone, and will open next fall at their off-Broadway Cricket Theatre, 2d Ave. and 10th St., N.Y. The play, incidentally, was inspired by the life story of veteran character actor Conrad Cantzen, who died at 78 with $11.85 in his pocket, and 8c found in his meagre room in Jersey City where he slept on papers and begged for food. Living as a pauper, he left an estate of nearly $250,000 to provide shoes for needy actors. Cantzen's salary was never over $55 a week.

The highly successful "Voice Of The Turtle," by John van Druten, which opened Dec. 8, 1943, at the Morosco, N.Y., as produced by Alfred de Laigre Jr., had three characters, played originally by Margaret Sullavan, Elliott Nugent and Audrey Christie.

On anni of Astor Place Riot, Indiana University Press will publish on May 10 "The Astor Place Riot" by Richard Moody. Tale is full account of the 23-year theatrical feud between William Macready and Edwin Forrest which resulted in riot killing 31 persons and injuring more than 100. Book also reveals sidelights on Dickens, Longfellow, Bulwer-Lytton, the critic Forster, and other notables of period.

Harry Granick, whose "The Guilty" drama was a successful tryout in 1953 at the Margo Jones arena theatre, has a better offering currently preeming here for three weeks. "The Hooper Law," is a three-act comedy which gets deserved laughs and could probably fare on larger stages. It's a trifle long, but has the makings of a fine comedy.

The author has taken a romantic triangle situation and worked it for fresh laughs. The plot concerns a brash, single Kansas City belle who has a dinner date in with a married customer. She follows him to New York and poses as an interviewer to quiz his happy wife and uncorking laughs at the expense of the innocent husband.

Ramsey Burch's smoothly paced direction keeps the audience in a merry mood. The able cast extracts every laugh, especially Bruce Hall as the bewildered husband and Bea Shaw, an understanding wife who copes easily with the man chaser. Mabel Cochran, the housemaid, draws half her laughs with only a sniffish air and upturned nose.

James Pringle's two sets, via tricky lighting, easily suffice and add visual assist to a complex production. Bark.

Tomorrow's Children

Hollywood, March 20.

George Boroff production of three-act (five scenes) drama by Jan Leman. Staged by Boroff; lighting, Stan Paul. Stars Michael Granger, Kathleen O'Malley; features Doris Karnes, Stephen Ellsworth, Jefferson Searles, Herman Rudin. At Circle Theatre, Hollywood, March 20, '58; $3.30 top.

Elizabeth Brooks ..... Kathleen O'Malley
Ralph Brooks ..... Michael Granger
Ethel Brooks ..... Doris Karnes
Matthew Brooks ..... Stephen Ellsworth
Roland Kester ..... Jefferson Searles
Dr. Walter Ruskin ..... Herman Rudin

This Jan Leman drama is a sermon on the dangers of atomic experimentation and a scientist's moral responsibility for his discoveries. The play has heroic possibilities, but fails to make the most of its dramatic situations.

The story about a young novel prize-winner's struggle with his conscience over his part in the development of nuclear weapons has an overlong first act, and it telegraps its third-act dramatic punch. The big situation involves the hero's attempt to kill his own child, a congenital freak as a result of radiation poisoning. ("Hide and Seek," a drama by Stanley Mann and Roger MacDougall, dealt with a somewhat similar theme. It was a failure of the 1956-57 season on Broadway.—Ed.)

Producer George Boroff has staged the show with minimum but adequate props, but the scenery does not favor arena-style presentation. The performance is generally acceptable, though uninspired according to most local minor-league theatre. Incidentally, "Tomorrow's Children" is the first play in English by the author, a German physicist. Glen.

The Duchess of Washoe

San Francisco, March 27.

San Francisco Theatre Co. production of two-act (16 scenes) musical comedy. Staged by Leslie Abbott; book, Madelene Safonov and Cass Stevens; music and lyrics, Emil Martin; choreography, David Hamilton; sets, Alexander Argiros; costumes, Karl of Tasiner; lighting, James McMillan; book directed by Donald Whitney; musical direction, Martin and Sandra Campbell. At Encore Theatre, San Francisco, March 27, '58; $2.50 top.

Kate Mahoney ..... Pat McGuire
Andy Walsh ..... Orestes D'Anna
John Floyd ..... Donald Whitney
Clarence Barlow ..... Robert Atkinson
Kathleen ..... Annette De La Roche
Dr. Brett Flornoy ..... Rick Linden
Sam ..... Ford Lile
Flora Lamont ..... Delores Bernhard
Chin ..... Everett Lee
Luke Jordan ..... Roberto Piperlo
Ellie Jordan ..... Lida Berline
Louise Johnson ..... Bari Rolfe

Others: Alison Bruno, Sue Hackes, Raquel Lopez, Diana Quail, Joyce Workman, Jean Daly, Pearl Berkelman, Jane Bryant, Aurora Dawson, Janey Hayden, Linda Hoager, Danny Cameron, Brujo Cordoba, Ray Joseph, Milton Longway, Rick Mayr, Richard Martin, Jose Sevilla, J. H. Wiley, Dennis Ross, Mike Roberts, Richard Ramos, Larry Bryggman.

There's enough in this shambles of a musical comedy to make it fairly enjoyable. The germ of the book's idea is interesting, about a third of the music is fresh and attractive, and the second feminine lead, Annette De La Roche, has a fine soprano voice, uses it beautifully and is pretty.

On the other hand, "The Duchess of Washoe" has a tedious book which creaks between songs and never reaches a level of wit any higher than, "I ain't never seen a pot like that in the parlor before," plus derivative songs such as "Backstreet Love," strongely suggestive of "Love for Sale," as well as confused direction and a leading lady apparently directed to belt out every song in caliope style.

The show, located in Virginia City, Nev., near the peak of the silver rush around 1860, involves an Irish boarding house mistress who has grubstaked her boy friend and therefore shares in a rich silver strike. They wed and go to Europe, taking along her niece, who is really pining for a local doctor. The story is said to be based on an actual situation in Washoe County, Nev. (thus, "The Duchess of Washoe").

The yarn is ineptly told, larded with "dream" ballet, but it is at least brief. Among the better of Emil Martin's songs are "We're Headin' Out for Nevada," "Why Must I Be Me?" "There's Money in the Air," "Prospectin'," "Wonder If He Loves Me?" and "There's Nothing Wrong in Having Lots of Money."

As male lead, Orestes D'Anna is satisfactory, somewhat like a young Gabby Hayes, and Delores Bernhard, as Virginia City's leading madam, sings well. Rest of the cast seems to be under the handicap of inadequate direction. Stef.

B'way Better, 'Methuselah' $19,100 (7), 'Story' 51½G, 'Girl' 37G, 'Denim' 18G; 'Two,' 'Who's That Lady?' Set Records

Broadway was generally up last week. The powerhouse entries held steady, while receipts continued to dip for a few offerings. Of 26 productions on tap, four were on twofers. Holy Week and the start of the Jewish Passover Holiday next Friday night (4) apparently aren't hurting this week's business as much as traditionally.

There were seven sellouts, "Dark at the Top of the Stairs," "Entertainer," "Look Homeward, Angel," "Music Man," "My Fair Lady," "Sunrise at Campobello" and "Two for the Seesaw."

Road Uneven, As Biz Ebbs Again; Connie Bennett $41,500 in St. Loo; Twin 'Sergeants' Cos. Total $74,200

The road was uneven again last week, and generally a bit down from the previous semester. Philly, with two tryouts, "Say Darling" and "Love Me Little," was down slightly, but Chicago perked a trifle with the touring "My Fair Lady" and "Most Happy Fella," the latter finally staggering out of a nightmare engagement.

Prospects are glum for the current week, with the concurrent Holy Week and Passover coming on top of the steady spring business decline. There should be a boxoffice flurry next week, but receipts are likely to ebb consistently the balance of the legit season.

Katharine Cornell has a new vehicle of striking timeliness, colorful spectacle and emotional power in Christopher Fry's "The Firstborn," lit lured the British playwright here on his first American visit for the Hanna Theatre tryout of a play enacted with commendable impact.

There isn't any Fry double-talk in his surprisingly straightforward saga of Moses and the exodus from Egypt, interpreted in poetic modern language. Where Cecil B. DeMille had to use thousands of actors to dramatize the deliverance of the Children of Israel from tyranny in "Ten Commandments," a dozen players unfold a more humanized, moving version that has great pictorial beauty.

Somewhat in the realistic style of the "Family Portrait" of Jesus, this becomes an intimately sensitive character study of Moses. It's also a brilliant, compelling portrait by Anthony Quayle as the Messiah seen through the eyes of his sometimes skeptical relatives and the Pharaoh's family which knew him so well. Quayle, who doubles as director, registers so impressively in his part that he often takes dramatic thunder from everybody, including the star.

Miss Cornell, however, seems as radiant as ever in a rich role that has the sort of grandeur perfectly suiting her special talents. She looks genuinely majestic in a finely restrained, dimensional characterization of the Egyptian princess who raised Moses as a child, and watches his adult rebellion against despotism with discernment as well as pity.

Some first-night jitters slowed up her opening scenes, but her compassionate performance grew more assured and lyric in voicing Fry's blank verse. The star evokes a forboding feeling of heart-sickness while bitterly denouncing her cruel Pharaoh-brother for double-crossing the Israelites' leader so often.

Robert Fletcher's exotic costumes are gracefully worn by an excellent cast. Conflicts grow tersely enthralling whenever Quayle is on stage, eloquently calling the wrath of God upon the tyrant. Sometimes he is shocked by the miracles that turn Egypt into a land of horrors, and his fiery and darkly brooding portrayal sets the mood for the production. He has staged the show with imaginative simplicity. A series of plagues finally striking down the young prince are suggested by awesome sounds and Tharon Musser's dramatic lighting effects.

As the treacherous Pharaoh, Torin Thatcher is just as biting in delivery as he appears regally commanding. He tries to rationalize his villainy with the cynical slickness of a Soviet king-pin. All motives and attitudes are presented from a more or less realistic viewpoint, despite the poetic phraseology.

Roddy McDowall makes a good impression as the boyishly naive prince who admires Moses. The latter's fearful sister, Miriam, draws a touchingly strong performance from Mildred Natwick. Michael Wager depicts her weak turncoat son believably. Kathleen Widdoes as a royal daughter is a winsome little sprite.

Boris Aronson's technicolored abstract settings of the 1200 B.C. era are deceptively simple yet artistically distinctive in the scenes of the palace and Miriam's tent. Picturesque pageantry is a bit sluggish in first act, but doesn't hamper Fry's remodeled 1948 drama about an inspiring epic battle for freedom. Pullen.

Ukrainian Cossacks

London, March 20.

Victor Hochhauser (by arrangement with Jack Hylton) presentation. With Boris Mokrov, Alexei Dolgih, Vladimir Zerogonov, Valentine Verholomova, Valeria Kotlyer, Ivan Godun, Vasilii Izotov, Vadim Golik, Anna Kosiakova, Viktor Pobejimov, Anatoly Knlazev, Mihail Merkulov, Boris Mischenko, Dmitri Rokitsky, Anatoly Bokrov, Grigorii Tchapkis, Leonid Serafanov, Nickolai Birki. Artistic Director, Pavel Virsky; staged by Pavel Virsky; orch. under Igor Ivaschenko. At Princes Theatre, London, March 19, '58.

Easily one of the best dance companies to be imported into London for some time, the Ukrainian State Cossack Co. have all the makings of a hit in the States, too.

Dancers first came to London to play Albert Hall and subsequently did a short tour of Britain. A success all along the line, their current engagement should yield a handsome return for Victor Hochhauser.

There is a striking contrast between the male and female dance routines. For the girls—they're mostly very young and attractive—the choreography is sweet simplicity. There is a mild and fascinating charm about their dances, but not a great deal of life in them.

The male dancers, on the other hand, abound with vitality. Their routines are exciting, executed with skill and of a high level of artistry. Also, there is an unusually strong sense of comedy and many of the dancers succeed as much by their good humor as by the nimble footwork of the cast.

There is quite a blaze of color in the costumes with Cossack dress naturally predominating. Among the highlights, one of the more exciting male numbers is the Russian Leaping Dance, while probably the best comedy number is a jolly little item in which four men share one pair of boots, each using them in turn for a brief dance. The most attractive of the femme numbers is the Ukrainian Hora Dance in which, as needlewomen, they illustrate the art of embroidering a carpet. Myro.

Chi Opera House

being that the longhair season coincides with a busy motion picture period, that the arrangement is too temporary to benefit any but an already shuttered theatre, and that the Zelzer shows are often only weekend affairs. Speculation yields the Norshore as the most available big film house (it was closed by Balaban & Katz last October), but it is far off the beaten path, near Evanston.

Booking the Cinemiracle would solve a problem for the 3,500-seat Opera House, which generally gets infrequent tenants. However, that would make it unlikely that Royal Ballet Co. or the American Ballet Theatre would play here at all this year.

Long stretches of darkness were tolerable when the spot was the Civic Opera House, built in the interest of Chicago culture by Samuel Insull. But the present owner, the Kemper Insurance Co., is trying to make it pay off. However, the Opera House will have Chicago's Lyric Opera Co. two months a year even if it does become a film showcase. Cinemiracle, in other words, can get only 10 months a year at the house.

As it stands, Zeizer's last booking at the Opera House (unless the Cinemiracle deal falls through), may be the annual four-day, six-performance stand of the Met Opera, beginning May 22.

You Touched Me!

plays that would seldom if ever be produced elsewhere. The present revival of Tennessee William's seminal "You Touched Me!" written in collaboration with Donald Windham, is a case in point, for it was produced on Broadway for a 109-performance run in the fall of 1945, and apart from a video production of questionable calibre has not been available locally since.

Despite a generally inferior ELT revival, there are warm elements within the play that do, indeed, touch. While typical as far as the Williams play genealogy goes, probably through being a collaboration, there are gentle Williams-isms that are welcome, and that are sometimes unwelcomely absent in the latter-day playwright. And for the department of esoteric information, it may be noted that the fascination of porpoises for Williams, so manifest in the current "Garden District," has ancient roots, being graphically used for analogy in a speech of the old sea-captain in "Touched."

Atwood Levensaler's direction is not good. It is either as though he had lost heart in rehearsal, or as if he had done the kind of rush job that will serve for a week of summer stock, in the hope that it would also suffice for off-Broadway. Eavesdropping characters are placed in palpably abvious positions, important scenes are played hidden behind a chintz sofa, dogs bark at the visiting policeman offstage right and the officer enters immediately up left center, the arriving hero enters just as the sound-effect train is pulling into the station.

Casting has been equally cavalier. As the heavy-drinking, disappointed, touching ex-sea captain, Albert M. Ottenheimer indicates that he could be good if somebody would only help him, but scarcely anybody has. Charles Robinson Jr.'s chief claim, as a discharged member of the air force, is a distinctly handsome face, while Madge Wynne avoids wincing as she attempts to play a self-righteous spinster giving to mouthing platitudes.

Fortunately, there is Judith Slatin's amusing performance as a slatternly sensual maid to enliven proceedings. Too, there is a warm performance by Kitty Culpepper as the taciturn, withdrawn, lonely heroine whose fate would be emotional isolation except for the accidental intrusion of the young airman and the calculated efforts at liberation of her tippling nautical father. In fact, Miss Culpepper illumines what would otherwise be a below-par ELT effort. Geor.

Asmodee

Theatre 74 (Letitia Wilson and Robert Kelly) production of three-act comedy drama by Francois Mauriac, in new translation by Beverly Thurman. Features Louis Edmonds. Elizabeth Farrar. Staged by John O'Shaughnessy; settings, Motley; lighting, Robert Wightman; costumes, Ballou. At Theatre 74, N.Y., March 25, '58; $3.85 top.

Cast: Joyce Ballou, Joyce Ebert, Roger Leo, Wilhelmina Murray Martin, Louis Edmonds, Elizabeth Farrar, Joseph Hanrahan, Michael Ebert, Bjorn Koefoed, Taylor Gaves.

Francois Mauriac's play, "Asmodee," exemplifies some of the French Nobel prizewinner's facility as a novelist, revealing in leisurely, discursive fashion, the latent and overt passions in an apparently sedate French home.

Because Mauriac is a self-styled "metaphysician who deals in realities," his characters can often be taken at other than face value. There is a precise tutor, for example, who seems full of evil intent, although he is a renegade from the seminary. The widowed mistress of the manor and a governess are profoundly disturbed by the tutor's presence, but whether from love or perverse fascination is not always certain. Among the children is a 17-year old daughter, bright and shining of soul and face, who seems destined for a convent.

The catalyst who disturbs the uneven balance of the household is a young Englishman, an exchange visitor for the family's eldest son. Mother and daughter fall in love with the visitor, and in a fit of pique, the tutor goes into temporary self-exile. His later return is instrumental in bringing the Englishman and daughter together, while he remains with the mother and governess. It is a slow-moving literary tale which, under John O'Shaughnessy's direction has tasteful interest but little emotional involvement, the work of a deliberate and thoughtful craftsman laboring in an area that is not innately his metier.

Theatre 74 at 334 E. 74 St. has been converted into a theatre from an old-time film studio. One end of the large room has been used for the proscenium-less stage, and Motley has devised an elegant great hall for the old Bordeaux country house.

As the daughter who is torn between love for the church and an earthly love, Joyce Ebert's shining face and earnest intent give a radiance to her scenes that considerably helps the entire production. Louis Edmonds is coldly aloof as the bitingly commanding tutor, Elizabeth Farrar has studied control as the widowed mother whose loves seem to outrun her judgment, and Michael Ebert has boyish ebullience as the open-spirited English youth.

"Asmodee," is the name of a mythical demon who lifted the roofs from houses to observe and interfere with the lives within. Theatre 74's debut production has good taste, discriminating literary judgment, and affection for the task, but it emerges as desultory theatre. Geor.

A. I. Roughton's translation of H. C. Branner's Danish play, "The Judge," is scheduled for a May 13 opening at the Theatre Marquee, N. Y., under the production auspicies of Eugene Cogen and Arthur S. Barron. Peter Kass, professor of theatre arts at Boston U., will direct.

Philly German Weekly Sold

Philadelphia Gazette-Democrat, second oldest German language newspaper in the U. S., was sold to the Staats-Herold Corp. Acquisition of the Gazette-Democrat weekly gives the publishing company ownership of two newspapers with 244 years of publishing history. The Philadelphia paper began in 1838, while the Staats-Zeitung (sold by the Ridder family in 1953) was first published in 1834, and continues to appear daily.

New owners of Gazette-Democrat have no intention of merging the nation's two oldest German language newspapers. Gazette-Democrat was formerly owned by Louis P. Mayer J., president of the Gazette Publishing Co.

British Anti-U. S.?

The recent Doris and Edward L. Bernays study of "What the British Think of Us" was inserted in the Congressional Record by Rep. Dante B. Fascell of Florida.

The analysis revealed a high degree of anti-American hostility and the Bernays urged that steps be taken to remove it via British and American Governments and through voluntary activities of citizens in both countries.

Rex Smith's Memoirs

American Airlines veepee Rex Smith, with a $7.95-per-copy best-selling book, "Biography of the Bulls" under his belt, is planning his memoirs as his third book. Meantime he is translating "The Duke of Death," a novel from the Spanish, also for Rinehart publication.

British pub is bidding for Smith's "Bulls," now gone into third printing with 15,000 copies.

Farrer, Straus' Entries

Lover's Point," second novel by C. Y. Lee, author of the bestselling "The Flower Drum Song," soon to be produced as a musical comedy by Rodgers & Hammerstein, will be published by Farrar, Straus & Cudahy on April 11.

Same pub also will publish "The Moonlight Jewelers," a first novel by Albert Vidalie, translated from the French by John Petrie. The title is 19th-century thieves' slang for brigands, highwaymen or robbers. Book has been made into a motion picture starring Brigitte Bardot, soon to be released by Columbia under the title "The Night Heaven Fell."

Authors' Seminars

Samuel Hopkins Adams and Carl Carmer, both novelists with New York backgrounds, are on the faculty of the seminars on American Culture under the auspices of the N. Y. Historical Assn. at Cooperstown, N. Y., from July 6-19.

George McCalmon, director of the Cornell U. Theatre, and Christian H. Moe, playwright, also will give a seminar on techniques in staging outdoor historical dramas.

Mary Hosford's Double Debut

Socialite-actress Mary Hosford who is also a syndicated cooking columnist besides making her film debut in C. V. Whitney's "The Missouri Traveler," has authored an amusing book for Farrar, Straus & Cudahy publication.

Titled "The Missouri Traveler Cookbook," it is interlarded with closeups on friends and personalities so that each recipe has an autobiographical flavor. In effect, through Miss Hosford's penchant for cooking there are memoirs and anecdota which give this particularly cookbook a special flavor—non-culinary—of its own.

Pitt Sun-Telegraph's Cutback

Fred Lissfelt, for last 30 years music critic of Sun-Telegraph, has been dropped in an economy move by the Hearst afternoon daily in Pittsburgh. It isn't likely he'll be replaced, with somebody on staff probably being assigned to cover the concert beat. Lissfelt, who also teaches music in Pitt, had never been a fulltime employe, doing only the reviews on a string basis. At same time, Sun-Tele reassigned Leonard Mendlowitz to Karl Krug's theatre page. Recently Mendlowitz was pulled out of the amusement section to become tv editor and John Nussbaum was assigned to give Krug a lift. Now Nussbaum has been placed back on the city side and Mendlowitz, while continuing on television, will pitch in on the theatres, too.

Dropped at same time as Lissfelt were 16 others on Sun-Tele, not all of them in editorial department, however.

Karl Krueger's Memoirs

Karl Krueger, the first native American to become permanent conductor of a major symphony orchestra—he created the Seattle Symphony and the Kansas City Philharmonic, and revitalized the Detroit Symphony—has authored "The Way of the Conductor" for Scribners.

In 1949 he founded the American Arts Orchestra, which he still directs, and disks for New Records.

Considine's Press Pitch

Three of Bob Considine's regular INS columns dealing with the major role played by dailies in lives of Americans are being used by National Newspaper Promotion Assn. as part of a public relations program for newspaper industry.

Clarence W. Harding, public relations director of South Bend (Ind.) Trib and chairman of NNPA's public relations committee, says Considine material used in an ad slugged "Newspapers Make A Big Difference in People's Lives—Every Day!" has appeared to date in 171 newspapers with combined circulation of 7,865,400.

Among new members on NNPA's public relations committee are Sumner Collins, director of promotion, plans and public relations, N.Y. Journal-American; Daniel K. Niece's Blog on Lauder

Greta Lauder, niece of the late world-renowned minstrel Sir Harry Lauder, so popular in U. S. vaude and one-nighters, is planning a book about her famous uncle. She intends to sift through hundreds of diaries, documents, scribbled notes and unpublished mss. left by him.

Notes deal with his travels in many countries. Miss Lauder herself made notes of her own on the two world trips she made with the comedian.

Lauder, who died in 1950, wrote two books himself. One was "A Minstrel in France," published during the 1914-18 war, and the other "Roamin' in the Gloamin," his autobiog up to 1927.

Puerto Rico's Book Museum

Puerto Rico's new 75,000 book museum will open to the public later this month to coincide with the Casals Music Festival and offer an additional attraction to visitors. Museum is a government-sponsored project on historic Cristo St. and one of a number of buildings now being restored to its original Spanish Colonial style in San Juan. First exhibit will contain books believed to have been owned or read by Christopher Columbus, who discovered P.R. on his second voyage in 1493.

Sparking the project has been Elmer Adler, well known bibliophile who organized New York's Random House in 1927 and who was formerly with Princeton U. as a graphic arts expert. He has been consultant to the Commonwealth since 1955. Also active in the project is English Professor David J. McWilliams of the U. of Puerto Rico.

CHATTER

Mary Ellen Canny, longtime aide to Look veepee and editorial director Dan Mich, died at 40. She was formerly an assistant to radio's Don McNeill in Chicago.

Bill Ornstein, former Metro publicist, has a short story coming up in the American Jewish Times Outlook entitled "Concerto in a City Flat" and an article on Puerto Rico in the New York Herald Tribune Sunday edition.

2d Tea Party

"would go far" in enforcing laws that prohibit the sale and delivery of alcoholic beverages to minors, alcoholics, and persons known to be supported in whole or part by public charity, the board said.

Massachusetts grape fans faced a new problem—that of carrying a permit to get their drinks or buy a bottle, just as citizens are required to have a license to drive or a permit to carry a gat.

The brainchild of the BLB would apply to all persons 21 years or over to obtain an alcoholic beverages permit for both on and off premises consumption.

'Laughable, Ridiculous'

Nitery, convention, hotel, restaurant and resort biz was seen ruined if drinkers had to be licensed in Massachusetts as proposed by the BLB, spokesmen for these orgs declared. "Laughable, ridiculous, an insult to the public, administratively unfeasible," they fumed.

A spokesman for the Massachusetts Restaurant Assn. said present liquor laws were "bad enough without making them worse." Such a law, he said, would be detrimental to business, drive tourists out of the state, devastate it as a convention centre and benefit no one but neighboring states.

Hub hotel execs described the plan as "completely ridiculous" and pointed out that "probably 75% of our patrons are visitors from other states. Would they be required to obtain a visa or permit to buy a drink for themselves and their wives? What would the reaction be if we asked a visiting senator or a foreign dignitary to show his drinking license for an after-dinner brandy?"

Cape Cod May Secede

Several groups began groundwork for filing protests with the State Legislature. Cape Cod resort owners were up in arms. "If this drink permit goes through," they said, "we'll have to give Cape Cod back to the Indians."

Under the BLB's proposal not even those women in the Armed Services would be exempt. A spokesman for the state's Package Stores Assn. said the board's plan would be "nothing more than a return to prohibition."

The secretary of the State Council of Bartenders and Hotel Workers branded the proposal as "un-American, unconstitutional, unfair, ridiculous and foolish."

"If they start licensing for drink," said George H. Donovan, "they will start licensing for the right to eat in a restaurant. It would be a violation of the American free way of life. The right to purchase a congenial drink is as sacred as free speech or the right of free assembly. It's unfair to customers to have to carry a license every time they want a little drop of cheer. Union bartenders are very vigilant against serving people not entitled to liquor."

'Have Card, Want Grape'

At city hall, Mayor John B. Hynes said he hadn't quite made up his mind as to the efficacy of the proposal. "It is an obvious attempt to get more income," he said, "but it would control the indiscriminate drinking of persons under 21. However, the average person will resent being asked to produce a card in a hotel, night club, restaurant, country club, bar or taproom.

Dwight S. Strong, executive secretary of the New England Citizens Crime Commission, favored the report. "I think it is meritorious," he said. "After all, we have licenses to drive a car. We have Social Security cards, and I think it would halt many abuses of laws if persons had to have a license to permit them to drink."

State Commissioner of Public Safety Otis Whitney said the board's proposal was "not practical." "In my personal opinion, there is a question of constitutionality as it might bring undue interference with a citizen's right to basic freedoms."

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs, April 1.

Michael Blankfort, happy for the dough he makes as a film writer-director-producer, but prouder perhaps of the books he has caused to be published since he quit teaching psychology at Princeton during the depression, took a night off to discuss the role of the artist in a forum series at the Jewish Community Center here recently.

Now in its third year, this has been a fairly successful attempt to offset with culture the smog creeping down the Pass from L.A. toward the Coney Island of the Mojave Desert. Tall, angular and looking as if the Marines never gave him an honest meal, nor dishonest either, Mike talked about the responsibilities of the artist to society.

He felt he had two periods of his life when this was a burning question among creative people. One was during the depression, when society was breaking up, and the future looked blacker than a Fascist shirt. The second was during the period of oppression, which seemed to be felt everywhere before, during and after the Second World War.

Paradise Paranoids

The oppression was offset somewhat in this country which seemed to be pediculous with paranoids whose reactions go up and down like a thermometer that is alternately plunged in a bucket of icewater and then put out in the sun, victims of what the social science calls "privatism." The victim wants the rich full life, but he wants it privately for himself. He isn't interested in a social and political rich, full life for others.

A dominant characteristic of post-World War II colleges showed them to be gloriously contented with their outlook, self-centered and interested in material gratification. Younger countries, like Mexico, Israel, Egypt and even Bantu, were interested in older traits and showed more aggressiveness, ambition and a competitive spirit.

Study sponsored by MIT showed that many of our college kids have a belief in God, even pray. But 40% of those who do, repudiate the church in which they were reared. Mike thought this was an example of distrust of institutions and perhaps a failure of institutions.

He had some interesting comments on the shift of emphasis in bestsellers. The inspirational literature between 1880 and 1955 showed that before 1940 only a single paragraph related religion to national political leadership and victory over our enemies. Since then no book of this character has failed to identify religion with national aspirations.

Before 1920 women were viewed as morally superior to men, but that idea is not around much any more. Women are more masculine, men more submissive.

He took a look at the bestsellers of 1957—the year that sent everybody looking skyward to see one of the sputniks swishing around the world in outer space. Max Shulman's "Rally Round the Flag Boys" Mike described as a story of a small suburban community where a missile base was established. They made fun of progressive education, intelligent parenthood and replaced these with a generous share of adultery, which Mike thought had become something you got with every mortgage loan.

He then summed up "By Love Possessed," by James Gould Cozzens, which got its author more played up than if he were a movie star whose skirts had blown over her head. "The only magazine," said Mike, "which didn't feature Cozzens' picture was the Income Tax Digest. And this seems to me to be a mistake, since Mr. Cozzens will pay one of the highest taxes of the year.

"It was a story in which a lawyer discovers that even men of integrity have to compromise a little and the world falls apart when the hero of the book learns that his hero has a fault. He was an embezzler. Absolute honesty is the theme of this bestseller."

He said he hadn't read "Below the Salt," by Thomas B. Costain, because it's what is called in the trade a B & B book—bosom & bed. Everybody seemed to know something about "On The Beach," by Neville Shute, where an atomic war destroys the world, an old theme which Blankfort didn't spend much time on.

These Sound Horrible

"The Sound of Thunder," by Taylor Caldwell, he described as the sacrifice of a brother to support a sister and brother because he thought they were geniuses. It turned out they were bums and that he was the genius.

Then he tried "Atlas Shrugged," by Ayn Rand, "a thousand-page argument of dullness and adultery to prove that the only people worth anything in the world are capitalists. But not little capitalists like us, only big ones like J. P. Morgan. In this book, however, not even the adultery is well done."

"The World of Susie Wong," by Richard Mason, he wrapped up as taking place mostly in a Chinese brothel where the girls naturally have hearts of gold. "It's the sad story of another Madame Butterfly," he said, "only this is a different kind of madame."

He then tried his hand at "Remember Me To God," by Myron Kaufman. As he remembered it, this one didn't have any or much adultery in it, but it had some childishness in its descriptions of Jewish hatred of Jews in the character of his hero who wished he had been born something else. Mike had serious objections to this type of book, because it is usually the Jew who writes it with such an infantile wail. It suffers further from the belief that only Jews wish they had been born something else.

He summed up this age of American literature as being concerned primarily with fear—fear of falling in love, fear of complications of love, fear of war, but mostly fear of what we are. "By Love Possessed" reveals the fear of the discovery that man is imperfect, and is rather sad about it. And the fear in Kaufman's book is that the Jew is not worthy and therefore distasteful. Mike thought this sort of novel was written by fools.

Maturity Go Thataway?

"Is this fear maturity?" he asked. "To think of maturity in literature one has to think of maturity of a culture, a self-knowing, self-accepting community with enough fear of real menaces and enough confidence in real strength, with enough peace to feel secure in the world, and yet with enough anxiety to remain sensitive to injustice and human weakness."

Is maturity in a community as well as in an individual perfect equanimity, perfect harmony, perfect peace of mind or soul? Only a corpse meets that description, Mike thought. "Maturity doesn't mean unbroken peace of mind, it doesn't mean perfection, it simply means the capacity to meet the sometimes soluble problems of life and the insoluble problems of death with a clear vision—afraid, but not too afraid, with hope, but not the kind of primitive hope which makes only optimists of us. Maturity permits anxiety but not despair over the fact that mankind seems so cruel sometimes, so barbaric, so inhuman. Maturity accepts the idea that we are unfinished and the wisdom to search endlessly to complete ourselves, meanwhile enjoying the search. Our society in America by and large does not meet with this description of maturity."

"America is a paranoic society," he concluded, "which magnifies its enemies, undervalues its friends, imagines dangers where there aren't any, and like many paranoics, our society has phases when everything is great and nothing can equal us, when we are the greatest, the strongest, the best of all possible nations—and then without commensurate cause, we fall into depressions when we hide under the bed because we are not and can never be good enough. Manic one year; depressive the next; We dazzle ourselves with our brilliance in 1956—and in 1957 we stand in front of a mirror to make sure that the dunce cap fits us properly."

styles currently in vogue—the ballad brand of hoofology and the up-tempo stuff. What the shag was in bizarre dansapation in the Benny Goodman era, the dance style to the r&r "beat" is today. It's a fiexible tempo and the kids like to insert extra steps and "shine" as the mood moves them. There are even regional brands of formations and tempos, as followers of the sundry disks jockeys know.

The savvy jocks, in close pulsation with the kids, know this, and know what to play for them. Some of the established traveling bands don't. There is a recent instance of a highschool dance when the school chairman suggested to the principal that he pay off the pro band because the kids preferred to pick their own records. Fortunately for the band's ego, the educator proved to his charges that this would be highly embrassing to all concerned, on both sides of the podium, but the kids have hired no band since—they take theirs right off the platters. And like it better!

This has nothing to do with the "shook up" juveniles. These are the dance trends today. Everybody knows it and sees it and participates in it on the many afternoon deejay shows that span the land. From nowhere an unknown exponent of what the kids like becomes better known to them than many a show biz great. In their book these new exponents of the current idiom are the end.

The music biz vets, for some years now frustrated by their seeming inability to click as of yore, have now conceded it. They see the no-name, seemingly no-talent indies make their own masters—one Broadway independent recording studio stands them up like the Roxy—and via deejay exposure these items become the new hits of the moment.

Long conditioned to the show biz axiom that "the record is king today in the music business" these off-labels, projected from divers sources, have generated a new brand of music business. Some of it isn't highly principled; a few are renowned for their patent larceny. One current fave makes no bones of his 50-50 cut-in and, as one songwriter screamed: "Do you know what that means every time he clicks?—he's got a 56-year, practically a lifetime, annuity!" (This refers to the 28-year copyright term plus the ditto renewal period).

Where the band comeback is a possibility stems from the record hop popularity. If the bands assimilate the same appeal in person, as in the abstract, and the price is right, bands may have an in-person comeback potential. At 50c-a-head some deejay-sponsored record hops have drawn 2,000-3,000 kids. At $1-$2 for an in-person band, if it hasn't got that "beat," there have been instances of meagre turnouts.

There have been instances too, however, of greedy jocks outsmarting themselves and titling the ante to a buck and not luring the kids in the same numbers. That's where the record hops in the school gym, with some student as the emcee, and at nominal fee, succeed.

ASCAP writers versus BMI and the diatribes about "not giving proper exposure to quality music" notwithstanding, all this is the answer to some of those weird pop singles getting the kids' attention—and dollars. Whatever are the elements, the independent labels' a&r men—or maybe its their pipelines, no matter under what circumstances these are achieved—have it all over the major diskeries of the moment. They know what the kids want and they openly pander to that taste.

There's another sidelight in this unique disk vogue and it has to do with the instrument makers. There is a new bull market among instrument manufacturers with the kids, chiefly of the rhythm and guitar school. It's not unlike the yesteryear piano sales (the Sonovox and Hammond organ-type has taken its place) or the "gee, pop, it's a Buescher!" for the sax addicts.

No date was set for new meetings, though it's certain that additional and more specific sessions will be held. Not yet known whether further discussions will be attended by the prexies or by lower network echelons.

thing was something else again to them and while distributor objected strenuously on basis of how movie had been holding up at box-office, M. A. Silver, zone manager for SW, was adamant in his decision.

Even so, "And God Created Woman" broke all existing records at Squirrel Hill for money, attendance and length of run. Previous record-holder was "Marty," but the Bardot film doubled it straight down the line.

Artists Equity

variety of garb. The theme was quickly knocked out by the judges. The first two prizes, for example, had French motifs. The first was two dark silhouettes topped by gigantic strawhats depicting Maurice Chevalier and Mistinguet'e. The second prize was inspired by French post-impressionism, the plumed hat and the painted black stockings to just above the knee as well as the white paint was a trademark of artists of that era. Another prize was a calypso group. The only major prize depicting Americana was a nude Bety Ross, red and white stripes being the sole garb above the waist with a transparent painted cape of stars and stripes flowing from the shoulders. The third prize was three silhouettes, one of the figures being Justine Schachter, daughter of VARIETY's Jo Ranson; a clever costume, but also not particularly carrying out the Americana theme.

There was a liberal representation of the gay ones, and there were some who couldn't be distinguished from the genuine article without a program, which wasn't printed. A stag at bay was in danger of teaming up with somebody who just couldn't be his type at the end of the evening—that is, until these kids started camping out at the end of the evening. Then there could be no mistake.

The ball, nonetheless, had a lot of excitement. The decor by Shim Grudin and Remo Bramanti covered a wide range of American garb, and an out of the world room, adjoining the grand ballroom, gave a hint of things to come. Again Doc Calhoun of the Dixon Gayer Associates plugged the ball to a comparatively good attendance despite the handicaps. Johnny Carson had some good lines in his descriptions of the parade. In giving the $100 award to the nude who made second prize, he said, "Here — buy yourself some clothes."

Actors Equity Pact Would Give Acts With Industrial Tourers Top Pay

An Industrial Show Producers Assn. is in process of formation. Group has already met initially for the purpose of bargaining with Actors Equity Assn. on terms and conditions under which the sponsored shows will operate.

The negotiations now going on will make performers in the industrial show the highest paid touring performers anywhere. Those working in industrial shows even today under the present scale are considered in the highest echelon of troupers covered by union contracts. Equity is presently negotiating for a 20% increase which would raise minimums from $175 to $210 on dates of two weeks or more, and on dates of less than one week the scale would be $75 for the first day and $50 daily thereafter. Equity is also seeking increases in per-diem living allowances from $15 to $20.

The ISPA currently comprises representatives of Dramaturgy, Inc., Morton O'Neil, Cummings Productions, Cass Franklin and Sales Communications. There's probability that producers such as Jam Handy and Wilding Productions will also join.

Once the organization gets going, it will probably set up a code of ethical practices, minimum operational standards, as well as standardization of trade practices.

As it is, the members who have already met have agreed on some phases of the current Equity negotiations. The producers have agreed on opposition to any change

Col, RCA Replay 'Battle of Speeds' In Stereo Sound

Tempers are rising in the stereophonic disk field over conflicting engineering estimates of Columbia Records' "compatible" stereo development. Despite the sharp differences among the laboratory theoreticians, Columbia Records is planning to hit the market with its "compatible" disk no matter what the other companies do.

Last week shaped up as battle of demonstrations at the studios of both CBS and RCA Victor, the two leading contenders in a stereo battle that now has definite echoes of the "battle of the speeds" of 10 years ago. In fact, Peter C. Goldmark, CBS Laboratories prexy who developed both the LP and the present compatible disk, stated that the comments now being made by competition against the compat-

BRITISH, FRENCH DOING BETTER

By FRED HIFT

Foreign motion pictures are getting to be big business in the United States.

Last year they collected virtually $16,000,000 in gross film rental in the American market. It was a record take and the estimate, if anything, is on the conservative side. It doesn't include Chinese films, nor does it take in several important American productions shot in Britain and technically British, but too American to be included here.

Exact total for 832 feature releases, established via a VARIETY survey, was $15,907,769. They were released by 28 distributors and came from 10 countries. Additional coin was earned via the distribution of shorts, which is very limited. The 832 pix include films newly released in '57 as well as those generally in circulation that year.

Last year, a similar VARIETY survey, which however didn't include the earnings of the large total of Japanese language pictures, established a gross foreign film rental in 1956 of $10,132,392. It included 373 pictures from 24 distributors.

The 1957 gross of the foreign-language films ran to $9,560,568, which compares with $8,385,592 in 1956. However, in 1957, the number of pictures involved was 739 whereas, in 1956, it covered only 323 entries.

Figures dramatically emphasize that, in volume alone, there's not necessarily a corresponding profit. Each year, the number of imports into the U. S. has been rising and

Carny Boys, Religious Leaders Join In Protesting TV's Bingo-Wingo Yen

Westerns Boom Gun Biz

Hartford, Conn., April 8.

Current craze for tv westerns has stimulated desire for certain Colt guns, like the Buntline Special and the Colt .45 Single Action, according to Lawrence R. Knauer, director of development of Colt's Patent Fire Arms Mfg. Co.

"These guns," says Knauer, "were first made in the 1870's but there's a tremendous resurgence of interest in the weapons today, created largely by the 'Wyatt Earp' and 'Colt .45' television series and other shows depicting life in the Old West."

The bingo-wingo infiltration of the tv channels is causing considerable alarm in divers circles ranging from eminent religious leaders to carnival concessionaires.

Religious figures, notably of the Protestant sect, regard the invasion of bingo and its variants on tv outlets as a highly immoral step. The carny contingent says the tv bunch shouldn't muscle in on their racket.

The Rev. Paul W. Rishell, executive secretary of the Christian Social Relations Department of the Protestant Council of the City of N. Y., is militantly opposed to the influx of games of chance on tv. He is one of a number of ministers in the metropolitan area who regards both station and network owners as defiling the airlanes with this form of "entertainment."

"The increased use by television of giveaway programs is becoming more demoralizing not only for the people who participate in such programs, but for managements that produce the shows," Rev. Rishell told VARIETY. "It may not be illegal gambling, but such programs definitely give something for nothing, promote irresponsibility, and create both social and economic problems."

Carnival operators would like to keep bingo in its many forms, in their own backyards and the notion that such bigtime legit outfits as CBS, NBC, DuMont and others of similar ilk should stoop to promoting games of chance, for free or otherwise, is beyond their conceiving. The carny boys insist that bingo, no matter how you disguise it, smells badly, particularly on a 21-inch screen.

CBS Near Normal In Strike; Execs Man TV Cameras

The seven-city, 1,300-man technicians strike against CBS radio and television seems due to settle down into a prolonged standoff, particularly since CBS hasn't been hurt by the walkout as severely as the union and even the network expected.

In the daytime, the network is operating its live tv shows almost normally, cutting down somewhat on camera mobility but otherwise getting sound and pictures on the air. At night, the heavy use of film in the regular schedule has permitted near-normal operations. CBS is doing its live panel and quiz shows with its specially trained supervisory personnel, but is substituting film and kinescopes for some complicated dramatic and comedy shows. In radio, operations are virtually normal.

Even on the local level, the CBS o&o stations have such large backlogs of feature and syndicated film that the effects of the walkout are minimal. Strike was called Monday (7) at 1 p.m. by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in all cities where CBS operates radio and television stations with the exception of St. Louis.

CBS' foresight early last fall paid off. With the IBEW contract

INTERNATIONAL FILM ANNUAL

Brussels All Tuned for Fair's Bow Next Week; Here's How It Shapes Up

By JOHN FLORQUIN

Brussels, April 8.

On the eve of the World's Fair, Brussels is a changed capital—geographically, physically, economically, emotionally.

The famed Mannequin, the Belgian capital's impertinent landmark, is surrounded by a municipal facelift which makes this so-called "little Paris" appear strange even to locals.

Supplementing the traditional nationalistic pavilions and the mammoth Atomium which crystallizes the Atomic Age, is a variegated nationalistic display of showmanship, culture and the fine arts.

The Bolshoi Theatre, with Ulanova, will oppose the American Ballet Theatre with Nora Kaye and the Royal Ballet, former Sadler's Wells, with Margot Fonteyn. Dramatic festivals featuring world known companies, great international conductors and soloists and fabulous exhibitions of masterpieces of painting and sculpture chosen from private collections as well as from museums, will vie on the cultural level.

In a much lighter vein this time, a picturesque reconstruction of Old Brussels—a vast entertainment section, Luna Park, Coney Island and Disneyland all rolled

Winchell Bracing Legs For Stint in Las Vegas, Beating Sullivan to Post

Las Vegas, April 8.

Walter Winchell is on the verge of signing a contract with Monte Proser to star—as a song & dance man—in the Tropicana show. If the deal jells, and indications over the weekend were that it would, Winchell would headline the current "Tropicana Holiday" following Ernie Kovacs & Edie Adams, who start tomorrow (Wed.).

Latter pair, replacing Jayne Mansfield and Mickey Hargitay, were skedded for nine weeks, up until the new Eddie Fisher show June 11, but Kovacs wants to do only seven frames, Proser wants Winchell for the two weeks, and will accept the columnist's suggestions as to which femme star would work the show with him.

If Winchell makes his Vegas debut at the Trop, he probably would donate his salary to the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund—and he would beat Ed Sullivan to the punch. Sullivan opens at the Desert Inn in July.

While negotiating with Proser, the sum of $25,000 a week was mentioned, and Winchell said he'd have to have more than that.

"But performer like Noel Coward and Marlene Dietrich don't make any more than that," said Proser. "I know," Winchell replied with a wink, "but they're not syndicated!"

PRESIDENT GETS BILL FOR TAX-FREE SHOWS

Washington, April 8.

Congress has passed and sent to the President a bill to exempt from the 10% Federal admissions tax all musical and dramatic shows, band and orchestra concerts, ballet and opera, if given by non-profit or community organizations. The measure was introduced by Rep. Frank M. Karsten (D., Mo).

Another bill to reduce the cabaret tax from 20% to 10% was recently passed by the house and is waiting action by the Senate.

Herman Lowe's New Spot; Jack Levy Succeeds As 'Variety' Bureau Chief

After 16 years as VARIETY bureau head in Washington, Herman A. Lowe is returning to his native Philadelphia to become director of development for the Albert Einstein Medical Center in that city. Jack Levy, his longtime assistant, has been appointed bureau chief for VARIETY in the capital.

Florence (Mrs. Herman) Lowe is staying on in Washington, because of the children's schooling schedule, until July 1 when she moves the household to Philly.

A VIP show biz and politico group, are hosting a farewell party for the Lowes April 18 in the East Lounge of the National Press Club, Washington. Group includes Mrs. Perle Mesta, Eric Johnston, Maxwell Rabb, Martha Rountree, Edward Cheyfitz, Orville Crouch, Joe Borkin, Nathan D. Golden and attorney Bernard Segal, Mrs. Lowe's brother, among others.

Italy to Decorate Styne In Rome for 'Three Coins'

With "Say, Darling" launched at the ANTA Theatre, on Broadway, to a good if not unanimous set of notices, composer-producer Jule Styne is making his first European trip May 1 on the Liberte. Besides o.o.'ing London, with an eye to co-producing "Darling" there, he will do the Paris-Rome "grand tour."

Prime purpose of the trip is an Italian decoration which has been awaiting him in Rome for two years, in governmental appreciation for what his song, "Three Coins In The Fountain" (in collaboration with Sammy Cahn from the 20th-Fox film of same name), did for Italian tourism.

Culture for Capitol

Washington, April 8.

Hearings commence Friday, April 18, on the Fulbright-Thompson bill to erect a National Cultural Center for the Performing Arts, in Washington. The Center would become a branch of Smithsonian Institution and would probably be located on the Mall between the White House and Capitol.

Senator Pat McNamara (D., Mich.) heads the Senate Public Buildings Subcommittee which will conduct the hearings. Legislation is generally favored by Congress, but the location of the proposed Center is controversial.

Mike-Liz's 'Around World' Theme Song

Mike Todd's control over the film, "Around The World in 80 Days," also extended to a 50% interest in the publication of the Victor Young score for the pic, including the hit title song, with lyrics by Ned Washington. Todd, who bought a half-interest in the score shortly after Young's death, was dickering for a 100% buyout of the music recently. It's likely that the negotiations will be completed post-mortem with the music passing fully into the hands of the Michael Todd Co. Inc.

At the present time, the score is being published via the Victor Young Music Co., which was sold to Chappell Music after Young's death by the latter's manager, Jacques Biroteau. The title song was a top disk and sheet seller while the soundtrack album on the Decca label has gone over the 750,000 marker and may be the first film soundtrack to become a 1,000,000 LP-seller.

Somewhat akin to Irving Berlin's dedication of his song, "Always," to his wife, Ellin, and ceding copyright ownership to her some years ago, Todd regarded the "80 Days Around The World" title song as a romantic association with his wife, Elizabeth Taylor. Long before his death, Todd specified that the copyright ownership should revert to her as a "permanent little nest egg."

LOUIS J. BARBANO, MAN OF MANY ROLES

Louis J. Barbano, vet Columbia Pictures exec, last week was elected financial v.p. of the parent company.

He will continue in previously-held posts as well, these being director, chairman of the finance committee and v. p. of the international division.

Brit. Loves Liberace; Timmie Rogers' Shutout

London, April 8.

Liberace gave the short six-week Palladium vaude season an excellent start. A capacity holiday audience yesterday (Mon.) enthused over the pianist-singer's offerings.

Dick Shawn was also a click, but act was overlong, so much so that Timmie Rogers did not get a chance to go on. At the preem show, the proceedings were too extended to permit the Negro comic to appear.

Others on the Palladium layout include Margo Henderson, Scottish impressionist; Andrea Dancers, Arnaut, Joan & Arnaut, Brick Bros. & Mrs. Murphy and the George Garden Dancers. This is Liberace's first trip to the Palladium, although he toured Britain about a year ago.

X Marks Joan's Stake

Annual report of the Pepsi Cola Co., headed by Alfred Steele, husband of Joan Crawford, contains a center spread featuring a photograph of the Pepsi Cola spectacular on Broadway above the Criterion Theatre. Marquee of the theatre in the photo has "Joan Crawford in 'The Story of Esther Costello'."

"Esther Costello" never played the Criterion. It was shown at the Palace, a few blocks up the street.

Portugal's New Law Makes Show Biz Longterm (to 1983) Ally of Casinos

By LUIGI GARIO

Lisbon, April 8.

With expiration, next year, of the current laws for gambling casinos in Portugal, a new one has been promulgated by the government that should settle the question until 1983. According to the new law, admission to the gambling rooms will be free to foreigners, but even more restricted to certain categories of nationals such as government, bank and insurance employees. In general, nationals will have to have a special admission card, passed with police consent, to enter the gambling rooms.

The most interesting aspect of the law, however, is the relation between the casinos and show biz and hotels. Legal casinos will be permitted to be operated year round in Estoril, near Lisbon, and in Funchal, Isle of Madeira. During the summer such seaside towns as Figueira da Foz, Espinho and Povoa will be allowed gambling rooms. Special permission, according to circumstances, will be given for casinos in Santa Luzia, a mountain resort in the north; Curia, a water spa in the centre; Sintra, on the hills overlooking Lisbon, and Praia Rocha in the south, facing Africa, which already have imposing buildings for use as casinos.

THOU SHALT NOT AIR '10 COMMANDMENTS'

Cecil B. DeMille is now unique among Hollywood producers with regard to disk plugging of pic tunes. Unlike the rest of the pic industry, which has been exploiting pic music to hypo the boxoffice, DeMille is not permitting any airing of the background music for his "The 10 Commandments" production.

Dot Records, subsid of Paramount Pictures, which is distributing the DeMille film, has again notified all radio and tv stations that the picture's music has not been licensed for general public performance either in this country or abroad. Randy Wood, Dot prexy, warned that any infringements will result in legal proceedings for an injunction and damages. The soundtrack score for the "10 Commandments" has been released on the Dot label.

Irving Berlin to Mark 70th Birthday in May; No Plans for Musicals

Atlantic City, April 8.

Irving Berlin arrived here several days ago for a rest at Sheraton Ritz-Carlton. The man who holds the copyright on "Easter Parade" ended his holiday Easter Sunday departing with Mrs. Berlin for New York. Berlin said his 70th birthday is upcoming May 11 and has no plans for Broadway or Hollywood musicals in the immediate future.

To Berlin this resort is almost a second home, for it was in its beachfront hotels that he composed much of the music for the Ziegfeld Follies and other productions. He came here for his honeymoon, and has resided several seasons with Mrs. Berlin and his family.

Berlin recalled how he would come to the shore and work on songs for shows, most of which broke in in the old Apollo, now a motion picture house.

Of all his songs, more than 1,000, with 800 having been published, he still regards "White Christmas" as the biggest money maker. "I think it's the most valuable song copywright in the world," he said. "I wouldn't sell it for a half a million." The copyright has 39 years to run.

Lanza Starts Slander, Libel Action Against London Daily Express

Rome, April 2.

Mario Lanza, who recently resumed his interrupted European concert tour after being knocked out of action for some weeks due to a severe attack of phlebitis in his right leg, has started a libel and slander suit against London's Daily Express on its way through British legalistics. Action is based on two basic elements: a newspaper story and a telephone conversation. It is for punitive (moral) and actual damages. Exact sum has not yet been disclosed, but is said to be high.

In the newspaper story, dated Feb. 14, the Daily Express itemed that while Lanza had ostensibly cancelled some British concerts via a doctors certificate, he was seen dining out in Rome. Same paper the next day ran a brief note adding that a newsman had called on Lanza in Rome and noted his inflamed leg. Suit will apparently also take into account the claim that a large number of tickets were returned because of the newspaper note. Thus involving "actual damage." The slander charges are concerned with comments regarding Lanza which are claimed to have been made during

No Strings to RKO Backing Of 'Right' Projects; Kaufman's Job

RKO is out to provide the financial support for anybody with the right kind of motion picture project and there will be no commitments involving studio or distributor, Tom O'Neil, president of the parent RKO Teleradio, explained in New York this week. At the same time he disclosed that Arnold Kaufman, Teleradio exec since 1947, has been named general manager of the film financing division.

The O'Neil pitch, as he put it, is to make RKO a key source of money for indie film-makers with the latter to operate either on a short-term or long-term basis, with no restriction as to cast or distributor and with only actual costs charged against the pictures. "There will be no unloading of excessive studio charges or other overhead items which bring no on-screen values to the particular film," declared O'Neil.

Actually, two productions which already have completed major shooting are covered under this new policy. Produced by Benedict Bogeaus, they are "Enchanted Island," adapted from Herman Melville's "Typee" with Dana Andrews and Jane Powell in the leads, and "From the Earth to the Moon," Jules Verne science-fictioner with Joseph Cotten, George Sanders and Debra Paget.

O'Neil held back on information as to which distributor would handle the two Bogeaus properties. "Typee," incidentally, once was started by John Huston as an Allied Artists release but was abandoned because of mounting location problems (and costs).

Kaufman, close associate of O'Neil's, was the key negotiator in RKO's behalf of the disposition of this company's pre-1948 library to television interests. Until recently he was chairman of the Teleradio advisory committee.

Sees 'Movie Queen' Type Fading Out

Hollywood is still oriented towards the fading concept of the "movie queen" and consequently has trouble adjusting to the new types of "stars" who rely on performances rather than personality alone.

Opinion was voiced in Manhattan by Hope Lang, the young actress current in "Peyton Place" and upcoming in "The Young Lions." She's the wife of actor Don Murray.

Under sixyear contract to 20th-Fox (with every third year off to do a play), Miss Lang said the studios at times had difficulties understanding that some of the new players were eager to "protect" themselves. "It's not that we're difficult, or hard to handle," she observed, "though studio executives at times feel we are. When you look into the problem, you begin to realize that what passes for 'being difficult' is really a desire to break away from a degree of traditionalism and conformism."

She cited the instance of the studio "galleries," where still photos are taken. "Every time I've been in the gallery, the pictures come out looking exactly like everyone else. They're so retouched, I have trouble recognizing myself. So, naturally, I prefer having my own pictures taken."

Miss Lang said it was more difficult today to reach the popular stardom level because the public puts greater emphasis on story and performance. "Hollywood always wants to 'sell' the new talent in the tradition of yesterday," she observed. "It becomes more and more difficult to do and even getting a great deal of publicity doesn't necessarily help."

Morbid at Todd Grave

Chicago, April 8.

Mike Todd's grave in suburban Forest Park is now a landmark for the morbidly curious. Since the March 25 burial, daily streams of men, women and teenagers have trekked to the new mound of dirt in the Goldbogen plot. Some have gone away with bits of withered flora; others have boldly scooped a handful of "souvenir" soil. But some, to give the scenes a twist, have placed fresh flowers on the grave.

A spokesman for Jewish Waldheim Cemetery estimates some 600 people have made the pilgrimage so far, with a leveling off noted in recent days.

Recently Feted Ted Schlanger Exits Stanley

Ted Schlanger, Philadelphia zone manager for Stanley Warner Theatres for the past 25 years, unexpectedly resigned this week. Stanley disclosed Schlanger's exit with a terse statement that prexy S. H. Fabien "regretted that Mr. Schlanger had made a decision to leave the company but that he would be retained as an adviser and consultant."

Absent were usual kudos and background information that often accompanies the resignation of an official of Schlanger's standing and length of service. Only recently Schlanger was feted by industryites in the Philly area on the occasion of his 25 years of service with the Stanley Warner organization, successor to Warner Bros. Theatres.

Some insiders are of the opinion that Schlanger's exit may have had some connection with a disagreement between Stanley and Schlanger's son, Claude. Three years young Schlanger opened a theatre in Doylestown, Pa., and brought a suit for $1,000,000 against SW in an effort to obtain a moveup in his run. He has since opened a drive-in theatre.

According to one report, SW sought to make a settlement with Claude Schlanger, but he declined the offer. His father, it's said, remained on the sidelines and did not take a position in the matter.

GOLDWYN SEES FILM TRADE BUSINESS-LIKE

Take it from Samuel Goldwyn: "The motion picture industry is putting its house in order with more determination and constructive effort than I have ever observed in all of Hollywood's history." Producer made the statement in a by-line piece released to the United Press this week.

Goldwyn said he was confident the industry—indeed, the entire country—will emerged from the present economic recession "healthier and stronger."

He blamed the general film theatre attendance decline on an apathetic attitude that had been taken by some industry leaders during the lush war years but he insisted the important grosses chalked up by many recent features prove the public's interest.

Eric Pleskow, UA sales chieftain in Germany, slated to shift from his Munich base to UA in Paris, making his first Hollywood hop this week before returning to Europe.

STORIES, NAMES HARDER TO GET

By GENE ARNEEL

Hollywood is coming face to face with one of its most perplexing dilemmas. The film-makers are convinced that for the most part the way to the big money at the boxoffice is via established properties and provocative, big-name casting; but the risks are greater than ever and the stories and names harder to come by.

That important boxoffice figures are within reach is evidenced by the success within the past several months of such entries as "Peyton Place," "Run Silent, Run Deep," "Bridge on the River "Kwai," "Old Yeller," "Sayonara" and "Farewell to Arms." With the sole exception of "Yeller," these all represent sizeable production packages in terms of investment and stars.

But despite the hefty expenditures—$2,000,000 in the minimum—all are coming out with profits. And this precisely is what is impressing the producers. They're convinced the public is willing to shell out money in significant amounts for something "special." It's on this basis that there's plenty of life in the picture business, and the Hollywoodites are anxious to latch on to it.

The rub centers on (1) the amount of chance involved in the new projects and (2) the difficulties in getting the right combination of ingredients for each package.

Paramount's top-echelon execs from both New York and the Coast spent a large portion of last week in huddles at the studio on evolving a new production program. But the blueprint that was drawn could only be a generalized one. Par is in a financially strong position, particularly in light of the up-to-$50,000,000 which will be coming in from the sale of its pre-1948 backlog. Nonetheless a few epic-sized theatrical flops could mean a severe hardship.

Par, of course, has been watching the trends, as are the others, and taking the cues from the successful matching of Clark Gable and Burt Lancaster in "Run Silent," such click novels (with add-

Back of Orchestra Section Into Stores as Part of Redesigning Loew's State for Hard Tickets

Conversion of the 3,450-seat Loew's State Theatre on Broadway to a house more suitable for hard-ticket, two-a-day attractions is expected to get underway in July. Plans for reducing the seating capacity of the theatre to 1,800 seats and improving the sight lines so that pictures in all possible processes can be shown are already on the drawing board. Reports that the Loew's showcase would be "changed" have been circulated before, but this time it appears that the chain means business.

The back of the orchestra on W. 45th St. will be eliminated and will be replaced by stores. The Cobb's corner Restaurant, now on the corner of W. 45th St., will expand its quarters as a result of the alteration of the theatre.

Reconstruction of the theatre, expected to take about a month, will also see the elimination of a large part of the balcony, moving down of the projection booth, and cutting down of the proscenium. The lobby of the Broadway entrance of the theatre will also be rebuilt and a new boxoffice, similar to the one at the Criterion Theatre, will be installed. Entire inside of the theatre will also be reconstructed, with wider aisles and new seats.

Conversion of the State marks the end of another of the old-style mass houses that have typified the Broadway film market. However, Loew's Theatre will still have the Capitol, a 4,820-seat auditorium, as its mass house. The occasional closed-circuit television fight attractions, usually shown at the State, will probably be shifted to the Capitol.

20th's Whammo Quarter

Biggest first quarter in the history of 20th-Fox's domestic sales organization is being predicted. Company's first three-months period ended March 31.

Contributing to the big gross were "Peyton Place," which has proved to be a runaway hit, and "A Farewell to Arms."

First 1958 quarter is in sharp contrast to the last 1957 quarter which showed a net of only $887,360 against $3,016,320 for the prior year. The strong first quarter performance in the States is matched by similar good billings abroad. It reflects the general upswing in theatre biz that followed the holidays and the availability of strong 20th product.

Decca-U Earnings Down in 1st Qtr., But Still in Black

Overall earnings of Decca Records, including its interest in Universal, will be considerably less for the first quarter of the current fiscal year than for the similar stanza of a year ago, Milton R. Rackmil, Decca-Universal prexy, told reporters after the annual stockholders' meeting of Decca yesterday (Tues.) in New York. However, in comments to the press and to the shareholders, Rackmil stressed that the company would remain in the black and that Decca's quarterly dividend record of 25c appeared "safe for 1958."

At the same time, the Decca-U topper noted that Universal's sec-

Milton Pickman Goldwyn Chief

Hollywood, April 8.

Milton E. Pickman has been appointed general manager of Samuel Goldwyn Studios, succeeding Robert V. Newman, veepee for past seven years, who recently resigned to join Batjac Productions.

Pickman in recent years was general manager of Jerry Wald Co., which was subsequently purchased by Columbia Pictures when Wald assumed post of Columbia exec producer. This, of course, was prior to Walad's switch to indie Film-maker status at 20th-Fox.

Despite All, H'wood Not Quick to Spot Talent, Declares Producer Wald

Trouble with the picture business is that it has a shortage of talent, producer Jerry Wald said in Gotham last week.

"When we make an inferior product, we tend to blame the public rather than ourselves," he said. "We must finally accept the fact that the days of the star system are over. It's the 'package' that counts today, not the individual star. The public today buys what's in the film, not who's in it."

Wald speaks from experience. Having produced the outstandingly successful "Peyton Place," and with "Long, Hot Summer" just going out, he's one of the busiest men on the Coast today. For 1958 alone he has seven films ready to roll, with several more on the sked.

Titles he'll produce include "Mardi Gras," "March 9," "Sons and Lovers," "Have Tux, Will Travel," "The Big War," "The Sound and the Fury," and "The Best of Everything." In addition he has bought Fred Gipson's "The Hound Dog Man" which he'll retitle as "Wild in the Country."

He'll do "Beloved Infidel," the

Easter Booms Biz; 'Kwai' Champ Again, 'Lions' 2d, 'Run Deep' 3d, 'Summer' 4th, 'Pacific' 5th

Usual Easter Week upbeat is bigger than ever this year, with some blockbuster product pushing grosses to a very high total despite heavy rains in many sections of country. Some idea of how trade is booming is revealed by the fact that the top eight biggest pictures will show a total gross of $2,157,000 in the 24 key cities covered by VARIETY.

Still champ is "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) with better than $500,000 gross. It is the fourth week this pic has been No. 1. "Young Lions" (20th), out in circulation for first time this stanza, is a strong second-place winner, with better than $420,000.

"Run Silent, Run Deep" (UA) is capturing third money, same as a week ago. "Long, Hot Summer" (20th) will finish fourth, only a step behind. "South Pacific," also from 20th-Fox, is capturing fifth position.

"Merry Andrew" (M-G) is winding up sixth, being helped materially by its great showing at the N. Y. Music Hall. "Marjorie Morningstar" (WB) is copping seventh spot.

"Snow White" (BV) (reissue), fourth a week ago, is finishing eighth. "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) will wind up ninth. "Teacher's Pet" (Par) is taking 10th place.

"Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) is taking 11th money while "Witness For Prosecution" (UA) rounds out the Top 12. "God Created Woman" (Kings), "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama), "Brothers Karamazov" (M-G) and "Raintree County" (M-G) are the runner-up pix.

"Paris Holiday" (UA) looms as a potentially strong newcomer, being rated trim in L.A. and great in Seattle. It is mildish in Philly. "Juvenile Jungle" (Rep), slim in Detroit, looks good in Boston.

"Gervaise" (Cont) is rated good in Pitt. "Gift of Love" (20th) shapes okay in Detroit. "Farewell To Arms" (20th) is doing well in St. Louis and Philadelphia currently.

"Escapade in Japan" (U) looms good in Chi. "Desire Under Elms" (Par) continues nicely in two N. Y. houses.

"Bonjour Tristesse" (Col), okay in Denver, looks hep in Toronto. "Sayonara" (WB), in second week on multiple-theatre engagement in L. A., is rated solid. In same category, "10 Commandments" (Par) is socko there. However, it's most terrific showing currently is in in some eight big subsequent-runs in N. Y. Metropolitan area.

"Lady Takes Flyer" (U) shapes trim in Toronto. "Sing Boy, Sing" 20th) is okay in St. Louis. "Summer Love" is rated good in Louisville.

DISTRIBS' ATTORNEYS MAUL PLAINTIFF; EMBASSY, FRISCO, CASE HOTS UP

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco, April 8.

Plaintiff in an $8,000,000 antitrust suit against all major producer-distributors took an awful beating from three defense lawyers while on the witness stand in Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy's court last week.

The witness was Dan McLean, co-owner of the 1,400-seat, 51-year-old Embassy Theatre in downtown Frisco. McLean and his partner, Leland C. Dibble, sued 20th-Fox, National Theatres, Fox West Coast, Columbia, Universal, Paramount, United Paramount, RKO, Warner Bros., UA and Loew's on Dec. 29, 1950, claiming the majors had refused the Embassy first-run product from Christmas, 1938, to date suit was filed and second-run product from Christmas, 1938, to March, 1947.

But after lawyer Robert Raven finished direct examination of his client, McLean, the defense attorneys started working over the independent exhibitor on cross-examination.

Chief inquisitor was Eugene Bennett, attorney who represents Paramount, RKO, Warner Bros., UA and Loew's. He batted the red-faced McLean around on these main points:

(1) The McLean-Dibble relationship to Herman Wobber, who was the secret "angel" in financing 55% of the Embassy Theatre deal and who, when the deal was consummated in late 1938, was general sales manager of 20th-Fox;

(2) McLean's interest in Ten-O-Win, a legal lottery which McLean invented in 1936 and which the Fox houses and the Embassy used to hypo business in the late '30s and '40s;

(3) McLean's effort to get first-run pictures when he took over the Embassy in November, 1938—it became apparent that McLean had had convenient lapses of memory while giving a deposition, that he had indeed signed a third-run contract with Warner's as early as Nov. 23, 1938, and this made Judge Murphy, very film-wise as a result of six months of the Goldwyn case and a stickler for legal niceties, plenty sore;

(4) Possibly most damaging from the Embassy's viewpoint, was McLean's admission that he had lied to all the major distributors in the spring of 1940 while seeking, and eventually receiving a 25% slash in film rentals.

NOW IT'S 'SUPER SEVEN'

Columbia Follows Last Year 'Fabulous Five' Grouping

Columbia, which last year had a "Fabulous Five" campaign centering on five of the company's top releases, now is set to follow up with a "Super Seven." Promotional details were given at the company's sales meeting in New York last week.

Exec said the production quintet given the special designation in 1957 brought rentals of $45,000,000. Based on this figure, the rental objective of the "Super Seven" is $65,000,000. Included in this group are "The Key," William Holden, Sophia Loren, Trevor Howard; "Gunman's Walk," Van Heflin, Tab Hunter; "Best of Enemies," Danny Kaye, Curt Jurgens; "Last Hurrah," Spencer Tracy, and "Bell, Book and Candle," James Stewart and Kim Novak.

Col's N. Y. meeting also brought announcement of a 10-week billing drive beginning April 18, during which period each of the company's 11 divisions will undertake to meet to top a quota set for it.

TOA-John Hancock Co. Sets Group Insurance, Up to 20G Per Head

Theatre Owners of America has completed the details of its new group life insurance plan for its members. The program, placed with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., offers coverage ranging from $5,000 to $20,000. Plans offers two options—coverage of all salaried personnel and coverage for management and supervisory personnel. The employer will pay the entire cost of the insurance.

All TOA members are eligible to join and the program will become effective as soon as there are sufficient applicants. The program is a result of several years of work by a special TOA committee, headed by George Kerasotes. It will be administered by the TOA Group Insurance Trust now set up at the exhibitor organization's New York headquarters.

The new plan, it's pointed out, will now make it possible for smaller circuits, which previously could not obtain group insurance because of insufficient employees, to now cover all their salaried staffers. At the same time, larger organizations, which already have such a plan, will be able to utilize the new program to supplement their existing plan for key executive and supervisory personnel.

Statesmen at Banquet Of Screen Producers Guild

Hollywood, April 8.

Henry Cabot Lodge, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, will be a special guest at Screen Producers Guild's annual Milestone Award banquet April 13 at Beverly Hilton Hotel.

Other special guests will be Clare Boothe Luce, former Ambassador to Italy; George V. Allen, director of U.S. Information Agency; and Eric Johnston, MPAA prexy.

Spyros P. Skouras will be kudosed this year by Guild, with Walt Disney, last year's winner, making presentation.

Sam Briskin To Columbia Pics Remains 'Iffy'

Samuel J. Briskin, who last week appeared in line for the job of production chief at Columbia, returned to the Coast at the weekend after talks re the studio spot at the Col homeoffice but with nothing formally wrapped up. Decision was made only to shelve the matter at least for the time being.

That talks had taken place was confirmed, of course, but an insider said the closing stage was never too immediately within reach.

As a result, Briskin will continue as a member of the Loew's board. He would have had to relinquish this post had the Col alignment materialized.

Kahane's Position

Hollywood, April 18.

B. B. Kahane stated here yesterday (Mon.) he has no desire to take the Columbia studio helm on a permanent basis.

He has been acting administrative head since the death of Harry Cohn.

LINE UP SHOW NAMES FOR FOREIGN AIDERS

Washington, April 8.

A number of show biz names are included in a list of 300 sponsors to push the administration's foreign aid program. The Committee for International Economic Growth, was set up as a non-partisan group under the leadership of MPAA prexy Eric Johnston. List represents a cross-section of nation's leaderhip in all fields, and includes some, but not all, who attended last month's bell-ringing all day foreign aid pow-wow.

Johnston, in revealing sponsors, stressed importance of program, "particularly in period of domestic recession," and expressed gratification of willingness of citizens to associate themselves with Committee.

Show biz reps are as follows:—SAG prexy, Leon Ames; Walt Disney, Screen Producers Guild's Samuel Engel, Danny Kaye, Jerry Lewis, NAB prexy Harold Fellows, Paramount boss Barney Balaban, ABC-UPT board chairman Leonard Goldenson, Helen Hayes, RCA topper David Sarnoff, N. Y. Times Youth Forum Dorothy Gordon, tv panelists Bennet Cerf, and Charles Van Doren. Authors Quentin Reynolds and Pearl Buck are also included.

Balaban was one of original sponsors of program, along with President Eisenhower, Gen Lucius Clay and others, and is said to have contributed to cost of the one day rally. Danny Kaye was an attention getter at this by speaking about his activities on behalf of children the world over.

COLUMNISTS TURN ECONOMISTS

Art-'Last' of Columbia Cuts

In a move described by a company spokesman as the last of the economies—"from now on we go upward"—Columbia has started an overhaul of its homeoffice art department.

Notice was posted this week that of the 16-man division, six are to be pinkslipped, five will be retained and five will be shifted to the Donahue & Coe agency, which has the Col account.

As required by union rules, the notice must be posted 60 days in advance of the projected changes.

New Talent a Drug on Market?

Sy Bartlett Sees Hollywood in a Pool of New Faces —But Ignoring Them

Hollywood, April 8.

Hollywood today has the greatest pool of new faces in the history of the film business, and if producers will have the sheer fortitude to draw upon it and give its members real opportunities in top quality pictures the excitement of discovery will reach right into the boxoffice cash registers of the nation, producer Sy Bartlett stated yesterday.

Bartlett, who will produce "Port Chop Hill," to star Gregory Peck, under pair's Melville Productions banner for United Artists release, is personally casting the 67 speaking parts in the Korean war story. "It's never been so good," he said. "It's almost an embarrassment of riches."

Producer started his quest for new male talent to portray the roles of Pecks infantry company, three weeks ago. To date, he commented, he's interviewed 322 young thesps, by devoting two hours per day and three hours every other night to task. During the next two weeks he'll see about 100 more.

"I have been amazed to find that all of these young actors whose features are utterly—or virtually—unknown to the theatre screen, have great backgrounds in dramatic television, off-Broadway and Brodway shows," he pointed out. "Brought to Hollywood primarily by the swing west of television production they have enriched beyond description the supply of talent available to film-makers."

With this new source of acting talent, Bartlett holds that every part in a picture, no matter how minor, can now be cast with highly competent performers to make these roles come off the screen with importance. "Even bits," he said, "can be given high polish."

Producer reported that after he completes his series of interviews he'll narrow down the prospects to two or three players for each part and have them read roles for Peck, director Lewis Milestone and himself.

Strippers Dispossessed; Once Boffo Burleycue Policy Is Abandoned

Omaha, April 8.

Norman P. Prager, new manager of the Cooper Theatres here, last week changed the entire policy of the Town Theatre, the last burlesque holdout in this city. House in the future will play second-run double features.

The late Ralph Goldberg more than 10 years ago switched from second-run double features to a semi-burlesque policy that included short films and occasional in-person strippers. This proved so successful that at one time the theatre, a 1,000-seater, was more productive than any of the other six houses in his chain, including the downtown State, a first-run house.

When Goldberg died, his successor, Kermit Carr, continued the policy successfully until Mrs. Goldberg sold the theatres to the Cooper chain.

John Wayne was a visitor in Dallas. Planning a film based on the Battle of the Alamo, he dropped by to see how things are progressing for location shooting.

Critic Lesner's 30th Anni

Chicago, April 8.

Daily News film critic Sam Lesner rounds out 30 years on the paper's payroll tomorrow (Wed.), including a couple of annums in the Army medical corps in the second World War. Friends are planning a celebration for him.

Coincidentally, "Teacher's Pet," with Lesner among the scribes cast in atmospheric bit parts, opened today (Tues.) at the Woods. "I'm still under 50," says Lesner. "I started young."

Col Firings Halt SPG Pact Talks With 4 Majors

Screen Publicists Guild, representing New York pub-ad staffers at six film companies, has broken off joint negotiations with Warner Bros., Columbia, 20th-Fox and Universal, all of whose contracts expire at the same time. Combined talks were halted because of Col's dismissal of 11 staffers—10 artists and a copywriter—during the period of the negotiations.

Feeling of the SPG leadership is that Col broke faith during the course of the talks, particularly when the union's demands stressed security. As a result of the break-off in the joint negotiations, the SPG will continue the sessions with the film companies on an individual basis, the opinion being that Col's pinkslipping represents a problem that must be discussed separately.

The SPG is particularly concerned about the continuing trend of practically eliminating home-office advertising and art staffs and turning the work over to an outside agency—in this case Donahue & Coe. Union's leadership maintains that this move constitutes sub-contracting and in the present negotiations all efforts will be

Gallantry to Nurses

Tulsa, April 8.

Tulsa Downtown Theatres (Ritz, Orpheum, Majestic) got around a crisis over the weekend by an unprecedented screening on Sunday morning.

Manager Warren Patton had set up a special screening of Warners' "Marjorie Morningstar" for teenagers for Saturday night after the last feature. Among those invited to attend were student nurses at Tulsa's Hillcrest Medical Center.

At the last minute, the senior students found they would be unable to draw late privileges to attend the 11:30 p.m. event. As wails grew louder, Patton bowed gallantly to the nursing profession, arranged a second screening for 9 a.m. Sunday.

"Wonderful—a six Kleenex picture — but I thought she should have got Gene Kelly," sighed a cross section of the young preview audience.

FISCAL NEWS VS. FORMER GLAMOUR

Tradesters believe they observe a noticeable change in the type of reporting and news dispatches emanating from Hollywood since the motion picture industry has been experiencing an economic crisis. It's charged that the columnists and historians of the film capital now appear more interested in the financial aspects of the industry than in the glamor and gossip items that formerly predominated in their dispatches.

A good portion of the news now finding its way into newspapers throughout the country often is more appropriate for the business section than for the amusement pages. Reporters and writers who once described the latest Hollywood fashions, and relayed news of casting, parties, marital problems, and the "who's in and what's in the movies" are now devoting considerable space to such subjects as studio overheads, percentages, costs, partnerships, liquidations and diversifications and other news once confined to the trade papers and to the financial pages of the daily newspapers.

One who particularly decries this new trend is Ernie Emerling, Loew's Theatres pub-ad chief. He's put a memorandum in the hands of film editors in various cities.

Harp on Biz Side

Now that Hollywood is facing a tough period in its history, Emerling observes, it seems to have become fashionable to harp on the business activities of the industry, with the stress being on the downbeat side because "to make that sort of news sound newsy the downbeat side offers the best material."

He wonders how much the public is concerned with "the sordid details of property values, production problems, corporate difficulties and the other mundane facts of a movie factory." He contends that the public is more interested in "who is who and what is what in the movies available to them on theatre screens."

Often, Emerling argues, the result is paradoxical reporting. For example, a recent syndicated column called attention to the death of the star system "to prove this is another step on the path to oblivion." Not too long ago, Emerling adds, it was common for Hollywood reporters to decry the star system as shackling the pro-

Tiomkin Scoring 'Land'; Pre-Contract Protects Despite AFM Strike

Dimitri Tiomkin has begun scoring C. V. Whitney's "The Young Land" without interference by the American Federation of Musicians despite the union's general strike. Tiomkin selected musicians from the Los Angeles Philharmonic for the job.

Hoover on Celluloid

Washington, April 8.

Library of Congress' film collection added two pix dealing with life of former President Herbert Hoover past week. Presentation, made by Admiral Lewis Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, was highlight of a two-day conference of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

One of pix was produced by the Herbert Hoover Birthday Foundation. The other, privately produced, was a gift from Mr. & Mrs. A. R. Bruns of Davenport, Iowa.

Gift marks growing trend to document lives of government leaders in film.

'Happiest Men In Town' (Mgrs.) Shown in Ads

Minneapolis, April 8.

Large co-op newspaper ad kicked off the local three-month "happiest men in town" campaign to revive the moviegoing habit and fill empty seats.

The "happiest men" are the managers of the three United Paramount theatres, the RKO Orpheum and Bennie Berger's Gopher and the 3x12 ad showed half tones of their heads on line-drawn bodies.

Reason for their happiness, ad explained, was because of their belief "they'll make YOU happy, too," with their forthcoming pictures.

Pictures named in the ad, which stressed "these will not be shown on tv for years and years—and NEVER so good," included the current "Snow White," and the impending "Teacher's Pet," "Saddle the Wind," "Merry Andrew," "Long Hot Summer," "Another Time, Another Place," "Marjorie Morningstar," "Ten North Frederik" and "Too Much Too Soon."

It's considered significant in local industry circles that of the aforegoing pictures RKO Theatres, which recently demanded the right to bid competitively for all product here, has only "Snow White," now playing, for its two loop houses. Several, however, aren't definitely set anywhere.

Also regarded as more or less significant was the fact that Ted Mann's two downtown theatres, the World and the Academy, with "The Young Lions" underlined at the former and "Around the World in 80 Days" current at the latter, and the Cinerama Century, with "Search for Paradise," were conspicuously missing from the ad.

Cinemiracle Into Chi's Opera House, Leaving 'Culture' Out in Cold

Chicago, April 8.

National Theatre's Cinemiracle, after months of negotiations, has finally landed a kingsize Chicago outlet in the 3,600-seat Opera House, which it has leased for five years excepting the months of October and November when house reverts back to an opera showcase. The contract —and this was a stumbling block in the negotiations —insures Chi's Lyric Opera Co., which has had trouble enough in the past, of a permanent home in the Windy City. "Windjammer," first production in the Cinemiracle process, opens here sometime in June but must hiatus every year during the two autumn months for the Lyric.

Leasing of the edifice may have settled the Cinemiracle problem, but it realizes the fears of balletomanes that Chi will be in sore, if not desperate, need of a culture dome next season. With "My Fair Lady" fixed at the Shubert for a year at least, there doesn't appear to be a house on the Main Stem with seats enough to accommodate visiting opera, dance attractions or other costly cultural spectacles.

If the Windy City is to get such attractions next fall, someone has to pull a rabbit out of a hat. So far, only Allied Arts Corp. prexy, Harry Zelzer, is working at the magic act, as the booking of major long-hair attractions is a substantial part of his livelihood. Since a film attraction has crossed over to a legit house, Zelzer figures the game can work both ways, so he's out to lasso a large-capacity filmery for his shows. Doesn't seem logical that it could be a Loop theatre, however, and since Zelzer would need the house only several weeks, or even several days, at a time it's most likely his theatre would be an outlying one that has shuttered.

Zelzer's spring program, actually, is what's holding up the "Windjammer" opening. The Metropolitan Opera winds up its annual stand at the Opera House on May 25, and the house goes immediately into preparation for Cinemiracle. House manager J. Charles Gilbert expects the installation to be accomplished in short order, and the house should be ready early in June. However, the seating capacity will probably be reduced to 2,400 by the installation of the projection booth and the elimination of the top balcony.

The '58-'59 season here may lose out in cultural events owing to the unavailability of the Opera House, but several movements are now afoot for the construction of a new longhair showcase by the '59-'60 season. The old Auditorium, designed by Louis Sullivan and still believed to be acoustically the best in the country, is now a shambles but could be rehabilitated. Probably it would take a foundation grant to swing it, though, since

Texas Cop Too Quick On Draw Bounced; Shot Man Lighting Matches in Dark

San Antonio, April 8.

The Fire and Police Civil Service Commission upheld the recommendation of Police Chief Bichsel that Patrolman Roscoe Eddings be dropped from the force.

The action followed a lengthy hearing before the commission concerning charges that Eddings displayed and fired his service revolver without due cause while working at an off duty job at the Cameo Theatre, last February 23.

Eddings was held responsible for shooting and wounding Leroy Williams while at the theatre. Williams was lighting matches in the theatre to find a lost object. He declined the offer of a flashlight and allegedly approached Eddings as if to draw a gun on the officer.

The policeman was suspended from the local police force on March 7.

Harry & Albert Warner Settlement

Pay $100,000 Into WB Treasury to End Stockholder Suit Involving Semenenko

Settlement of a minority stockholders' suit brought against Warner Bros. and several of its officers was approved Friday (4) by N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Edgar Nathan. Action, filed last year by Florence Brill and three other shareholders, charged that sale of a block of WB stock by Harry and Albert Warner to Serge Semenenko, v. p. of the First National Bank of Boston, was "improper" and resulted in loss to the corporation.

In confirming a referee's report recommending approval of the settlement, Judge Nathan ruled that the arrangement calling for payment of $100,000 by the defendants into the company treasury is "fair and reasonable." Hearing on a motion to confirm the report was held on March 12 and court reserved decision then in order to grant interested parties time to "look into the matter."

Windjammer
(CINEMIRACLE—COLOR—SONGS)

First in the new Cinemiracle process, "Windjammer" spreads its adventure story on huge canvas for top effects. Looks good for big money.

National Theatres presentation of Louis de Rochemont production. Features Capt. Yngver Kjelstrup, Lasse Kolstad, Harald Tusberg, Sven Erik Libaek, Kaare Terland and officers, men and boys of full-rigged Oslo Windjammer, S.S. Christian Radich. Directed by Louis de Rochemont 3d and Bill Colleran. Screenplay, Capt. Alan Villiers and James L. Shute; camera (Eastmancolor), Joseph Brun, Gayne Rescher; 35m prolog lensed by Finn Bergan, Asmund Revold; music, Morton Gould, with songs by Terry Gilkyson, Richard Dehr, Frank Miller; played by Cinemiracle Symphony under Jack Shaindlin, Arthur Fiedler and members of Boston "Pops" orch; Wilbur de Paris and his New Orleans Jazz Band, and cellist Pablo Casals; editor, Peter Katkevich; sound, Richard J. Pietschmann Jr. Associate producers, Lothar Wolff, Borden Mace, Thomas Orchard. At the Roxy Theatre, N.Y., April 5, '58. Running time, 142 MINS. (plus intermission).

Louis de Rochemont and National Theatres have turned to adventure for "Windjammer," their first film in the new Cinemiracle wide-screen process. They've succeeded magnificently. This is a big, rousing, beautifully photographed picture, fresh and gay with the accent on youth and overwhelming in its pictorial impact on the huge screen.

Here is one of those special attractions which will gain not only via the introduction of Cinemiracle, which certainly is impressive enough, but also because it has the kind of imagination and charm that will appeal to a very wide audience. There's the smell of the sea in this, the voices of young people on a high adventure, the laughter and color-splashed gaiety of the West Indies, the towering confusion of New York and the beauty of snow-covered Norway.

"Windjammer" is a semi-documentary, relating the 18,000-mile voyage of the square-rigger Christian Radich on a training cruise from Oslo, following Columbus' route across the Atlantic, then to New York and back home. There are 14 calls at strange ports and in each the 45 Norwegian teenage sailors aboard find adventure and make friends as they explore and partake in native festivities.

"Windjammer" could have been just another travelog. Instead, partly of course due to Cinemiracle and partly due to the fact that it's set into the framework of a human interest story, it is an exciting, sometimes spectacular and sometimes quite intimate account of a group of boys on the kind of high adventure everyone has dreamed of at one time or the other.

Picture, being shown with an intermission, runs a little long, though the most impressive parts of the show have been put into the lively second part. Photographically and in terms of color effects this is probably the best film of its kind ever made. One stunning shot after the other brings audience applause and the composition on the wide screen (100 ft. x 40 ft. at the Roxy Theatre) is superb. There is a remarkable degree of audience participation in many of the scenes and the depth effect is noticeable.

Occasionally, the cameras linger too long on a given shot and there is some repetition, particularly of the ship under full sail.

Though most of the material falls into the expanded travelog category, the story itself provides sufficient variation. It switches from life aboard the beautiful, white vessel on which the boys are getting their sea legs and training to the various ports-of-call. Storms wash the deck and give way to the hot sun as the ship arrives at Madeira where the St. Sylvester festival is in progress.

No self-respecting process such as this can miss up on the roller-coaster ride, and "Windjammer" is no exception. But the variation on the theme is typical of the whole film. Here the Cinemiracle camera (actually three cameras in one) rides on one of the wooden sleds that slide down the smooth, cobble stone paths from the Madeira hills to the sea. It's enough to bring the stomach to anyone's mouth.

Musically, "Windjammer" has just about everything. Morton Gould wrote the appealing musical score and Terry Gilkyson, Richard Dehr and Frank Miller provided a number of catchy songs, including the delightful "Kari Waits for Me." "The Sea is Green," "Everybody Loves Saturday Night," a couple of calypso numbers, etc. On the more serious side, cellist Pablo Casals performs the Catalonian ballad, "Song of the Birds" in the courtyard of the Governor's Palace in Puerto Rico, and talented young Sven Erik Libaek plays the first movement of the Grieg Piano Concerto with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orch at dockside in Boston harbor. Back on the light side, Wilbur de Paris and his New Orleans Jazz Band are heard.

Some of the most exciting scenes in the film come when the Cinemiracle cameras go underwater. The diving of a submarine is recorded with the camera lashed to the deck of the craft. Then it follows skin-divers as they regain a parctice torpedo. The New York montage, shot by "Weeggee," is outstanding and unique.

Film opens with a standard 35m prolog. Not until the windjammer is at sea and encounters its first rough weather do the curtains part and the full screen takes the pounding impact of the angry waves. Transition to the wide screen naturally is breathtaking, but could be smoother. Cinemiracle, unlike Cinerama, is projected out of a single booth, with three projectors electronically synchronized and the image corrected via mirrors and a special printing process to give a continuous picture unmarred by "panels."

At the screening caught by this reviewer, the divisionary "stripes" were very much in evidence in some scenes and virtually absent in others. Also, the sections sometimes fitted perfectly and at others they "jumped." This was not serious enough to mar enjoyment of the show, but should be corrected. The seven-channel stereophonic sound setup is used intelligently.

Louis de Rochemont III and Bill Colleran have directors' credit on "Windjammer." They've done a highly skilled job, because the picture is full of human little touches (such as the recurring bit about the mascot dog) and it has genuine warmth in its treatment of the boys. Nothing ever stands still for very long, and—with the exception of the shots obviously lined up to emphasize the huge arc of the screen—few scenes appear "posed," such as the shots of the windjammer against units of the U.S. Navy.

Joseph Brun and Gayne Rescher handled the Cinemiracle cameras, and they deserve an Oscar for their work. Considering the massiveness of the camera unit, they've accomplished wonders and, even after Cinerama, Todd-AO and CinemaScope, their first Cinemiracle picture is distinctively different. The Eastman color is perfect and it should be noted that some of the scenes covered very cramped quarters, indicating that the process is fully applicable to a story-type film.

Lasse Kolstad, a w.k. Norwegian actor, is one of the few professionals in the crew and he performs nicely. Other lead parts are taken by cadets Harald Tusberg, Sven Erik Libaek and Kaare Terland. Captain Yngvar Kjelstrup, a veteran sailing master, appears throughout with great dignity.

Capt. Alan Villiers and James L. Shute wrote the book, which literally couldn't be improved on. Script has many genuinely funny touches. Much of the film is narrated by a single voice of one of the voyagers, though the boys speak English. Quite a few pretty girls show up at the various ports of call and brighten the boys' leave.

"Windjammer" doesn't have "shock" values. No wild animals attack unsuspecting travelers through the jungle. It does look and sound real though, its people are appealing and its story is told well and with compassion for those who love the sea and to sail on it. Since it also looks like a million dollars and manages to come across as the biggest ever, it should clean up at the boxoffice everywhere.

St. Louis Blues
(SONGS—V'VISION)

Disappointing biopic of W. C. Handy. Fair b.o. prospects.

Hollywood, April 4.

Paramount release of a Robert Smith production. Stars Nat "King" Cole, Eartha Kitt, Pearl Bailey, Cab Calloway, Ella Fitzgerald, Mahalia Jackson; features Ruby Dee, Juano Hernandez. Directed by Allen Reisner. Screenplay, Robert Smith and Ted Sherdeman; based on the life of W. C. Handy; camera, Haskell Boggs; music arranged and conducted by Nelson Riddle, based on themes and songs by W. C. Handy; editor, Eda Warren. Previewed at the studio, March 31, '58. Running time, 92 MINS.

Will Handy	Nat 'King' Cole
Gogo	Eartha Kitt
Blade	Cab Calloway
Singer	Ella Fitzgerald
Bessie May	Mahalia Jackson
Elizabeth	Ruby Dee
Charles Handy	Juano Hernandez
Musicians	Teddy Buckner, Barney Bigard, George 'Red' Callender, Lee Young, George Washington
Will Handy as a boy	Billy Preston
Aunt Hagar	Pearl Bailey

Paramount's "St. Louis Blues" purports to tell the story, or a part of it, of the life and music of the just deceased W. C. Handy. Unfortunately, in this Robert Smith production directed by Allen Reisner, the screenplay by Smith and Ted Sherdeman, is unconvincing. Worst of all—the music is seldom seen or heard to advantage.

Only occasionally does one of the principals, Nat "King" Cole, Eartha Kitt, Pearl Bailey, Ella Fitzgerald or Mahalia Jackson, cut loose and the pure music soars across. But in the end the reaction is to wonder what about the man and why was his music so great. "St. Louis Blues" may start fairly strong on the names in the cast and the name of its central character, but it is doubtful that it will hold up.

According to this story, Handy (played by Nat Cole) wanted to write a new kind of music but was deterred by his stern clergyman father (Juano Hernandez). Handy is torn between what his father terms "The devil's music," i.e., popular, and "the Lord's music," sacred music.

Handy is also torn between Eartha Kitt, a New Orleans girl, who recognizes his talent and encourages him. He is also attracted to Ruby Dee, a sweet homebody who just wants him to be happy. Handy is struck with psychosomatic blindness, recovers, takes a combo on the road to play his own music and is rewarded in the end with a concert at Aeolian Hall, New York. The recognition of Handy's music by the longhairs and socially elite brings his father around to the value of his son's compositions.

The cast is all Negro, except for very minor roles. A real effort has been made to avoid any possible charge of "Uncle Tom" in the characters. This libel seems to have been avoided. But for this reason or others, the result is such a genteel portrayal of life in Memphis in the early years of this century that you might wonder why the Negroes ever sang the blues.

A clumsy effort is made to show Handy getting inspiration from watching Negro laborers load a wagon. Handy is shown giving a rhythm beat to a spiritual. The blues certainly came in part out of the spirituals that expressed the deep and justified melancholy of the Negro, they came from laborers' folk songs, but they also came from the honky-tonks, the bordellos and the bistros, and this is barely indicated.

Beale Street was more, as Will Handy's song clearly says, than just a thoroughfare. It was a way of life but this is not shown in "St. Louis Blues." Why did Handy write "Careless Love," "Yellow Dog Blues," "Beale Street Blues," "St. Louis Blues," "Got No Mo' Home Dan A Dog" and (in a new arrangement) "Steal Away to Jesus"? You can find the answer in those titles more than in the picture "St. Louis Blues."

Cole does a sympathetic job as Handy although he is still at his best when he is allowed to caress vocally the master's inimitable melodies. Miss Kitt gets spice into her portrayal and songs, and Pearl Bailey, although neglected as to musical numbers, contributes some saving humor. Cab Calloway, Rudy Dee and the fine Juano Hernandez make some contribution, although not completely effective, while Ella Fitzgerald and Mahalia Jackson do beautifully when they simply cut loose and sing. Teddy Buckner, Barney Bigard, George "Red" Callender, Lee Young and George Washington, do just fine as musicians, which they are, and young Bill Preston is engaging as the boy Handy.

Haskell Boggs' camera work is able and other credits, such as art direction by Hal Pereira and Roland Anderson, set decoration by Sam Comer and Robert Benton, editing by Eda Warren and sound by Gene Merritt and Charles Grenzbach, are all good. Nelson Riddle has done an effective job of arranging and conducting Handy's music.

What is lacking throughout "St. Louis Blues" is not the accurate story of W. C. Handy or the correct presentation of his music. What is really lacking is the spirit of W. C. Handy and his people. Powe.

'COMMANDMENTS' ON HIGH
See $280,000 Week's Gross at 9 Gotham Runs

Paramount's limitted subsequent-run engagement of "The 10 Commandments" in nine theatres in the N.Y. metropolitan area chalked up a gross of $160,000 for the Easter weekend from Friday (4) to Sunday (6). Theatres showing the Cecil B. DeMille blockbuster introduced a semi-hard-ticket policy—selling tickets in advance for specific shows up to the capacity of the house but without reserving seats.

As a result, the all-day downpour on Easter Sunday did not hurt the boxoffice. As a matter of fact, standing room was permitted at some theatres and customers were turned away. A Loew's spokesman described the business at the five Loew houses at "absolutely sensational." On the basis of the weekend turnout, Par is predicting a $280,000 gross for the full Easter week.

The Loew houses—Paradise, Valencia, 72d St., 83d St. and White Plains—racked up a gross of $81,400 for the three days. Admission tab was a $1.50 top for adults evenings and all-day Sunday, 90c mornings, and $1.30 afternoons. Three shows were offered Friday and Saturday and two on Sunday. Picture was offered at 9:30 a.m., 2:30 p.m. and 8 p.m.

The Brooklyn Paramount, where an admission top of $2 was in force, is said to have grossed $35,000 for the three days. The picture was also displayed at the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City; Calderone, Hempstead, L. I., and Paramount, Stapleton, Staten Island.

Handle With Care

Some merit but small b.o. potential.

Metro release of Morton Fine production. Stars Dean Jones, Thomas Mitchell, Joan O'Brien, Walter Abel and John Smith. Directed by David Friedkin. Screenplay, Fine and Friedkin from a teleplay by Samuel and Edith Grafton. Camera, Harold J. Marzorati; editor, Ben Lewis; music, Alexander Courage. Previewed in N.Y., March 27, '58. Running time, 82 MINS.

This is probably the type of picture that teenagers "should" see, but it's doubtful that the David Friedkin-Morton Fine entry will have youngsters storming theatres. There's no rock 'n' roll, teenage monsters or Frankensteins, or any concern with juvenile delinquency. As a consequence, the film's an innocuous programmer.

By all standards, "Handle With Care" is a "little" picture that aims to teach a lesson in citizenship and, as a result, will undoubtedly be characterized as a message picture. Objective of the Friedkin and Fine screenplay, based on a teleplay by Samuel and Edith Grafton, is to make the point that justice should not be blind and that it must be tempered with compassion and understanding.

After the spate of films dealing with the unsavory aspects of teenage life, it's refreshing to come across a film that shows a group of youngsters more interested in education and the world around them than in the latest rock 'n' roll record. Unfortunately, small pictures stressing do-goodism are not often boxoffice in the present motion picture market.

"Handle With Care" has numerous faults. It is pretentious : unbelievable in parts, but as a whole it deserves an "A" for effort, which is more than can be said for the quickie exploitation pix made especially for the teenage trade.

"Handle With Care" deals with a group of law students who stage a mock trial as a classroom exercise. With the class sitting as a grand jury and certain students selected as prosecutors, it's decided to make an investigation of the local government rather than choosing a make-believe situation. During the probing, Dean Jones, the brightest student and the designated district attorney, discovers that the mayor, played by Thomas Mitchell, had deposited less money than he had collected during his tenure as city tax collector.

Since the mayor is well-loved and respected by his constituents, Jones meets considerable opposition when he determines to push his investigation. He is not deterred, however, despite warnings and ostracism. Eventually he learns that the mayor had indeed deposited less money, but had given out phoney tax receipts in order to save the homes of the townspeople caught in a depression and a severe drought. All the money was later repaid and deposited in the city's account.

All the trouble, of course, could have been prevented if Jones had been given the true facts earlier, but then there would have not been a story or a picture. Mitchell, as the mayor, and Walter Abel, as the law professor, turn in the pro performances for which they have long been noted. Except for Joan O'Brien, who plays a fellow student and Jones' romantic vis-a-vis, the young thesps involved in the proceedings are too glib and knowing. Jones, who has the potential of developing into a teenage idol, gives a cliche imitation of a tough d.a. Miss O'Brien is just right as the girl torn between her loyalty to her boy friend and her town.

Although there is an artificial slickness to Fine's production and Friedkin's direction, the young film-making team shows promise. Holl.

Live Fast, Die Young

Average teenage crime meller. For exploitation double-bills.

Hollywood, April 4.

Universal release of a Harry Rybnick-Richard Kay production. Stars Mary Murphy, Norma Eberhardt, Sheridan Comerate, Michael Connors; features Peggy Maley, Jay Jostyn, Troy Donahue, Carol Varga. Directed by Paul Henreid. Screenplay, Allen Rivkin, Ib Melchior; based on a story by Melchior and Edwin B. Watson; camera, Philip Lathrop; music, Joseph Gershenson; editor, Edward Curtiss. Previewed at the studio, April 1, '58. Running time, 82 MINS.

Kim	Mary Murphy
Jill	Norma Eberhardt
Jerry	Sheridan Comerate
Rick	Michael Connors
Sue	Peggy Maley
Knox	Jay Jostyn
Artie	Troy Donahue
Violet	Carol Varga
Judy Tobin	Joan Marshall
Pop	Gordon Jones
Mona	Dawn Richard
Mary	Jamie O'Hara

The title of "Live Fast, Die Young" is not literal. The teenaged characters involved make an attempt at fast living but nobody dies, young or otherwise. The Universal release, directed by Paul Henreid, was produced by Harry Rybnick and Richard Kay with Edward B. Barison (a B. R. K. production) as associate producer. It doesn't have much of a story and the names are not important but Henreid's direction manages to inject sporadic interest in the characters and their motives. "Live Fast, Die Young" can be sold as an exploitation item or will suffice as a programmer.

The screenplay by Allen Rivkin and Ib Melchior, from a story by Melchior and Edwin B. Watson, tells of two sisters, Mary Murphy and Norma Eberhardt, the good and the bad. Bad sister Eberhardt wants all the things that money can buy, but lacking the money with which to buy, she goes out to make it as a B-girl or in any other way that seems profitable. She winds up in possession of a large convertible and several thousand dollars in cash as well as a member of a gang headed by Peggy Maley. Just as the gang is about to bring off the robbery of $150,000 in diamonds, good sister Murphy shows up, blows the deal and gets everyone involved sent to prison.

It is hoped that teenaged audiences will see some moral in this other than that you don't take your older sister in on your heist jobs because she is likely to be a squealer. The picture has the merit of being a crime story without gunplay, physical violence or other sadism other than that implied in such a narrative.

Miss Eberhardt and Miss Murphy do well by their roles and others who are notable include Sheridan Comerate, Miss Maley, Down Richards and Jamie O'Hara (latter a female).

Technical credits are adequate. Powe.

Rooney
(BRITISH)

Warmhearted, amiable little Irish comedy about a garbage man and his romantic problems; certain b.o. draw in all family houses.

London, April 1.

Rank (George H. Brown) production and release. Stars John Gregson, Murial Pavlow, Barry Fitzgerald. Directed by George Pollock. Screenplay, Patrick Kirwan from novel by Catherine Cookson; camera, Christopher Challis; editor, Peter Bezencenet; music, Philip Green. At Odeon, Leicester Square, London, March 24, '58. Micky Hart	Eddie Byrne
Paddy Ryan	Philip O'Flynn
Mrs. Manning French	Irene Browne
Sheila O'Flynn	Joan Phillips
Kathleen O'Flynn	Maureen Toal

Without any blarney, this happy-go-lucky little Irish comedy is one of the most pleasing British candidates for the entertainment stakes yet entered this season. It will rate no Oscars, but its down-to-earth appeal cannot fail to please audiences in every family house in Britain and the U.S. Having passed, with honors, the Dublin boxoffice test, "Rooney" can face the Irish in N. Y. with equal confidence.

This cheerful jest has John Gregson as a stalwart bachelor garbage man who enjoys his daily work and spends his weekends as star of the local hurley team, hurley being an Irish sport which is a mixture of hockey, lacrosse and all-round wrestling. It appears to be the nearest approach to legalized mayhem this side of Yank football. Gregson, with no wish to wed, finds himself constantly on the move to escape the amorous attentions of widowed landladies who wish to mother him with a view to a more permanent arrangement.

Eventually, he lands up as lodger with a shrewish, snobbish widow, who despises him for his trade but

Distrib-Exhib 'Armistice' Dented

[As Allied Hits 20th's Sales to Subsequents]

The lack of controversy and the cooperative feeling that has characterized exhibitor-distributor relations in recent months suffered a severe setback this week as result of the attack by Allied States Assn. on 20th-Fox marketing methods on "Peyton Place" and "Farewell to Arms" for subsequent-run situations.

Both segments of the industry had temporarily buried the hatchet as they combined to meet the problems of the declining boxoffice. Both branches, observing the serious downbeat in motion picture attendance, had called a halt to bitter denunciations and attempted to pool their efforts in a gigantic business building campaign to bring customers back to the boxoffice.

Allied, in particular, had made a major concession when it soft-pedalled protests of distributor trade practices and made an effort to join in an all-industry "bring 'em back to the boxoffice" drive. However, there are indications that Allied's full cooperation on business building activities is in serious jeopardy as a result of the fight that has suddenly ignited between the exhibitor organization and 20th, heretofore regarded by Allied as one of the more cooperative companies with which to do business. 20th's policies have frequently been praised at Allied conventions and 20th's prexy Spyros Skouras has often been cited for his enlightened industry leadership.

As a development of the controversy with 20th, Allied has bluntly stated that "if there is to be an end to complaints and criticism, there must also be a moratorium on the gouging and shoving around of exhibitors." Exhibitors, it is stressed, cannot be made to remain silent "when their position is every day being made more desperate by the encroachments of the distributors." It's charged that film prices are being increased and systems of runs, clearances and availabilities are being destroyed.

Allied points out that the success of any promotional campaign depends on the goodwill and cooperation of all industry branches, and during such a campaign there should be "an end to criticism and squabbling within the industry." The exhibitor organization stresses, however, that implicit in this sentiment "is the thought that while the exhibitors are preoccupied with constructive endeavors no film company should take advantage of the situation to introduce new and revolutionary marketing methods designed to increase film rentals and destroy time-honored distribution methods . . ."

Initial 10 Playdates Carry Clue To 'Windjammer' Release Pattern

First ten engagaments of the first Cinemiracle film, "Windjammer," will be used to establish whether it's better to show the picture in big houses or whether it shows up to better advantage in smaller situations with an overwhelmingly big screen.

Picture, produced by Louis de Rochemont for National Theatres opened in Los Angeles yesterday (Tues.) at Grauman's Chinese which underwent a $500,000 renovation and reconstruction job to accommodate the process. It opens today (Wed.) at the Roxy, N.Y. The next American opening will be in Chicago.

Abroad, "Windjammer" had its world preem in Oslo, Norway, Monday (7) and it opens in London May 10.

Cinemiracle gives essentially the same effects as Cinerama, but is projected from three interlocked projectors from a single booth. Entire control operation, including the seven-channel sound, is controlled from the booth. Mirrors and a special printing process serve to greatly subdue the visibility of the "match lines" between the three projection "panels."

Question has arisen whether this type of process is more effective in a big house, like the Roxy, or a small one, where the size of the huge image is the more overwhelming in its impact. Reactions from the first ten engagements will determine the future course.

Like the Chinese on the Coast, the Roxy also has undergone alterations. Its seating capacity has been cut from 5,500 to 2,400 and the mezzanine has been revamped into a "golden circle" of reserved seats. Every attempt will be made to give the showcase a "legit" touch via individual service and conveniences. For instance, in the reserved seat section there will be hostesses rather than ushers. Section will be rented to private parties and if people decide to bring drinks, the house will provide the ice, etc. Even personnel uniforms will be updated to conform with the "new look."

WARREN IRWIN QUOTED: EXHIBITION IS DANDY

Columbia, S. C., April 8.

Recent newspaper article here reports show business as a booming little industry in Columbia.

By-liner quotes Warren Irvin, district manager for Palmetto theater company, major chain in city, as saying his theaters are doing top business here.

While it did not quote figures, it indicated a steady upward film trend all along the line. Owner-manager Jack D. Fuller of the other houses also noted good biz.

It is tangibly reflected, too, in refurbishing going on all along the line. Both Palmetto and Carolina theaters have been repainted and lobbies refurnished. The nabe Five Points has a new and larger concession stand in lobby. The Ritz last year underwent major alterations prior to showing "Around the World."

ALLIED YELPS VS. 20TH TERMS ON 'PEYTON' AND 'FAREWELL TO ARMS'

A controversy has broken out between Allied States Assn. and 20th-Fox over the film company's marketing technique for subsequent runs of "Peyton Place" and "Farewell to Arms." The exhibitor organization has charged 20th with following Paramount's "10 Commandments" policy in the selling of the two films in question.

There were considerable protests against Par's method, but many theatremen held their peace believing that it would only apply to "10 C's' and would not be attempted for lesser pictures. According to Allied the fact that 20th circulated its proposal for "Farewell to Arms" after Horace Adams, president of Allied, lodged a protest against "Peyton Place" indicated that 20th "intends to follow this pattern on all its pictures above run-of-mill, even if they fall far short of 'The Ten Commandments'."

Basis of the beef made by Adams in a letter to 20th sales chief Alex Harrison is the film company's notification to exhibitors in the Cleveland area that it proposes "to select from the offers received a minimum number of proposals which, in our opinion, will produce for us the greatest amount of film rental." Bids to 20th, it was stressed, must not be for less than 14 days of playing time (11 days for "Farewell") and all offers must contain the following information: name of theatre, date at which engagement will commence, minimum number of weeks guaranteed, amount of film rental guaranteed, percentage of gross receipts for each week, control figures for holdover playing time beyond guaranteed minimum, total amount of money theatre will spend for advertising. An order to facilitate the evaluation of the offer, 20th also asked the exhibs to indicate the number of times the pictures would be exhibited and the scale of admission prices they intend to charge.

At First Ignored

According to Allied, Adams' initial protest brought no reply from 20th. Following the beef, it's said the company circulated exhibitors with a similar proposal on "Farewell to Arms." After another follow-up letter, Adams received an explanation from 20th sales exec C. Glenn Norris which the Allied topper characterized as "most disappointing" and "completely unsatisfactory." Adams indicated that Allied, as a result of 20th's position, would take "whatever steps" that are conducive to discontinue such marketing methods.

The 20th plan, it's charged, is illegal and is designed to increase film rentals and destroy time-honored distribution methods. The film company is charged with putting up its pictures for "grabs," regardless of pre-existing runs, clearances and availabilities. 20th's proposal "that no other theatre within a three-mile radius will be licensed on the same availability," sets up a system of uniform clearance contrary to law, according to Adams. The company's demand that the admission scale be indicated is also cited as an illegal proposal.

Norris' reply to Adams stated that the company was not regulating theatre policy, advertising expenditure, or admission prices, but that exhibitors are merely asked to furnish this information, "in order to facilitate our evaluation of your offer."

Negroes Accommodated

Wichita Falls, Tex., April 8.

Bill Roten, manager of the State Theatre, set aside the last two nights of the run of "The Ten Commandments" (Par) for Negroes.

Since the Carver Theatre shuttered recently, the Negroes had no opportunity to see it otherwise. The pic was shown here for a two-week stand.

Direct Charge for TV Unthinkable; Senator's Spare-the-Soap Stand

Lansing, Mich., April 8.

Michigan's state Senate unanimously approved a resolution urging Congress to oppose any plan that would deprive American tv owners of the right to tune in on "free" advertising-sponsored programs. Resolution now goes to the House for action.

Senator Harold M. Ryan, Detroit Democrat who introduced the resolution said: "There are 40,000,000 tv sets now in use in this country and the American public has spent over $15,000,000,000 to buy these sets without expecting to pay more money for their programs. Allowing a charge for television is contrary to public interest and the Federal Communications Commission should be prevented by law from considering these applications."

Ryan will testify against feevee before Congressional committees on invitation of Senator Warren G. Magnuson (D., Wash). "My resolution is particularly important at this time," Ryan declared, "because Washington is waiting to see what action Congress will take on this issue before considering any pay tv applications.

'HULOT'S HOLIDAY' SUITS BOTH NIXED IN L.A.

Los Angeles, April 8.

Two opposing suits over distribution of feature films have been dismissed by Federal Judge Harry Westover.

First involved G. B. D. International Distributing Co., which filed against Cinema Distributors for an accounting and damages of $12,500, on claim that defendant did not render proper figures on gross receipts from its distribution of "Mr. Hulot's Holiday."

Latter in turn had sued G. B. D. for $51,170, charging latter was to give it distribution of three other films.

DUCK 50% TERMS FOR 'FAREWELL TO ARMS'

Minneapolis, April 8.

Although there has been much lamenting among them anent the shortage of suitable product that's allegedly hindering their operation, eight of the 10 neighborhood subsequent-run theatres here in the earliest 28-day clearance slot passed up "Farewell to Arms" on its current break. They wouldn't go for 20th's 50% deal.

As a result, two Volk brothers' houses, the Terrace and Riverview, among the uptown's finest, have the picture exclusively for this availability. Taking advantage of the reduced day and dating for a topnotch release they've upped the admission from 85c to $1.25, the same raised price that was charged downtown, and are doing boff business.

Lineup of the theatres that forewent "Farewell" includes "Wee Geordie" (although it previously played three of the four uptown art houses), "Lady Takes a Flyer," "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers" (reissue) and "Darby's Rangers."

Four are playing "Seven Brides" day and date; two, "Lady Takes a Flyer." Extra large newspaper ads are being used for "Geordie."

Todd Company Cancels 'World' Nabe Dates In Pittsburgh; See Bidding

Pittsburgh, April 8.

Easter Week bookings of "Around the World in 80 Days" at three nabes were canceled at last minute when Mike Todd organization sales department, increasingly independent of United Artists, decided to alter policy for peddling the blockbuster to subsequent runs. Picture had been inked into one Harris Amusement Company house, the Denis, and two Stanley circuit properties, the Memorial in McKeesport and the Schenley in Oakland.

No definite explanation was given for the sudden withdrawal, but the guess of theatremen locally is that "80 Days" is going to get the competitive bidding business. Film closed a nine-month road-show engagement at Nixon early in January and has been seen nowhere in this territory since then.

First district showing for "Around the World" will be at State in Uniontown, a Manos chain property, where it opens on Thursday (10).

Hollywood's 31 Unions State Views; Antitrust Decision Wretchedly 'Timed'

Hollywood, April 8.

An intensive study into the decline in economics of the film industry since windup of World War II has been completed by Hollywood AFL Film Council, composed of 31 unions and guilds repping over 24,000 workers. Results are incorporated in a 78-page survey titled "Hollywood at the Crossroads—an Economic Study of the Motion Picture Industry," prepped by Dr. Irving Bernstein, UCLA Institute of Industrial Relations staffer whom Council engaged to conduct an indie investigation into the nature, extent and causes of the problems facing industry today.

Council, in sending report to 35 industry leaders over weekend, came up with a four-point program for industry to adopt in forming a united front to meet its problems:

(1.) A demand for an American counter-measure which would operate like the British Eady Plan to encourage production in America of American interest films. To offset so-called runaway production).

(2.) A demand for full governmental assistance in the field of foreign exchange and the negotiation of reasonable regulations on earnings' remittances.

(3.) Continuance of the fight for general modification of the structures which operate to discourage domestic film production.

(4.) Exploration of the possibility of legislative or judicial correction of industry problems arising out of the Paramount decree.

Report heavily accents this decree, handed down by U. S. Supreme Court in May, 1948, under which Paramount, together with Loew's, RKO, 20th-Fox and Warners, were ordered to dispose of their theatres, and practice by all majors of block-booking forbidden.

"Its timing could not have been worse for the economics of motion pictures," it stresses, adding that many indie exhibs whose pressure brought the suit originally against Paramount now "deplore their bad judgment."

Structural deterioration of the industry is strongly pointed up as brought on by decline of the market. Report lists the rise of the indie producer, breakdown of the term contract, "malfunctioning" of star system in recent years, policy of diversification adopted by many film companies.

Bernstein points to two "fundamental reasons" for the dropoff of theatre audiences: television and the change in the living habits of the American people. Latter consists of such items as home ownership, suburbanization of metropolitan areas, traffic difficulties, large families, family-centered leisure time activities and do-it-yourself movement.

In a preface to his survey, Bernstein notes that the economic decline of the industry has been accompanied by a marked improvement in its product. "More movies of high quality are being presently produced than at any time in the previous history of the industry," he states.

In looking into the future, Bernstein lists the impact of tv and most particularly the impact of toll-tv as the great imponderable. Pay-tv, he comments, constitutes the great economic question . . ." "its roseate paper prospects lead many in Hollywood to regard toll-tv as a panacea that will cure all the industry ills."

But, he adds, no one knows how many families would be willing to pay their dollar for a new picture on home screens to make feevee pay off.

AFM SITUATION HITS TASHLIN'S 20TH'S PIC

Hollywood, April 8.

Current musicians' strike against the majors has found reverberation at 20th-Fox, where Frank Tashlin, set to produce and direct "Say One for Me," secured his release following studio's postponement of musical for duration.

Tashlin, still with 13 weeks remaining of his 20-week deal, immediately moved over to the Jerry Lewis unit at Paramount to start scripting "Geisha Boy." He reported yesterday if strike is ended by time he finishes Lewis starrer he'll return to 20th to complete his original assignment.

N.Y. FIRST-RUNS 'BEST IN YEARS'

Despite the all-day rain Easter Sunday, which hurt some first-runs, and intermittent rainfall part of Monday (7), the current Easter week shapes as one of the strongest for Broadway film business in recent years. "Young Lions," which teed off the new, stronger pix policy at the Paramount, promises to land a giant $110,000 on opening session. New policy of supplying parking facilities was a plus factor and the management foresaw the demand for such accommodations by having available an additional parking spot.

"Long, Hot Summer" likewise is proving terrific, with $45,000 in prospect for the first week at the Mayfair and comparatively bigger biz looming at the Fine Arts, where day-dating. At the latter house, the pic was an alltime high in the first three days at slightly over $10,000.

"Run Silent, Run Deep" looks to hold with a wow $31,000 in second stanza at the Victoria. "Teacher's Pet" shapes big $33,000 or close in third week at Capitol. Killed by Talking Pictures in '28, Danes Dream of Studio Revival

Copenhagen, March 25.

The Danish film-makers, who had to say farewell to worldwide distribution when the talking pix came in, again are eyeing the foreign market, with the hope of placing some of their product outside the Scandinavian territory. The 51-year-old Nordisk Films Kompagni, whose trade mark once was seen in cinemas all over the world, sold its product to all countries in Europe and also to the U.S. in the past. The Danish actress Asta Nielsen, was widely known at that time.

Back in the '20's, the Palladium, under Lau Lauritzen and Svend Nielsen, had most of Europe as its public for yearly farces. But language barriers cut the market for Danish talking films down to Denmark itself with 4,000,000 inhabitants and sometimes also Norway and Sweden.

But during the last few years several films from here have been placed in foreign countries. And this year will see some pictures especially made with an eye on the market outside Denmark.

Nordisk Films Kompagni is the oldest company in Denmark. It has been producing pictures at the studios in Copenhagen suburb of Valby. He made the Oscar-nominated, "Quivitoq" on Greenland in color. He will probably make another picture from this territory this year, working with an English company. English actor, Bill Travers, has been here for conferring with Balling about the forthcoming production. Also the romantic wind-blown Faroe Islands in the Atlantic will be used as background for a Nordisk Film production.

The old Nordisk Films Kompagni has a little brother, Nordisk Film Junior, headed by 35-year-old Ove Sevel, who has written and directed many documentaries, and also made Danish versions of Walt Disney's pictures. This young firm is now making its first full-length production, "Andre Folks Boern" (Other People's Kids) about children in a summer camp.

Asa Film in Lyngby has two apparent hits each year, one a picture about love and intrigue among farmers, and the other is the yearly film after the comic strip, "Father of Four." There have been five pix in this series, the last two in color, and they have a ready-made public in Denmark and Norway. Just now Asa, under the direction of Lau Lauritzen and Alice O'Fredricks is making "The Richest Girl in the World," built over an old British stage comedy.

An old film from Asa, "En Soemand Gaar i Land," (A Sailor Goes Ashore), which was a success some years ago, is now being made in a German verion at the Palladium studios with Preben Philipisen as producer.

Palladium is making a comedy from Mogens Linck's satirical play, "Det lille hotel," (The Small Hotel). This firm has had several local hits during the last couple of years with light comedies. But two of its products in quite another genre has won world-wide acclaim in high brow circles, namely the pictures with a religious background, made by the most famous of all Danish directors, Carl Th. Dreyer, who now also is the manager of Dagmar Bio in the heart of Copenhagen, an elegant cinema, which just now has a big success with "East of Eden," now playing in its fifth month. Mr. Dreyer made some years ago "Vredens Dag," (Day of Wrath) and two years ago "Ordet" (The Word) after the late dramatist Kaj Munk's drama about religious conflicts in a village. Those two pictures have been shown in New York and in other American cities in art cinemas and have confirmed, that Mr. Dreyer after 40 years of film making still is one of the most original and interesting directors in Europe.

Fare About Sailors On African Gold Coast

Saga under film veteran John Olsen is making broad comedies and outright farces with among others the two popular comics Dirch Passer and Ove Sprogoe as stars. Directors Paul Bang and Annelise Reenberg have just been on a tour to The Gold Coast in Africa to select backgrounds for this summer's big film "The Sweethearts of First Mate Karlsen" after an old, often filmed seaman's farce from Sweden. The leads will be played by Poul Reichhardt and Fritz Helmuth—and the whole company is going to Africa for filming local scenes in color.

Just now Saga has a hit with the sophisticated comedy "The Wedding of Marianne," starring Henning Moritzen and Brigitte Bruhn, and directed by Peer Guldbrandsen—after a story by president John Olsen himself, who writes most of his firm's films and has shown a very sure hand in delivering the stuff, which the broadest Danish public likes.

An ordinary Danish film seldom costs over $70,000 to produce. But if the pic, as most often is the case, does not reach a market outside Denmark, it has to be a folk comedy with sweet romance and broad humor to be sure of a reasonable profit. Therefore many of the Danish films are of this type. One of the biggest money-makers from the last 15 years was a family drama, "Jeg vil ha'et barn" (I Want To Have a Child), from Asa. This picture made money, not only in Europe, but also in the U.S.—Asa last year made "Natlogis betalt" (Night Lodgings Paid For) about the so-called American Girls, who hang out in bars, that are frequented by G.I.'s from Germany on leave in Copenhagen. This picture with part-English dialogue and starring the British-Canadian actor Lee Patterson, may have a chance in foreign countries.

Berlin, April 1.

Run of this year's Eighth Berlin Cultural Festival has been skedded for Sept. 21-Oct. 7. As to the festival organizers, pre-publicity is going to start soon with about 300,000 copies of pamphlets in German, English and French language being distributed among travel bureaus all over the world. In addition to these, the program will feature several guest appearances from West German and foreign ensembles.

The Hamburg State Opera will show up with Berg's "Lulu." Antonio and his Spanish Ballet group will give several performances. Guest stage ensembles include Schauspielhaus Zurich (Switzerland), Staedtische (Municipal) Buehnen (Stages) Frankfurt and the Landestheater Darmstadt. Frame events include a chamber concert with new Japanese music, Ernest Krenek with own compositions and a French art exhibit presented by the Buehrle Gallery, Zurich.

On the theatre side, the German preem of Wolfe-Frings' "Look Homeward, Angel"; the new preem of Brecht-Weill's "Three Penny Opera" and the world preem of Schuebel's "Cuirassier Sebastian and His Son" command particular attention.

Int'l Edinburgh Fest Runs in Red

Edinburgh, April 1.

The International Edinburgh Festival is running at a serious loss, figures just released revealing this. Last year the fest showed a net deficit of $66,600, an increase of $18,930 over the previous year. Major portion of this loss stems from a deficit of $49,254 on Jonathan Griffin's play, "The Hidden King," given its world preem under Stephen Mitchell's banner in the Assembly Hall. This was the subject of heated controversy throughout the festival. Expenditure on this production was $78,789 and revenue was only $29,535. Sale of tickets, major item of revenue, realized only $27,849.

In its annual report, the Fest council discloses that only 18,148 people attended "King" during its threeweek run or 53% of capacity.

A report on the Festival Society's working capital fund shows a net decrease of nearly $138,000 over the past four years. At the end of the financial year 1952-53, the fund amounted to $225,000, and there were hopes of building it up to $300,000. But at the end of 1957 there was a balance of only $87,000.

This decline was blamed in the report on "substantially increased costs in practically all activities. A growing world interest in the festival necessitated increased printing, administrative costs had to be enlarged to cope efficiently with demands, higher fees had to be paid to secure the cream of the world's artistic talent, and in the natural growth of the festival, and major action had to be taken to provide adequate accommodations for festival administration, both in Edinburgh and London."

The 1957 festival also reported that the opera cost $114,984, an increase of more than $9,000 over the previous year. There were losses of $18,144 and $16,542 respectively on the ballet and the drama at the Lyceum Theatre.

A native play, "The Flouers o' Edinburgh," staged by the Gateway Theatre of Edinburgh in its own auditorium, had 100% attendance. The same applied to the musical one-woman entertainment provided by Anna Russell in a city hall.

Callas Conquers Cautious Critics

Performs Twice in Lisbon for $5,000, Tax-Free, Expense-Free, in U. S. Currency

By LUIGI GARIO

Lisbon, April 8.

Maria Meneghini Callas came, sang and won and the only "disappointment" was that she didn't make any scene or cause any incident, as was hoped by the local sensation-seekers who bought seats at blackmarket prices and filled the S. Carlos Opera House to more than normal capacity with seven people in boxes where four would fit uncomfortably.

Callas again changed her schedule and gave a concert in Madrid before flying to Lisbon where she arrived in time for a general rehearsal from which critics and some selected "aficionados" who usually are admitted were excluded to their vast chagrin. Also the chorus and the corps de ballet who usually, and especially in such occasions, linger backstage to follow what is happening onstage were requested to stay away when not needed. Callas said it made her nervous to notice a lot of peering faces in the wings. These were the only "incidents" reported.

Callas sang "Traviata" in grand manner, but the day after the critics while applauding her general rendering of the role pointed out as many small faults as they could find. Callas responded beautifully to the challenge and the following Sunday matinee she sang with such perfection that all the reservations of her critics were swept away and, on leaving Lisbon, she got a far better press than she had when she arrived.

Before she was depicted as a "monstro sagrado" (a sacred monster), after they praised the fact that, contrary to what was expected, she distributed her flowers amongst her colleagues, kissed children, complimented the chorus and orchestra, gave away autographed photos in abundance, spoke amiably on the radio and for newsreels, received some journalists for special interviews and agreed to the radio-transmission of the opera without demanding an extra fee, as was her right. Whole opera, directed by Franco Ghione and produced by Riccardo Moresco, was a success. A real discovery was tenor Alfredo Kraus who got the most thunderous applauses with Callas and eulogic comments from the critics. It was unofficially admitted that Callas received $5,000 (in U. S. currency) free of taxes and expenses for the two performances. Singer got into the Aviz Hotel, though not the royal suit but the one once occupied by the late Calouste Gubelkian (Mr. Five Per Cent) who was a king, albeit a petrol king.

It was uncertain that the score would reach States in time. Hence, the news was sprung late on the public. Parts arrived late in N. Y. only a week ago on photo transparencies.

Proposed Edict Could K.O. Cinemas Operated By Husband-Wife Teams

Brussels, April 1.

If a proposition of law, put forward by an overzealous as wells as unrealistic-minded lawmakers is passed, many small cinema-owners may be obliged to shutter. Prospective law would impose the obligation to use only highly qualified projectionists.

Many of the small provincial cinemas are operated by married couples, the wife in the box-office, the husband acting as projectionist. And social laws, very steep in Belgium, thus are successfully averted.

Exhibitors have already voiced their disapproval, pointing to the absurdity of an unrealistic added burden.

FILM BIZ CONTROL OF PIX SALE TO TV NEAR

London, April 8.

The industry plan to control the sale of motion pictures to British tv networks, devised earlier in the year by Cecil G. Bernstein, and accepted in principle by the five major trade associations, is now in an advanced planning stage. A draft agreement will, it's anticipated, be ready after the joint planning committee has had another two sessions.

The industry is aware of the urgency of the problem and the need to reach agreement as quickly as possible. Collections from cinemas will not be able to start until the deal has been ratified by all the associations. Any prolonged delay would naturally affect the project.

At the moment, the industry is endeavoring to clear up complicated legal and tax problems, and also to insure there is no breach of the Restrictive Trades' Practices law. When the draft is ready the British Film Producers Assn. will convene a special council meeting.

Cooper is in charge of the Melbourne activities, with Lloyd Martin (son), in charge of ad-publicity. Ralton James has been for a long span the circuit's producer, with Gordon on the biz side. Neil Maver said that top U. S. and British names would be imported this year on blueprints set by the late David Martin. Current sellout here is "Pardon My French."

'Glory' Runs Into Many Troubles in Brussels

Paris, April 1.

"Paths of Glory" (UA), Kirk Douglas starrer, has now been put back into firstruns in Brussels after manifestations by pro-French groups had forced its withdrawal. Pic details an incident in the first World War in which a French general's ambition has him sacrificing his men in vain. Pic now has a special foreword in Belgium, pointing up that the pic covers an isolated case in contrast with the historic bravery of the vast majority of French soldiers.

Film critic Francois Truffaut felt that the film would never be released in France as long as the Ministry of War had anything to say about it.

600 Cinemas Shutter In England Since 1953

London, April 1.

Over 600 cinemas in the United Kingdom have shuttered in the last five years and more than 400 of them went dark in 1956 and 1957.

These figures were given in the House of Commons last week when it was stated also that in the same five year span film theatres had contributed over $470,000,000 to the Treasury by way of admission duties.

'Kwai' The March Power Giant; 'Witness,' 'Karamazov,' 'Arms' Big; Offset Lots of Rotten Weather

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarized each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases but is not, of course, fully definite. An index of relative grossing strength in the U. S.-Canada market, the monthly report does not pretend to express total rentals.)

By MIKE WEAR

In the booking book known as an In-between month at the boxoffice, March 1958 followed the general pattern except that there was an oversupply of bad weather. Yet there were enough mighties playing off in the key cities at times to go against the trend. Some inkling of better things to come stems from the product unleashed near the end of the past month.

Champ at the wickets in March was "Bridge on River Kwai" (Col), which was assured of first place and ended the month as Academy "best." Pic was out on extensive release only three weeks in March but was head and shoulders above its closest competitors. Its gross for the month should be well in excess of $1,200,000 when final figures are in for the keys covered by VARIETY.

"Witness For Prosecution" (UA) was a very big second-place winner, the fact that this picture's running time was not excessive helping to rack up great totals in virtually every key played. "Brothers Karamazov" copped third place despite a tendence to fade after a week or two in some localities.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA), which was second in February, wound up fourth last month. Because it was not playing in so many cities as in the previous months, of course, hurt the Mike Todd opus. "Farewell To Arms" (20th), which was No. 1 in February, took fifth place.

"Search For Paradise" (Cinerama) captured sixth position whereas it was ninth in February. "Raintree County" (M-G), fifth in the month ahead, finished seventh. "God Created Woman" (Kings), seventh in February, wound up eighth.

"Peyton Place" (20th), third in the preceding month, finished ninth, making the third month in a row that it has been important in the ratings. "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) wound up in 10th spot. It was 11th in February. "Paths of Glory" (UA), a newie, finished in 11th position. "Cowboy" (Col), also a new entrant, rounds out the Top 12.

"7 Hills of Rome" (M-G), in 10th place in February; "Wild Is Wind" (Par) and "Bonjour Tristesse" (Col) were the runner-up films last month. "Wild" was 10th one session and 12th another week but seldom racked up as big coin as had been expected.

"Teacher's Pet" (Par) shapes as one of the outstanding newcomers. It wound up fifth one week and hinted of catching on solidly. "Desire Under Elms" (Par) from Paramount also, looms as a potentially stout entrty predicated on its showing so far in two N.Y. theatres. "Lafayette Escadrille" (WB) did well enough to wind up 12th one stanza.

"Merry Andrew" (M-G), the N.Y. Music Hall's Easter pic, shapes as an important boxoffice pic, doing big trade on initial two weeks at Hall. "Long, Hot Summer" (20th) also looms as a sturdy entry, based on first two engagements.

"Darby's Rangers" (WB) did well enough to finish as runner-up pic one week. "Lady Takes Flyer" (U) was in a like category.

"Snow White" (BV), out on reissue again, was big to boff on first dates. "Summer Love" (U) did well enough on some first playdates. "Gervaise" (Cont) showed enough stamina to be runner-up pic on two different weeks.

Texas Pictures Co., has been formed in Dallas by Bok Wilkes.

Chi May End 3% Tax; Nabe Boon, If So; Loop Up

Chicago, April 8.

Local film exhibitors appear to have won a partial victory in their long campaign to upset the city's 3% amusement tax. A mayor-appointed Citizen's Committee studying the 10-year-old levy has recommended its abolition on theatre admissions under 90c.

Committee's report was given to Mayor Richard J. Daley. Proposal then goes to the finance committee, which must vote it out before the full council can act.

With Daley sympathetic to the exhibs, revision of the tax-creating ordinance per the citizens' unit suggestion is regarded as certain. Exemption from the tithe will apply only to film houses, however, and not to other entertainments, a la similar legislation effected recenly by New York.

It's the nabes, of course, that will benefit from the action, although daytime admisisons of two or three of the smaller downtown situations will also be exempted. All of the Loop firstruns, though, apart from the roadshows, start no lower than 90c.

Dire need for the tax relief was dramatized again yesterday (Mon.) when Balaban & Katz closed its Covent Theatre on the northside, which had been rumored to be shuttering for several weeks. Its fold leaves B&K with 34 Chi and suburban theatres from a peak several years ago of about 50. And it reduces the Windy City total to 169. Covent's darkening followed hard the closing earlier in March of the Rhodes (Stanley Warner) and the Grand, a Loop indie.

If there's any bright spot, it's the Loop (notwithstanding the Grand), which generally is faring substantially better than a year ago this period, with credit for the current robust condition going to the blockbusters which have dominated the main stem district since last Xmas.

WALD DEFENDS 1958 ACADEMY TELECAST

Film producer Jerry Wald, who doubled in brass to produce the Academy Awards telecast, last week answered the critics of the show, explaining that it was aimed primarily at the mass audience.

"We wanted to recapture some of the lost glamor of Hollywood, and from the reaction we've received, we succeeded completely," Wald said. "For the first time, people were again talking about stars, about our beautiful women, about the glamor that is Hollywood. And they were talking about pictures."

With this experience under his belt, "next year's show will be a cinch to do," he held. What's more, the stars who wouldn't go on this year will definitely be there in 1959, he promised, pointing out at the same time that a big lineup of the top talent did go on the show. It's figured that, had they been paid at the regular rate, the bill probably would have come to around $250,000.

"This thing is like the world series in one shot," observed Wald. "Now we've got something working for us all over the world. Only we've got to keep it up to keep interest alive."

Wald favors Academy Awards in two stages, one in May (covering pictures released during the first five months of a given year) and the other in March. The May event would be limited only to the top categories and wouldn't take in technical awards. Wald felt this would lead to a better spacing out of the product throughout the year.

Hyman-Stark Deal Pends For Close UA Affiliation

Hollywood, April 8.

United Artists prexy Arthur Krim is working out a new exclusive financing-releasing deal for Seven Arts Productions, the Eliot Hyman-Ray Stark indie company. Deal would replace current non-exclusive ticket UA has with the company.

Under the new deal, UA will finance and distrib for Seven Arts: "My Love Possessed," "Anatomy for Murder" and "King of Paris." Another Seven Arts property, "The World of Susie Wong," is not included in the pact, since Hyman and Stark had previously made a financing-distrib on this with Paramount.

Former UA deal with Seven Arts provided for financing of the Jeff Chandler-Susan Hayward starrer, "Between the Thunder and the Sun," set for a tentative June start; another, unspecified property for Chandler; two Audie Murphy pix, one of them, "The Gun Runner," completed; and "The Phoenix," Chandler-Jack Palance starrer now being shot in Germany, with Robert Aldrich directing.

Size of Film Biz in Gotham

Over 25,000 people in creative, production and servicing capacities are employed by the New York motion picture industry, according to Nathan Zucker, president of the Film Producers Assn. of New York. Zucker said that Gotham filmers account for well over $100,000,000 annual gross volume, $70,000,000 in production alone.

Occasion for Zucker's remarks last night (Tues.) was a dinner for Mayor Robert F. Wagner and a handful of other high-ranking city officials by FPA. Principal purpose of the affair, held at Toots Shor's eatery, was to impress the importance of film activities on city administrators. For the past several months, an industry body, led by FPA, has been trying to convince the Mayor urgent tax relief must be offered to prevent further motion picture business from escaping to Hollywood.

FPA said that nearly 200 executives from all branches of N.Y. film production attended the affair, which dually honored FPA's 1958 officers headed by Zucker.

Zucker said, aiming his remarks at the Mayor's group, that despite Coast claims, New York production accounts for 80% of an annual $40,000,000 in filmed commercial biz.

Zucker said also that FPA was vitally interested in securing "credit for true artistic and scientific contributions" made by other than the purely entertainment segment of motion picture production. It was intended as a blast against the Hollywood-oriented nature of the Oscar awards two weeks ago. The FPA chief pleaded for a more effective coordination of film entries at foreign festivals, feeling that with more selectivity New York productions would get a fairer shake.

COMPO to Exhibs: Pay Up; MPAA's 'Good Oscarcast Worth Repeating'

Now's the time for decision—decision by film exhibitors as to the amount of money they'll contribute toward the business-building program, as it is called, which the entire industry is embarking upon. Theatremen through their organizational representatives have committed themselves to payments equal to one-half of 1% of their film rentals of the past year. Distribs are to match dollar for dollar the exhib contributions.

Council of Motion Picture Organizations, headed by Robert W. Coyne, sent out brochures yesterday (Tues.) urging exhibitors to pay up for the promotional effort and do so pronto. This includes $700,000 which is the amount the industry is called upon to pay for last week's Academy Awards program on television.

Distributors, as members of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, already are signed to underwrite the Acad show costs.

Originally set to begin this month, in addition, is an institutional newspaper ad campaign which will cost $950,000. This likely will be delayed.

Meanwhile, the MPAA board has voted unanimously that the Oscar airer was such a success that it should be repeated. While the MPAA was committed to sponsor the show next year, general feeling was that the commitment was not binding. However, trade leaders say the public response was so great that it would be unwise to abandon the bankrolling. In other words, Oscar will be televised again next year under film industry sponsorship.

Further, it was voted that Jerry Wald should again be the producer, this in acknowledgment of the job he did last week in the same capacity.

Oscar Holdovers

San Antonio, April 8.

Holdovers were the order of the day for the Academy Award pics here.

Going into their second week were "The Bridge on the River Kwai" (Col) at the Majestic, "Sayonara" (WB) at the Broadway and "Three Faces of Eve" (20th) at the Josephine.

All doing well.

Fear Ike's Veto Crimps Farmers & Film-Going

Minneapolis, April 8.

A Minneapolis Tribune front page story declared that the drop in federal price props resulting from President Eisenhower's veto of the bill freezing supports will result in a loss of $13,000,000 in Minnesota farmers' dairy income this year. And regional exhibitors, with this omen before them, are shouting their anxiety.

In an area that's mainly dependent upon agriculture's prosperity for its economic well-being, the nearly 20% rise in farm prices last year, just reported by the Minneapolis Federal Reserve bank, and current Washington advices regarding the March sharp increase that regained most of the ground lost during the present Administration's first five years had been conducive to exhibitor happiness.

But now this happiness is being dissipated again.

Afterthought: Let TV Present Oscars, Sans Sponsor, As 'Public Service'

Notion is spreading in the industry that, if the television networks want the Academy Awards show, they should get together and present it as a public service in 1959.

Idea was discussed last Monday (7) in New York by Jerry Wald, who produced this year's Awards telecast, George Seaton, prez of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, and several of the company presidents.

According to Wald, both the Columbia Broadcasting Ssytem and the American Broadcasting Co. would be interested in having the awards in the form of a public service show, for which they would contribute the time. In fact, CBS made a last minute pitch for the program on that basis just before the Oscar personality parade went on the air, but was nixed by the National Broadcasting Co., according to Wald.

Both Seaton and NBC appear to be determined to stick to the terms of their original commitment. Deal is for NBC to carry the Oscar telecast for two years with option for a third. It's definite now that Wald will produce the 1959 awards show. The 1958 event pulled an audience of 78,000,000 to 80,000,000 on tv alone. The film biz is committed to bankroll the show for another two years.

While there hasn't been any detailed discussion of the public service format, a number of the ad-pub toppers in New York are fully in favor of it. Several of them, even before the show went on (it cost around $850,000), expressed doubt that the industry should contribute so much free talent and, on top of it, foot such a heavy bill.

However, even if the public service proposal falls through, most executives in the industry would favor a repetition, i.e. the industry again paying the freight. Only here and there did someone comment that it'd have been just as well to have the commercials and use the money otherwise.

Wald said in N.Y. that those actors who are also indie producers, and thus contribute their share to the financing of the show, couldn't see the point of lending their services and, on top of it, having to pay to get themselves on the air.

"We're a lot more entertaining than a convention or a motorboat race," commented Wald. He added that tv would benefit. "After all, it was made for special events such as these," he said.

a telephone conversation between Victor Hochhauser, singer's London tour manager, and an unnamed inquiring newsman from the Express, who is said to have voiced his doubts regarding Lanza's illness as a cause of broken dates.

Actually, Lanza will furnish proof that during period covered by the story, he was laid up in Rome's Valle Giulia clinic, and that both that and a subsequent series of date cancellations were caused by the illness, specifically the phlebitis infection brought on by treatment of a dental abcess.

Lanza, who has twice disobeyed doctor's orders in order to resume his concert series, unexpectedly flew back to London recently, only two days after his medico had certified to the press that the singer needed a long rest to overcome after effects of his illness, and that he had recommended that Lanza cancel his remaining dates.

Lanza still has a brace of dates to complete in Britain, Germany, France, Holland and Belgium before he winds his current tour in London's Albert Hall towards the end of April.

THRU UA

New IA Unit In Drive to Rep Hard-Tix Films

Pressagent members of Broadway's legit Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents and Managers are joining and becoming active in a newly-organized film pressagents union affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatre Stage Employees. Interest of the legitmen in Publicists Local 872, which has an agreement with Paramount and is organizing the field ballymen, stems from an agreement between ATPAM and the IA union relating to jurisdiction in the handling of films.

The new union, under the aegis of IA official David Cassidy, is claiming the right to supervise the publicity on films, particularly over theatres showing two-a-day, hard-ticket attractions. Previously, ATPAM claimed jurisdiction over this field.

ATPAM members have frequently handled films in the past and have shuttled between pix and legit without opposition. However, the unlimited two-way street enjoyed by the ATPAM members caused resentment among film pressagents since ATPAM, under its strict membership rules, refused to allow film ballymen to handle legit attractions.

Although the legitmen are permitted to join the new film publicists union, the rolls of ATPAM are still closed to the film pressagents, a situation that many of the filmsters are fighting. A number of the film pressagents have indicated that they intend to bring up this obvious discrimination at a forthcoming meeting of the new union.

A hint of the direction the jurisdictional conflict may take will perhaps be solved when it is decided who has the right to handle Metro's showing of "Gigi" at the legit Royale Theatre. A number of legit pressagents are putting in bids for the job, but Metro is still unsure of which union has a right to handle the operation. Metro's own pub-ad staffers are members of a completely different union—the Screen Publicists Guild.

'RAINTREE' OVERCOMES CRITICAL EVALUATION

"Raintree County," despite the adverse critical reception when it opened, is proving to be one of Metro's biggest money makers. According to the company, it grossed more than $5,000,000 to date in 250 situations.

It's reported that 241 continuous-run engagements have now tallied over $4,210,000, with many still playing. These dates, it's said, have compiled a total of 620 weeks.

The picture completed its Broadway run at Loew's State last week after racking up 14 weeks, the first time since 1949 that a picture played that long at the theatre. Other long-run engagements which ended recently were San Francisco (11 weeks), Kansas City (10 weeks), and New Orleans (10 weeks). The picture starts New York circuit dates today (Wed.).

Big Party Into Detroit For 'So. Pacific' Benefit

Detroit, April 8.

Boys Town of Italy benefit performance of "South Pacific" will be held tomorrow night (9) at the United Artists Theatre. Scheduled to attend are Mitzi Gaynor, the Detroit girl who stars in the film, and her husband, Jack Bean; Juanita Hall and France Nuyen, of the cast; film star Margaret O'Brien; Mrs. George Skouras, national chairman of the charity; the Monsignor Carroll-Abbing, Boys Town founder, and Miss Rosalie Rubino, executive vice president of Boys Town of Italy.

Gwen Griffith to Gotham

Detroit, April 8.

Gwen Griffith, general manager of the Trans-Lux Krim and former secretary to Sol Krim before he leased theatre to Trans-Lux, will be transferred to the Trans-Lux N. Y. office April 18 following her marriage.

She will be replaced here by Eric Rose, formerly of a Trans-Lux subsequent run house in N. Y.

Stock-Owning 'Voice' In Policy Called An Exhibitors' Fantasy

"Hard-headed" tradesters discount the renewed efforts of a segment of exhibition to acquire stock interest in a number of film distribution companies so that theatres, as the customers of the film companies, could have a voice in the management of those firms. The new drive, being propagandized by H. E. Jameyson, board chairman of Commonwealth Theatres, actually is not of course, a new idea. Jameyson had proposed an open end investment trust, but other theatremen are merely advocating substantial stock acquisitions.

A similar plan was proposed by Trueman Rembusch at Allied State Assn.'s annual convention in Boston in 1953. Like the Jameyson balloon, it received enthusiastic support at the time, but like so many of the exhibitor proposals to curtail the power of the distributors, it never got off the ground and was quietly abandoned.

A variation of the stock acquisition plan was suggested at Allied's drive-in convention in Louisville earlier this year. It was proposed that stock-owning exhibitors pool their stock in the film companies and send a representative to all the annual meetings. Main objective of this move was for the representative to appeal to the stockholders, bankers and brokerage firms about the necessity of withholding the sale of the post-1948 pictures to television in order to preserve the industry as a whole.

Other exhibitor plans for raising money for various joint projects have also failed to materialize in the past. Theatre Owners of America, during the height of the product shortage, formed an Exhibitors Film Finance Committee "to cause" films to be produced. However, the group failed to raise sufficient coin and the idea was evenutally dropped.

Meanwhile, efforts are being made to push the Jameyson plan. The Commonwealth Theatres executive appeared before the TOA board of directors at its mid-winter meeting in San Francisco this week to explain his investment trust dealing in motion pictures securities.

CENSOR AS PROPHET

Truly Surprised By Stay of 'Around the World'

Vancouver, April 8.

As the first in Vancouver to see "Around the World In 80 Days," nobody is more astonished than R. W. McDonald to see the pic on its way to tripling the local first-run record, he says. The UA release, at Stanley nabe house, is into its 33d week, and half this run was on a reserved-seat basis.

"I thought it was a good picture," he said. "Good for 10 to 12 weeks—but I never thought it would run anything like this."

McDonald is British Columbia film censor, for the past six years, and clears all pix for theatrical exhibition. "Baby Doll," left his hands in March last, as his only scissoring job in several years. "There's nothing else held up just now," censor said.

'CONSCIENCE' BOYCOTT HITS SAN ANTONIO

San Antonio, April 8.

William Blankenship, manager of the Josephine Theatre here, operated by the Cinema Arts Theatres, has heard from Roman Catholics on the subject of Brigitte Bardot, who smashed all theatre attendance records with, "And God Created Woman" (Kingsley) by a 10-week engagement.

"You are notified that since you have demonstrated that obscene and immoral movies are displayed in your theatre as a matter of policy, all Catholics in the San Antonio Archdiocese as a matter of conscience have been advised of your actions to date," wrote Father Erwin Juraschek, archdiocesan moderator.

Bardot 14-Week Run To $125,000 In 606-Seater

Chicago, April 8.

Brigitte Bardot's "And God Created Woman" (Kingsley), posted a record run and gross at the 606-seat Loop Theatre here, taking more than an estimated $125,000 for a near 14-week stand at an evening top of $1.50. Pic closed Friday (28), but probably could have lasted several rounds more.

Previous best grossers at the Loop were "Summertime," which ran 10 weeks; "Meet Me in Las Vegas," 12 weeks, and "Martin Luther," 13 weeks. Filmery, a Telemanagement house operated by the subsid Midwest Newsreel Theatres, opened in 1939 as Telenews, converting to feature policy in spring of '53.

Seek Outside-Show-Biz Openings for Puffers

Hollywood, April 8.

Publicists Assn., Local 818, IATSE, will go outside the motion picture circle to find employment for unemployed members, under a plan now being put into work.

Puffers organization has set up a six-man committee, headed by Irwin Franklyn, to explore other fields where public relations know-how is required, now that decrease in production is leading to increased unemployment.

Committee already has started to finecomb Government agencies, firms in private industry and political, labor, fund-raising service orgs, ad agencies, and newspaper and mag publishers, in effort to locate jobs. Cooperation of Chambers of Commerce in key cities throughout nation also will be sought.

Ready Pageant for AO

St. Louis, April 8.

The Pageant Theatre, which has been showing mostly foreign films on the art theatre policy here of late was shuttered last week for the installation of the Todd-AO process, the first such installation in town.

Reopening is set for April 15 with "South Pacific," in Todd-AO, as the film attraction. Arthur Enteprises, operators of the Pageant, will schedule a special press preview for the night of the 15th.

Seattle Gets B.O. Tax Reduction

Seattle, April 8.

After campaigning for years against the city amusement tax on theatre admissions, during which one reduction was won a year ago, theatremen won another round this week.

Reduction applies to community activities also.

The showmen welcome the relief as the industry is "struggling to get by."

Old tax was 1c per 20c of admission price. New formula has no tax on 50c admissions; 3½c on charge in excess of 51c. On basis of last year the saving is big for the picture houses; $107,000 this year as against $498,932, approximately.

To make the reduction legal, the city council is drafting a new ordinance, but agreement to do so was unanimous, so it's now in effect.

SOVIET AMBASSADOR AT FILM PREMIERE

Washington, April 8.

Appearance of Russian Ambassador and Mme. Menshikov at last week's benefit premiere of "South Pacific" (20th) was viewed with special interest because of current U. S.-Soviet film negotiations. The recently appointed Soviet ambassador, smiling and affable, has given a new look to Red diplomacy. But this was his first appearance at a public theatrical event.

Benefit, held for Cancer fund, was whipped up at 11th hour by Mrs. Ralph Becker, frau of lawyer for N. Y. League of Legitimate Theatres. Despite pressure of time, "South Pacific" debutted at Warner's Uptown Theatre with most fanfare and brass seen here this year.

SPONGE OFF THAT 'C'

'Lost Paradise' Edited—Legion Ups It To 'B'

"Last Paradise," made by the Aidart indie company for release by United Artists, has been sufficiently unlifted (morally) to rate a "B" rating from the National Legion of Decency. Film, which deals with South Seas islanders and their native dancers, originally had been given a "C" (Condemned) because of too much exposure.

Legion now states that "substantial revisions" made in the picture led to the "B" classification, which means "morally objectionable in part for all." Picture still has "suggestive dancing and costuming," notes the Catholic reviewing organization, adding that the "B" is applicable only to prints shown in the United States.

Also handed a "B" this week was American Interhational's "Blood of Dracula," because it tends to give credence to an erroneous philosophy of the origin of human life."

TOA Pushes Fund Plan for Buying Of Post-'48 Pix

Officials of Theatre Owners of America will meet shortly with prexy Ernest G. Stellings for the purpose of implementing the organization of a proposed non-profit, tax-exempt trust which would have as its purpose the purchase of post-1948 films in order to keep them off television.

The TOA topper received authorization to proceed with the plan at last week's meeting of the board of directors and executive committee in San Francisco. It was stressed that while the trust would be an organization initiated by TOA it would be set up as a separate entity in which all exhibitors would be invited to participate.

Stellings indicated that key distribution execs would be consulted shortly to explore their reaction to the trust plan.

The plan, as outlined in the TOA resolution, would have the trust purchase the post-'48 films for a small cash down payment with the balance financed by trust bonds. The distributor would re-release the films to theatres in the normal manner, retaining a fixed percentage of the gross film rental to cover his costs. The balance of the gross receipts would be applied to liquidation of the bonds.

Brussels Fair Bow

into one—is about to become a reality.

Attractions To Accommodations

Cinerama's "Seven Wonders of the World," an enormous Bavarian "bierhalle" seating 3,000 people and an orchestra of 60, shows to be given in a theatre for 5,000, iceshows and aquacades, Hawaii, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, and Italy, all represented by typical cafes, are more highlights.

The question is: how will Brussels, by no means an enormous city like New York, London or Paris, be able to accommodate the formidable flow of visitors expected from all parts of the world? But, apparently, this problem has been thoroughly looked into so as to avoid congestion. There are 162 hotels in Brussels, most of them, the first class ones at least, already heavily booked. The brand-new Amigo, 200 rooms, has just opened right behind the Town Hall. Compacts of motels have, like mushrooms, sprung up in congenial surroundings. One of them, the Motel-Expo, boasts 2,500 double bedrooms. This is quite a novelty for this city otherwise generously provided with eateries, restaurants, milk bars, self-services.

Prices—and this too must be stated—are skyrocketing. Hotels in the center had to have their part of the booty; they quickly revised their prices in view of the expected rush. Anyone last week calling a first class hotel was told: "The price for a room, bed and breakfast, is 485 francs ($9.70). Oh! you want it during the Expo? Then it will be 200 francs ($4) more."

Some British travel agencies, faced by raises which Brussels has tried to impose upon them in spite of agreements reached long ago, decided to bypass this frenzied town where the battle of profits is due to assume extravagant proportions.

All over Brussels, in private houses, the good word has spread: there must be a roof overy every single head. Belgium's reputation for kind, broad if not necessarily disinterested hospitality, will be safe.

Enormous indeed has been the sum of energy poured into the making of this World's Fair. And right up to the date of opening the hectic efforts will go on. One may say that, for Belgium, the quest of the Golden Fleeces has become a reality but responsible heads caution "no fleecing!"

World's first Nickelodeon, opened in Pittsburgh by John P. Harris and Harry Davis in 1905, will be recreated here for city's Bicentennial celebration next year.

McLean in 1936 after McLean and Fox's then-district manager, Arthur Miller, developed Ten-O-Win to compete with what McLean described as "other gimmicks to give away money" and so attract customers. McLean at the time was manager of Fox's 2,600-seat El Capitan, an important neighborhood house in Frisco, and after an initial tryout in the Fox house at Salinas, Ten-O-Win was installed around the district and was, in McLean's words, "terrific . . . people just flocked in."

This success attracted Al Ackerman, in charge of Fox West Coast's are department and Wobber's brother-in-law. Ackerman told Wobber and latter and his brother, William, set up Ten-O-Win on a national basis for "real exploitation" and took control of the company. McLean got "400 or 500 shares" which gave him "dividends of $500 to $700 a month"—quite an addition to his $90-a-week salary as the El Capitan's manager.

Bennett pointed out McLean had at one time been president, then secretary of the Ten-O-Win company, but McLean insisted:

"I am a theatre man, not a Ten-O-Win man."

McLean also testified that "in 12 years the Embassy gave away $360,000 on Ten-O-Win while at the same time Fox was giving away $1,400,000 . . . it increased business."

Then Bennett started making his case, by noting that in 1938 Ten-O-Win began running into trouble with the law around the country because it was a lottery. McLean countered:

"All theatre gimmicks were on the downgrade at that time."

By 1938, said the exhibitor, "I wanted to get into something better than what I was in while I had some money . . . I knew (Ten-O-Win) was on its way out." The "something better" was the Embassy, unsuccessfully operated as a first-run by Fox for the Gore Brothers in the mid-'30s, and then by Herman Cohen.

Dandy Partner

Dibble, an accountant with Wobber for more than two decades, had been made manager of the Ten-O-Win company by Wobber and discovered in the fall of 1938 that the Embassy could be leased reasonably, since Cohen had shut the house in June of that year with $30,000 to $40,000 worth of debts. He broached the idea to McLean and they agreed Wobber would be an ideal partner, each sharing one-third control. McLean testified he didn't recall too much about why they agreed Wobber would be such a dandy partner except: "Dibb'e told me the Wobbers bought what is now the United Artists Theatre when it was second-run for $15,000 and made a first-run out of it and sold it within two years for $400,000."

McLean also felt Wobber, with his great prestige in the industry, could assist the Embassy in getting first-runs and would provide "ample financing."

Wobber, however, attached a couple of conditions to the deal: He was to have 55%, the controlling interest, and would be strictly a silent partner; Dibble would have 20%, would continue working for Wobber and would also be a silent partner; McLean would have 25% and would run the house.

McLean testified he'd never talked to Wobber about the deal until after signing the lease agreement and then "we had a meeting with Wobber and found out he wasn't going to do a darn thing to help us and I was sorry we did it." Bennett, however, brought out that this might have been a regret conditioned upon much later events. Lawyer elicited this testimony from McLean:

"Dibble told me that Wobber said that Charlie Skouras (in 1938) was going to have to saw off a lot of theatres because the Government was getting after him and we might be able to pick some of them up." McLean added: "I wanted the Wobber money to build up a circuit of theatres."

And, indeed, the evidence showed that well into the spring of 1940 all three partners were active in negotiating for theatres and actually picked up a couple—but in every case, the theatres for which they were negotiating were variously identified as "racket houses," "grind houses" or "sex houses."

Bennett's strong implication here was that the initial intent was to spread the benevolent effects of Ten-O-Win around Frisco and Oakland, NOT to play first-run films.

Bennett brought out that the Wobber investment in the Embassy lease was $2,250, McLean's $750 and Dibble's $600, and he went on to point out that the lease agreement contained a clause making it "subject to signing a final contract for film."

Since McLean vehemently insisted he wanted to make the Embassy a first-run operation, why, wondered Bennett, didn't he simply use this escape clause to back out on the Embassy lease when it became apparent he wasn't going to get first-runs?

McLean never answered this question directly, but blamed Wobber for nixing the theatre's first-run potential. McLean claimed Wobber explained it was "not a free and open market" and added:

"Since then I just think he (Wobber) had the Embassy in his hip pocket for Charlie Skouras to turn it over to him at any time."

Q.—You never advised the Wobbers, your senior partners, that you wouldn't get first-run?

A.—Dibble made all the contacts . . . Wobber told me to stay away.

The clear, bitter implication here was that all the partners knew very well that the Embassy wasn't intended to be first-run and that, in fact, Wobber didn't have to be "advised," since he was calling the shots.

McLean also denied that he had told Harry Seipel, in 1938 Fox's district manager, that he was going to run the Embassy on a subsequent-run policy with Ten-O-Win. McLean insisted Seipel had been present when he'd submitted his resignation to Fox's late division manager, Arch Bowles, and that the subject hadn't arisen.

The lawyer next plunged into what became a very distressing subject to McLean.

Daily Grosses

Bennett introduced a McLean letter to Al Shmitken, Warner district manager, written in late spring, 1940. In this letter McLean cried and cried about how awful business was and how the Embassy was going to go down the drain if it didn't get some film-rental relief. Enclosed in the letter was a statement of the Embassy's daily grosses for the first 12 weeks of 1940.

Even from a vantage point of 18 years, enclosure of the grosses appears to have been a mistake. For McLean sent identical letters, at the same time, to all the majors, with identical encosures. Bennett quickly got to the point: did McLean know, he asked, that the box-office statement was "grossly understated?"

A.—About 10%, I believe.

Q.—You knew you would have come up with a profit instead of a loss if the figures had been accurate, you knew you were misrepresenting?

A.—I accept full responsibility.

Typical was McLean's letter to Neil East, Paramount branch manager, in which he told Paramount that the Embassy had done $600 less in the three days it played "Guliver's Travels" than it actually did.

McLean: "I was trying to get the price down . . . that was a flat-price picture, already paid for, we lost money on it . . . I was trying to employ the tactics they used on me in misstating the value of pictures . . . there was no retroactive reducing . . . I made a lot of stupid deals."

Stupid or not, McLean succeeded in reducing the rent on "Gulliver's Travels" from $290 to $200, on "Victor Herbert" from $195 to $160, on "Geronimo" from $160 to $120 and on and on and on.

It was never made clear whether these actually were retroactive reductions or not, but the fact became evident that all the majors were touched by McLean's appeal and in almost every case made hefty adjustments amounting to about 25%.

Bennett then introduced a letter from Dibble to Wobber (resident in New York at the time) written in May, 1940. The letter said:

"Dan is making very good progress in getting adjustments on his film deals . . . all the companies with the exception of 20th-Fox have agreed to a straight 25% reduction on all unplayed film"—a special formula was used for 20th film reductions.

McLean admitted he'd told Dibble that he'd gotten these 25% cuts but claimed he didn't REALLY get them, that he'd been "too enthusiastic."

Judge's Crack

At this point Judge Murphy leaned over from the bench and remarked:

"I don't understand how you can play fast and loose with your own partner on a matter of that importance."

McLean reddened beneath his Palm Springs tan.

Raven, the plaintiffs' lawyer, rose to protest that some of the companies hadn't cut the rent on all their film, claimed that rent on only 20 to 25 of 40 to 50 Paramount pictures had been cut, and McLean said the same was true of Warner's, but this hasn't yet been clarified.

Bennett next turned to the Embassy's total 1939 film rental, which was $29,198, and compared it to 1940's, $31,437, "a difference of $2,239, or a 7.6% increase," which he didn't seem to think was unreasonable.

The lawyer then clobbered McLean from another angle. He compared the Embassy's film rental for the first 12 weeks of 1940 with the amount of money paid out to winners at Ten-O-Win. The first week of the 12, for instance, showed film rental of $666.32 and Ten-O-Win payments of $639.75. For the 12 weeks, the two figures were almost equal.

Again, the clear implication was that the Embassy's cost of doing business lay as much in running a legal lottery as in renting film.

But Bennett wanted to button this up tight, so he got McLean to testify that "a very minute percentage" of those who want to play Ten-O-Win enter the theatre free, despite the fact that anyone who asks for a free pass to participate at the boxoffice can have one.

Bennett touched on various deals that the McLean-Dibble-Wobber combination had looked into up to mid-1940, including acquisition of the legit Alcazar, the downtown - Frisco Strand and Marion Davies (now Esquire), the neighborhood-Frisco Roosevelt and the T & D in Oakland. The lawyer suggested a lawsuit by the operator of the Marion Davies, which had had a 126-day availability compared to the Embassy's 91-day availability, had been settled by a distributor asking McLean to raise his "early-bird" prices. McLean became very upset, almost truculent, about this and the Judge had to calm him down.

Monopoly

Bennett pointed out that two or three years after McLean had opened the Embassy he was still "intending to run, acquire and operate a number of small operations as subsequent-run racket houses with Ten-O-Win," despite McLean's original "shock" at discovering "the so-called monopoly situation."

Bennett also brought up World War II negotiations between Charles Skouras and Dibble about Fox taking over the Embassy as a Frisco first-run.

Q. Did this fall through because you were insisting on a guaranteed profit?

A. Yes.

Finally, Bennett brought up a subject which had been touched on in Raven's direct examination.

This was the Embassy's contract with Sammy Steinberg's Hollywood Advertising Agency, signed May 27, 1946, under which Steinberg had been promised 20% of the Embassy's net over $101,250 for five years if he could produce certain first-runs for the Embassy during the following 12 months.

Steinberg had known McLean a long time and said through "certain contacts" in Hollywood he might be able to produce David O. Selznick's "Duel in the Sun" for the Embassy—the deal was to have been similar to the Astor Theatre deal in New York, with the Embassy as Selznick's Frisco showcase. It fell through—Steinberg couldn't produce, apparently.

But Bennett used the contract to show what kind of money this 1400-seat house had netted in 1945: the net, of course, was this selfsame $101,250.

Then Macklin Fleming, representing Columbia and Universal, started in on McLean. Fleming, together with Fox's Arthur B. Dunne, mainly tied up loose ends.

Quotes 'Variety,' 1938

Fleming quoted VARIETY for Nov. 23, 1938, in which it was reported that McLean was resigning from the Fox organization to operate the Embassy as a grind house. McLean retorted:

"I see no difference between continuous policy and a grind house."

Warming up, the exhibitor said: "I know in one instance the United Nations (Alcazar, which Fox converted to films for a while) paid $100 for a picture and I paid $1,700 and they played ahead of me"—he then proceeded to fulminate against Fanchon & Marco, Herman Cohen, the Nasser Bros. and the Blumenfelds, saying they were all tied up with Fox, even though they weren't parties to this particular lawsuit. This moved the Judge to remark:

"I am frank to say it doesn't mean anything to me . . . if a man brings a suit for a couple of million dollars and doesn't even know who he is suing, it's a very strange situation, in my book."

Fleming proceeded to bait McLean further, citing an April 29, 1940, DAILY VARIETY story that "your theatre would probably have to close . . . did you circulate that story?" Answer—I guess it could have happened.

However when Dunne took over on cross-examination, McLean amended his reply to, "I don't remember planting that story"—though the implication remained that this was part of McLean's concerted campaign to get film rentals cut.

Dunne worked McLean over on his background of managing theatres for Fox and McLean denied knowing anything about booking or buying film. The exhibitor insisted he expected to operate the Embassy as a first-run and "had hopes" he'd get film in "a free and open market." He also insisted he'd never heard about Fox's poor experience in running the Embassy at Fox managers meetings in the mid-'30's.

McLean angered Judge Murphy considerably when Dunne took the exhibitor through the hoops on his relationships with Republic and Monogram. McLean actually got some first-run Republic and Monogram product in 1939, at subsequent-run rentals, and signed a contract with the two studios in January of that year. But in a deposition he testified he'd been in contact with the two producers "prior to Christmas, 1938" and tried to make this sound as if the contact had been made by mid-November of that year. The reason, as Dunne brought out glaringly, was that McLean on Nov. 23, 1938, had signed a third-run deal with Warner's and, said Dunne, "it wouldn't make sense to testify that later you wanted first-run when you already had agreed to third-run" — an agreement, incidentally, which set the theatre's price scale.

What made the Judge sore was the fact that McLean apparently hadn't respected the deposition procedure—which is exactly like courtroom testimony — and had used it in an effort to cover up this discrepancy.

Earlier Testimony

Early in the week Raven elicited from McLean this testimony:

(1) "I wanted a selective contract (with RKO in the fall of 1938) but they wouldn't sell me that. They said I had to be a 100 per cent customer, so I was . . . I bought all their pictures (amid) the usual protest about the price going in and the late availability . . .";

(2) Mel M. Klein, Columbia branch manager, reneged in early 1939 on a Columbia deal for 10 pictures because "they had failed to receive home-office approval of the contract"—but lawyer Raven then introduced an earlier-1939 Columgina pact with "approved by Mr. Jacketeer" written on a corner and McLean identified Jacketeer as "a big man in (Columbia's) sales department in the East";

(3) "Price brackets were almost doubled on me . . . I protested putting admission prices (in film contracts) because about that time all first-run theatres cut their prices from 55c to 40c, but I had to put prices in my contracts and wasn't allowed to cut prices and had to buy their pictures . . . I was paying from 200 to 900 per cent more than any other theatre on 91 days, and then the price was raised on me, they try to squeeze all the blood out of the turnip . . .";

(4) "I had to buy shorts I had absolutely no use for";

(5) "In June, 1940, Dibble and I bought the Wobber Brothers' interest in the Embassy and Dibble could then be revealed as a partner of mine";

(6) He tried to get the run moved up but "never really got encouraged until 1946 when the trade papers came out with a story about an entirely new deal . . . independents would have a chance to get some first-run pictures . . . I know Dibble sent letters and wires to all major producers to endeavor to get first-runs . . .";

(7) The Embassy had to have two men in the booth and a stagehand, by union rules, whereas "neighborhoods that played before the Embassy had only one man in the booth and no stagehand" — this was because the Embassy was a former downtown first-run;

(8) As a result, the Embassy was converted into "a family downtown theatre, with every child getting free popcorn or candy," and more than $90,000 spent between 1938 and 1950 "in improving and maintaining the theatre."

But this was all early in the week. In the later sessions the scalpel-wielding lawyers took over.

ond quarter earnings "will be better," but that the figures would still be in the red. Record business as a whole, he stated, would be off for the entire industry during the first quarter, and that Decca's disk earnings would be "slightly less than last year but not much."

The meeting, attended by some 50 stockholders gathered in a recording studio at Decca's home office, was a sedate one and lasted about 45 minutes. In the course of the meeting, Rackmil reiterated that U will resume production on July 1, but he declined to elaborate on the company's "new plan of operation." He said he could not be specific about the film production plans, but emphasized that "we will make the type of pictures we think we will make money for us."

He added that the management "still thinks it can put Universal back in the black" and that he believed the company's new approach would bring about this result. He repeated that the company had no plan to dispose of its studio and that no mergers were contemplated.

Following the meeting, the Decca-U chieftain declined to confirm or deny a report that he had talked to other company presidents about new methods of distribution.

"I've been talking to film company presidents about a lot of things," Rackmil said. "We've been trying to find a new approach to this buisness. We've been discussing a lot of approaches. If it's done on the record." He stressed again that U had no plans to sell its post-1948 pictures to television.

The formal portion of the meeting saw the reappointment of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. as Decca's auditors and the reelection of Rackmil, Leonard W. Schneider (Decca exec veepee), Albert A. Garthwaite, Harold I. Thorp and Samuel H. Vallance as directors.

Present in person or by proxy at the meeting were 1,340,081 shares, or 87% of the outstanding stock.

Rackmil, during the meeting, declined to release figures relating to the company's advertising expenditures because of the competitive situation in the business. He took the same position at U's annual meeting several weeks ago.

thinks to be a fair catch because of his sporting accomplishments plus a poor niece who is treated as a drudge by all but her bedridden grandfather. It needs no great astuteness as a cinemagoer to guess that, after some predictable complications, which nearly land the niece in the local hoosegow, Gregson finishes up by marrying the girl.

From the first glimpse of the River Liffey, the Dublin scene is set with marked accuracy and atmosphere. Though Patrick Kirwan's screenplay and dialog are geared to good humor rather than wit or satire, the yocks are constant. Director George Pollock, handling his first major directorial stint, has set his sights at an unabashed middle-brow level and rarely misses his target.

Gregson is a thorough likeable hero while Muriel Pavlow, as the understanding niece, and June Thorburn, as the snooty cousin, fit snugly into the Irish scene though not themselves Irish. They are surrounded by a group of outstanding Irish players who enter into the romp with national zest. There's Liam Redmond, a stolid lawyer with a passion for hurley; and Marie Kean, as the widow. Noel Purcell, Eddie Byrne and Jack MacGowran are three garbage-men chums of Gregson, and they might have been handling trash all their lives. Barry Fitzgerald, as granddad, has a field day. Slyly swigging whisky, scrounging tobacco and making a thorough nuisance of himself, he dominates his scenes like a jovial leprechaun before conveniently dying and throwing a spanner in the works by the terms of his humble will.

"Rooney" hits the mark because it rarely lapses into caricature and has the absolute minimum of "Begorrahs" and "Bejabbers." Jack Maxsted's sets and decor keep the Dublin flavor, as does Christopher Challis's camerawork. There are a couple of production highlights in the exciting hurley scenes. Philip Green's music also gives a sparkle to the affair and is attuned to the mood. The patron would have to be stone deaf not to recognize this as an Irish comedy. The title song (lyric by Tommie Connor) is sung over the credit titles by Michael Holliday, British pop singer, and by the dustmen during the pic. This catchy ditty will have patrons whistling it in less time than it takes to say "shillelagh." Rich.

Das Gab's Nur Einmal
(That Only Happened Once)
(GERMAN)

Berlin, April 1.

UFA release of Kurt Ulrich production. Stars Hans Albers; features Helga Martin, Stanislav Uedinek, Alexa von Porembsky, Karl Hellmer. Directed by Geza von Bolvary. Screenplay, Gustav Kampendonk, after magazine ("Stern") series of same name; camera, Bruno Timm. At Atelier am Zoo, Berlin. Running time, 117 MINS.

The nostalgic-conscious among German picture-goers will love this pic. Film presents, along with an uptodate story, excerpts from the most memorable German pix of past years, including history-making silents. Kurt Ulrich produced this long-prepared pic for UFA release, with at least a satisfactory b.o. click since helped by Hans Albers who stars and plays himself in it. Numerous German stars, such as Pola Negri, Conrad Veidt, Emil Jennings, Felix Bressart, Marlene Dietrich, Oskar Homolka, are seen during this film.

Pic shows a teenage girl who's crazy about pix and who finally goes on her own to Berlin in hope of landing a film role. In the Tempelhof UFA studios, she meets the idolized German vet star Hans Albers. He takes her to a party at which he shows old films to his guests. He tries to explain to her that all that glitters is not gold. The girl listens to Albers and finally goes home to reconsider a screen career.

Helga Martin, a beautiful UFA newcomer, portrays the young girl with nice results. Hans Albers is a natural but the others haven't too much to say or do. The lion's share of this belongs to such venerable pix as "Dubarry," "Nibelungen," "Student of Prague," "Metropolis" (all silents) and such talkies as "Blue Angel," "Gold," "The Congress Dances" and "Robert Koch" to name a few. Excerpts from these pix are shown during the films action.

Both an entertaining and interesting offering, it is adequately directed by ex-Hungarian Geza von Bolvary. Hans.

Bel Ami
(FRENCH; COLOR)

Paris, April 1.

Marceau release of Kleber production. Stars Jean Danet, Renee Faure, Anne Vernon; features Rene Lefevre, Jean-Pierre Caussimon. Directed by Louis Daquin. Screenplay, Vladimir Pozner, Roger Vailland from novel by Guy De Maupassant; camera (Agfacolor), Nicolas Hayer; editor, E. Le Chanois. At Cluny, Paris. Running time, 90 MINS.

Duroy ..... Jean Danet
Madeleine ..... Renee Faure
Clotilde ..... Anne Vernon
Valtaire ..... Rene Lefevre
Forentier ..... Jean-Pierre Caussimon

Guy De Maupassant's tale of a climbing, ambitious journalist in late 19th Century France is again put on the screen with this. Pic was banned here for some time because of references to North Africa which seemed somewhat too timely even today. With these cuts made, the pic is out on release. It emerges a faithful transcription of the book and is backed up by good atmosphere. But familiarity relegates this to only a chancey status in the U. S., with special showings possible on its exploitation pegs and theme.

In this version the rising journalist is made partly a victim and product of a corrupt society. Handsome and ruthless in his ambition, he uses women on his climb to the top. He is routed a few times but the femmes make him a great success. Yet it ends with an ironic touch as the next in line for power looms threateningly on the horizon.

Color is uneven but helps in establishing the period. Acting is somewhat stiff but fits in with the general writing and direction of this widely known book. This is more of a social study than a real drama, which makes the characters somewhat sketchy rather than full-blooded.

Technical credits are good. Jean Danet is a properly cold but an almost human Bel Ami, the classic-makes it. Mosk.

6.5 Special
(BRITISH)

Based lightly on a top BBC-TV program, this modest musical will prove a big hit with followers of up-to-minute disk artists.

Anglo Amalgamated release of a Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy (Herbert Smith) production. With Lonnie Donegan, Dickie Valentine, Jim Dale, Petula Clark, Russ Hamilton, Joan Regan, King Bros., Don Lang, Johnny Dankworth, Cleo Lane, Jackie Dennis, The Kentones, Desmond Lane, John Barry Seven, Mike and Bernie Winters, Victor Soverall, Jimmy Lloyd, Paddy Stone, Leigh Madison, Avril Leslie, Finlay Currie, Diane Todd, Jo Douglas, Pete Murray, Freddie Mills. Directed by Alfred Shaughnessy. Screenplay, Norman Hudis; choreography, Paddy Stone; camera, Leo Rogers; editor, Jocelyn Jackson. At Studio One, London. Running time, 85 MINS.

"Six-Five Special" is a hit BBC television show which is slanted unerringly at the teenage market. It features the kind of pop singers and bands which nowadays can become overnight sensations on the strength of a disk or two. It provides lively, uninhibited entertainment for modern youth. Jumping on the current bandwagon, producers Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy (responsible for a brace of Tommy Steele pix) have used the show as a bright excuse for providing an equally cheerful and effervescent musical which, though unpretentious, will give a load of kicks to all hep youngsters and dismay only the squarest of middle-aged fuddy-duddies.

As a co-feature, this pic will ring all the boxoffice bells in the U.K. sticks. For American consumption, it could fall down as a standout case of taking coals to Newcastle. Within its modest limits, the pic achieves what it sets out to do and part of its infectious charms is that, though considerably accenting rock 'n' roll, jive and skiffle, it has the good sense to change the pace with the intro of two or three ballads and less energetic pops.

Norman Hudis' screenplay is purely an excuse to put over 16 or so locally known acts. His central figures are two provincial teenagers who set out for the bright lights of London. One of them is a "bathtub soprano," her friend, and an ambitious young woman who is determined to steer her buddy into the big-time of the tv and disk worlds. They set out on the "Six-Five Special," which turns out to be a pro train and here Hudis hits on the rather alarming idea that all the acts rehearse on board the train. This enables a number of acts to do their stuff, and also for Dianne Todd to snatch an audition with Jo Douglas and Pete Murray of the BBC's "Six Five Special" team. Result is she gets a spot on the following Saturday's program. This gives patrons an inside view of the tv program in production and enables the remaining star acts to be slotted logically into the scheme of things.

Outstanding among the many acts are Dickie Valentine giving out with "King of Dixieland" and "Come to My Arms"; The Kentones, with "The Gypsy in My Soul"; Victor Soverall, with "Say Goodbye Now"; Jimmy Lloyd, with "Ever Since I Met Lucy"; Joan Regan, the King Brothers and Desmond Lane, with his popular penny whistle version of "Midgets." Paddy Stone and Leigh Madison score heavily with a neat dance to Geoff Love's music. Mike & Bernie Winters have a comedy interlude which rates some mild laughs.

Dianne Todd has a pleasing voice but needs to trim down physically and look to her acting if she is to score as a potential new discovery. Her friend, Avril Leslie, is a cute blonde of some promise. Veteran actor Finlay Currie has a devastating few minutes as an old thespian deploring the way up-and-comers score overnight successes in this day and age.

Alfred Shaughnessy's direction is straightforward and takes the modern generation seriously. Particularly he brings out the atmosphere of the tv studio and the toe-tapping hysteria of the teenage fans. It is unfortunate that the cameras should have accented the slightly uncomfortable and moronic behavior of some of these fans.

Leo Rogers' lensing is sound. The film would have profited with a gayer opening to have set the tone of a musical but, apart from its ready-made audience due to the tv program, it could well make new friends among those seeing these pop stars for the first time. Rich.

Foreign Capsules

"JENNY." Dutch-German coproduction: Standaard Films, Bittins Film Production. Directed by Willy van Hemert. Script by Fischer, Textor, Van Hemert. Camera, Otto Becker, Henk Hazelaar. Starring Elen van Hemert (Gisela Fritsch in German version), Kees Brusse, Ko van Dijk, Andrea Domburg, Maxim Hamel. 85 MINS.

This initial production of new film company, Standaard Films, proved partially a success. Made in coproduction with a German firm, "Jenny" is sold at this moment to an odd dozen countries, including France, Italy, Scandinavia; the remarkable thing is that many foreign distributors preferred the Dutch version to the German.

"Jenny" is a remake of pre-war German feature "Eight Girls In A Boat," about a girls' rowing team and the romantic involvements of one of the girls, who expects a baby, while father won't accept responsibility and marry the girl. In the original film there was a slant on abortion which is eliminated in new version; doctor is transformed into a young man who helps girl face fate and be happy.

Though film has slight story, over-emphasizing what little action there is, "Jenny" has some charm, in form of name-part actress Elen van Hemert, making her debut and proving herself to be a fresh, talented newcomer. Her father, tv. director Willy van Hemert, with his first feature film directional stint lacks imagination (he also co-scripted pic) and he obviously could not bridge gaps in story.

Film is first color pic made here (Agfacolor, with predominantly orange and blue) and has a large fragment devoted to a tour around the Amsterdam canals, inserted probably for the foreign market.

WB Closing Aftermath

Albany, April 8.

Loss of employment in the closing of the Warner exchange proved greater than first reported. Only one of the four workers in the "backroom" went over with Clark Film Service, now shipping for WB in the Albany exchange district. She was Marian Mahan, an inspectress. Initially, it was said that the quartet would switch affiliations.

Virgil Jones, president of Lodge 24, Coliseum of Motion Picture Salesmen, was transferred to the New York offices, to assist in handling bookings for Albany. This assignment was believed temporary. Jones reportedly being slated for a salesman's job in another territory.

Branch Manager Ray Smith, the lone hold-over here, took a small office on the second floor of the Strand Theatre Building—near the United Artists suite.

Filmrow feted the departing Warnerites at a dinner attended by 70.

CBS Strike

due to expire at the end of the year, the network ordered more than 280 white-collar execs into a special training course lasting several weeks, in which they learned to handle cameras, booms, projectors, controls, etc. The training course paid off handsomely, with the supervisory personnel stepping in, and with the exception of a few mishaps Monday afternoon, settling into an adequate if not thoroughly professional operational style. It was enough to keep the web on the air with its live programming and forestall any crippling commercial cancellations.

As of the moment, it looks as if the network plans to stay live with its daytime schedule and those nighttime live segments which fall into the simpler audience-participation, quiz and panel categories. However, when it comes to dramatic shows, the network will fall back on kinescopes. First such kinnie substitution was on "Studio One" Monday night, where the scheduled live show was scrapped and the kinnie of "The Deaf Heart," produced with Piper Laurie earlier in the season, was substituted.

Web did Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" live from New York Monday night, while the rest of the schedule was on film. As for last night (Tues.), it was the web's intention to do four of its five live shows as per schedule, with the sole exception being the Red Skelton stanza, where a Skelton film was subbed. Live entries slated to go on were "Name That Tune," "Wingo," "To Tell the Truth" and "$64,000 Question," all from New York. Tonight (Wed.), web will do "I've Got a Secret" and "Big Record" live and will even do "U. S. Steel Hour" with its emergency crews. But tomorrow's "Climax" will be a picture and "Playhouse 90" a film.

In daytime, supervisory personnel apparently had the situation well in hand after a false start. When the union walked out at 1 p.m. Monday, the Walter Cronkite 1 to 1:05 news was all set to go on. IBEW members had laid their audie cables but hadn't plugged them in when the word came to walk off. The standby personnel thereupon forgot to plug them in, with the result that while the video went on the air, there was no audio. Thereafter, the web was dark (local option time) till 1:30, when "As the World Turns" was cancelled and film was substituted.

At 2 p.m., the standby crews still couldn't get started, and a "Beat the Clock" kinnie was used instead of the live show. At 2:30, Art Linkletter's Coast-originated "House Party" was axed and film substituted. (Linkletter show was cancelled for the "duration," but emergency crews got the show back on the air yesterday (Tues.) But at 3, the New York crews got going and after fluffing the opening commercial on "The Big Payoff," carried off the rest of the show without any major hitches. From there they went into "Verdict Is Yours" and thence to the remaining 4 to 5 p.m. soapers without any major trouble.

All program cancellations will call for rebates for time and program to the advertiser. Similarly, all snafus on commercials—Colgate gets a rebate on that opening "Payoff" commercial. However, on kinescopes, the advertiser pays his regular time charges and gets the program at cost. At cost, of course, is simply the repayment fees for kinescope reuse called for in AFTRA and other union contracts. In toto, CBS will be hurt but not crippled by the rebates and the loss of program fees in its live shows replaced by kinescopes (since the staff people involved in the live production still get paid, even if the shows don't go on).

Economic effects of the strike on CBS are less likely to exert pressure for settlement than the general dislocation caused to network personnel and the pressure from advertisers to get the guesswork out of production and scheduling. As for radio, despite walkouts in every o&o city but St. Louis, the standby supervisory personnel were able to handle the situation in stride, and no programming was lost.

AMERICAN-CANADIAN FILM 'STUDIO' PROJECT

Vancouver, April 8.

A motion picture and television production set-up is slated "for immediate construction" at Blaine, Washington, 30 miles south of Vancouver, stated William E. Ellis, spokesman and solicitor for Amer-Can Productions (Canada) Ltd. The company, also incorporated stateside, has its first feature-length screenplay about set for the cameras, he said, "to be produced in northwest Washington."

Amer-Can plans "a 20-acre movie lot with tv studio facilities." Also blueprinted is an amusement park nearby. Blaine is border town between Washington and British Columbia.

James Cassidy, an Allied Artists writer, is in Blaine, readying company's first scenario, titled "The Captain's Lady," declared Ellis.

George Borden, indie exhib at Blaine, is prez of Amer-Can, and said, "We have made a few short features during the past year. We are going into production on this one right away." Names of film's players have not been divulged.

Stereo Disks

ible stereo development were almost identical to the criticisms made when the 33 rpm speed was introduced in 1948. Goldmark rapped other company engineers for their negative comments on compatible stereo, stating that it was case of "sour grapes."

The issue between Columbia and the rest of the major companies boils down to two questions: (1) can a stereo disk be played back on a standard monaural pickup with acceptable results? and (2) can a compatible stereo disk produce results that are equivalent to a so-called 100% stereo disk which cannot be played on a monaural pickup.

Goldmark, speaking for Columbia Records, emphatically answered affirmatively to both questions. Victor engineers, at their series of demonstrations last week, were just as emphatic in the negative. Presumably, the ears will be the final judge, but only if tests will be made under identical conditions and not in two different studios as was the case last week.

Goldmark, who played various selections both monaurally and sterephonically, attempted to establish that "compatible" stereo produces as good a sound as the so-called 100% stereo. His demonstration also established that the compatible stereo disk can be played with good results on a conventional monaural machine.

The Victor engineers, under Wil-stereophonically, attempted to establish that the compatible disk is not as good as the 100% stereo disk and also that the quality of the compatible disk falls off when played on a monaural pickup.

The fact that the demonstrations were able to prove contradictory conclusions established a point made by Goldmark that "the senses can be cheated." Goldmark stated that "Columbia was minding its own business" in developing compatible stereo and it was of no concern to any other company what it intended to do.

Meantime, on the equipment front, Magnavox prexy Frank Freimann disclosed last week that stereo machines will likely have 50% higher pricetags than comparable monaural machines. He stated, however, that stereo will "unquestionably stimulate" hi-fi sales. Magnavox introduced its stereo phono line at the Savoy Plaza Hotel last Wednesday (2).

Dan Fuchs Sues 'Trapeze'

Los Angeles, April 8.

Hecht-Hill-Lancaster and several subsids were asked for one-sixth of the profits from "Trapeze," in a suit filed Friday (4) by writer Daniel Fuchs. Fuchs also demanded exemplary damages of $250,000 for asserted breach of contract and violation of a confidential relationship.

Complaint stated that Fuchs submitted an original manuscript of the same title in 1947 to Harold Hecht, prexy of H-H-L. Understanding was, according to suit, that he would be paid if yarn were used. Fuchs said that United Artists released a H-H-L production bearing title of "Trapeze" in 1956.

Loop 'Locked' by Long Runs; Drive-Ins Avoid Blockbusters; Chi Is a Status Quo Town

Chicago, April 8.

Preemption of Loop deluxers by longrun blockbusters isn't cueing a booking switch by ozoners hereabout, contrary to trade speculation. With drive-ins here entitled to bid on firstrun product, it was reasoned the time is right for such a move because of the "no vacancy" sign hung on the Loop by the big entries. Ozone operators are of a different mind, though. They like the status quo, and the reason is simply more profit.

It's significant that although the ozoners have the right, they've seldom been invited to bid on firstruns. The distribs offer a persuasive reason: to do so would surely offend key downtown situations, and especially Balaban & Katz, largest circuit in the territory and dominant in the Loop with five theatres. But even if fear of possible B&K reprisals didn't weigh so heavily on film row majors, ozoners claim they'd still be no more inclined to go firstrun because of higher (and often prohibitive) rentals and distribs insistance on two- and three-week minimums for certain pix. For these reasons, says one outdoors exhib, "We just can't risk tying up our theatre with a blockbuster."

Protracted runs of big pix, plus reduction of Loop action houses (via policy change or foldo), has necessitated revision of release patterns for low-budgets, notably in the case of Universal with its big backlog of modest product. U has been going more and more to multiple firstruns in the nabes here and figures to continue that policy indefinitely, save possibly for an "A Tome to Love." It's under this pattern that some ozoners have been part of the firstrun scheme, but apart from such day-and-date breaks, they'll continue in the first sub-run bracket.

Although most local drive-ins play touted product as it comes along, a few are coining it good with the action-science fiction one-two—and sometimes three, four or more. Particularly the Starlite situation in southwest suburbia, which last weekend was offering five films of the sock-and-sin stripe. Another location had four pix on the marquee.

Starlite pioneered for a time last summer with a vaude layout on weekends, and owner Stan Kohlberg says he has more expansive plans for this year. Contemplated are a moppet show (possibly with the Lone Ranger and Rin Tin Tin headlining), an aquacade, and a pitch for teenagers with wax artists such as Pat Boone. This time, though, Kohlberg wants the talent on a percentage basis instead of last year's flat-fee arrangements.

Pix-and-flesh aside, Kohlberg is confident he has cinch boxoffice bait with a newly developed car air-conditioning unit which operates on propane gas. By June he hopes to have capacity (1,900 cars) installation. The unit, he says, cools up to 20 degrees, and is especially effective the higher the humidity. Kohlberg's own Stanford Industries, a sales distributorship, is marketing the device (manufactured in the east), but most ozoners, he indicates, have taken a wait-and-see position. Each units, according to Kohlberg, runs as long as eight hours at a 3c cost.

SUIT VS. LOEW'S STARTS

Bank of America Sues on Enterprise Releases Handling

Trial of a $2,600,000 damage suit brought by the Bank of America, Enterprise Productions and Sunset Securities Co. against Loew's International Corp. got under way yesterday (Tues.) before N.Y. Federal Judge Archie O. Dawson and a jury. Action charges that Loew's failed to use its best efforts in distributing nine Enterprise pictures in the foreign market.

Rather than push such Enterprise pix as "Ramrod," "Arch of Triumph" and "No Minor Vices," complaint asserts, Loew's favored its own product. Repping plaintiffs is the firm of Schwartz & Frohlich with former N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora as special counsel while attorney for Loew's is Louis Nizer (Philips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim).

Col Firings

made to halt this policy, which was started several months ago by Warner Bros. As a result of the Col dismissals, only five members of the advertising-art department remain with the company. The company's entire pub-ad staff is now down to 21 from 38.

The SPG's parent union, District 65, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, AFL-CIO, has given the publicists group permission to call a strike against the film companies at any time the union believes it is advisable. It's anticipated that a strike vote will be presented to the membership at a general meeting shortly.

Meanwhile, the Publicists Assn., Local 818, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, the union of studio publicists, is making a determined effort to stem the tide of unemployment within its ranks as more and more of the film companies continue to dismiss bally men. Local 818 has established machinery to find jobs for its unemployed members in other fields where public relations men are needed. The union has established a six-man committee to survey government agencies, firms in private industry, political, labor, fund-raising and service organizations, ad agencies and newspaper and magazine publishers in an effort to locate jobs for its members.

ed star values) as in "Peyton" and "Sayonara" and the mighty production plusses chalked up in "River Kwai." These, of course, are only a few of many productions which have been raking in nice returns in both the first-run and subsequent-run areas. The business since last January has taken a firmer tone, as previously noted, and responsible for it are about a dozen entries in the "A" category.

But, how to repeat. Par, for one, lifted the ceiling on amounts to be spent for novels and plays. Par, in other words, will be a significant bidder for the top-drawer writing work that's available.

However, execs at various companies, including major and independent, are shaking their heads in perplexity over the asking price for star material. Many of Hollywood's key performers want either 50% of the profits on the pictures or 10% of the worldwide gross.

So . . . combine two top players at 50% of the profits for each, and how does the producing company figure to make a buck? In many cases it obviously just can't be done. Gable and Lancaster could get together because of Lancaster's independent outfit status in association with Harold Hecht and James Hill.

T'is a dilemma.

the theatre locates in the Roosevelt University building, and the school doesn't want to risk the property as collateral.

Exposition Hall, a municipal project intended to lure conventions here, has a big auditorium in the blueprints, but its completion is still years away. The project is bogged down now in taxpayers suits and assorted red tape, and if it ever comes to be, 1960 looks like the earliest.

Zelzer revealed that he has some $600,000 in pledges so far from a group of real estate men who are willing to build a culture palace to enhance their property nearby. They want a commercial venture, he said, not a monument, and are more civic-minded than culture minded. "Most of them," Zelzer said, "have never been to an opera or ballet. But this project couldn't be finished for at least two years, and there's still next season to worry about."

The Opera House, formerly the Civic Opera House, was built by industrialist Samuel Insull to house culture in Chicago for all time. It went into bankruptcy and was sold as a commercial property in 1943. Kemper Insurance Co. bought it a few years later.

Pocket-Proof Admission System?

Automatic admission control systems are being installed by drive-ins in many sections of the country. New device, which eliminates the need for a ticket, is manufactured by Taller & Cooper Inc., a division of American Electronics Inc.

As a car drives up to an ozoner equipped with the new device, the attendant who collects admissions presses a button representing the number of car occupants. Immediately a large indicator sign suspended from a post about 10 feet away displays the number of admissions recorded. The indicator panel is in open view of both patrons and management, thus making it impossible for the attendant to do any "juggling" of figures.

Automatically, from the same button action, all transactions are simultaneously classified, recorded and continuously totaled on printed forms by equipment installed in locked cabinets. A remote recorder is located in the drive-in's office. It provides a full printed audit tape for each entry lane.

As a further check, a roadway treadle is placed at the entrance of each lane. As a car enters the drive-in, the fact is registered automatically on the printed tally forms. System is presently operating in some two dozen drive-in theatres.

Thoroughly Illegal Bingo Thrives

Veterans Defy Tax—Nobody Can Stop "Sport"—Bigger'n Horses and Rough on B.O.

By JAY TOMSON

Vancouver, April 8.

Although bingo in British Columbia is classified as gambling, thus illegal, "it's still the number two headache," to Vancouver exhibitors, according to Owen Bird, prez of the exhibs' association, and headman of West Coast Booking, indie distribs.

Both Bird and the local amusement tax office state that housey-housey, as it's termed here, is very big boxoffice. Canadian Legion branches alone are estimated to be grossing some $80,000 a month from bingo games, operated "for charity."

The exhibitors have tried to fight bingo, without success. Police department has tried to quash the sport, which many local opportunists find more lucrative than horsey-horsey, sidewalk bookmaking, but has managed to close only three bingo operations in the past year, according to police inspector Pete Lamont, who heads the city gambling detail.

Usual out pleaded by operators is "funds for charity" and on this basis, local bingo thrives lustily, is second only to tv in responsibility for shuttering the sub-run film situations, is Bird's opinion.

In May last year, B. C. provincial government slapped the area's 10% "amusement tax" on bingo. This action brought loud squawks from service clubs and churches, which make up Vancouver's bingo circuit. The Canadian Legion defied this levy, arguing that "bingo is not entertainment," and withheld payment to the revenue men. By December last, said press reports, the Legion held some $60,000 tax from bingo games "in escrow," pending their hand being forced. Since that sum represents 10% of gross for seven months bingo during 1957, a staggering amount routed away from theatrical wickets, is apparent. Police state that 14 local organizations operate bingo drives from one to six nights a week.

While lineups under theatre marquees are few these days, street-blocking queues begins outside bingo halls here from about 6 p. m., for an 8 p. m. start, at prices around 75c for the first bingo card.

Whereas 90c top is considered stiff admission for a first-run pic, apparently a ten spot on a night's housey is common spending for bingo, which is not advertised, but is drawing big on its big prize appeal. At some Canadian Legion branches, and at the biggie Happytime Social Club, division of Embassy Ballroom (10c annual membership) jackpots range from $400-$800, and frequently larger, with members playing several cards simultaneously to boost chances of a win. Bingo even has its professional punters hereabouts who systematically play the big-prize games around town, and live on the proceeds.

"Everyone seems to be running bingo," said tax officials. "The Elks, Eagles, Kiwanis, community centers and most churches are running regular bingo games."

Bird blames some of the bingo bonanzas on the publicity given police swoops on some operators. "Because it's illegal," he said, "people seem to find some kind of glamor in going to bingo. It makes 'em feel like hellions—they see some sort of intrigue in it. We have been unable to fight it, except in a quiet way, since it's too political an issue." Distrib means the filmtrade would be tangling with church and service club pressures. "So we left the law to look after it, but it's bad opposition to the picture business."

Police state, "We're closing 'em up as fast as we can, but we cannot close bona fide social clubs." Seemingly the dept. would like to.

As of March 21 last, provincial tax office, through a revised law, is remitting half the tax on bingo, "but only to chartered organizations."

'When' Should Film Publicity Start?

The value of long-range publicity on an upcoming picture is being reviewed by at least one major film company. For years, there has been disagreement on the proper timing in the flow of publicity.

There have been advocates of a constant outpouring of material—from the preproduction phase right up to the opening. In many instances, however, there has been a serious lull in newsworthy events during the period that occurs immediately after production is completed to the time the picture is scheduled to bow.

In recent years, the industry appears to have accepted the theory that a picture must be strongly publicized from the day it is announced, during its production, and, of course including the big push just prior to the opening date.

It is this theory that is now being challenged by some pub-ad toppers. It's their contention that a lot of the breaks obtained during the early stanza of a picture's gestation period is dissipated or forgotten by the time the film reaches a theatre.

The early stages of publicity frequently is very costly, particularly when newspapermen are brought to distant location sites both in the U.S. and abroad. In addition, many independents hire private publicity offices which are on the payroll from the time production starts.

In an analysis of the cost versus impact value, many tradesters have come to the conclusion that the coin outlay does not bring the required results in publicity which is most needed just before the picture is available to the public. This type of thinking, which is gaining favor in some industry quarters, would prefer to save the money and the main bally barrage for some 10 to 12 weeks before the initial dates of a particular film.

The establishment of this new policy is being openly discussed in a number of publicity departments. Hard-headed reviews of the prevailing technique has resulted in some sharp questioning of the value of news stories, column items, newspaper art and television and radio breaks which come some six or possible more months before a picture will appear on a theatre screen.

It's generally believed that if any changes are made, it will depend largely on the views of the independents. Some have been burnt by previous experiences and have discovered that the long-range bally, no matter how effective, has meant little at the b.o. if the picture is poorly received. The indies, for the most part, have been the ones to advocate the long-range campaigns and they have also hired the indie publicity offices to make sure that the picture is kept in the public eye. Some film publicity departments have resented the intrusion of these "private" flacks, feeling that their only contribution is to act as a "watchdog" organization.

Solution to the divergent views on long-range versus the immediate publicity impact, it appears, will rest with the decision of the independent producer. It appears likely that the distributor would prefer to pull out all the stops just before the pic-minded, he'll have to depend on his own privately-ture's debut. However, if the producer is long-range employed publicists.

Columnists

duction of better pictures. It was a favorite gripe to charge that keeping stars on the payroll and tailoring pictures and roles for them hurt the industry. Now the reform of a former "evil" is exploited for copy as an example of Hollywood's decline.

Again Hollywood was once lauded for going to distant locations to obtain authentic backgrounds. Nows this policy is cited "as a terrible thing" because the industry is no longer making as many pictures in Holywood.

Emerling hits home the fact that despite the pessimistic outpourings, there are still some 35,000,000 regular film-goers. And he suggests that if any editor desires to make his own survey on the public's desires, "just tune your ear into the conversation at any social gathering. Do you find the folks — ladies especially—talking about the studio payrolls, percentage of the gross, capital gains or such things or are they chattering about Sophie Glutz's new hairdo or boyfriend?"

What Do International Stars Have?

More than ever, foreign stars are appearing in American films. Here are the names of some of the leading overseas personalities and their backgrounds in capsule form:

SOPHIA LOREN—was a hungry 10-year-old when the Allies drove drove into Italy. She picked up some English from the G.I.s, eventually placed second in a beauty contest. This led to modelling and extra roles in films. She first came to notice in "Africa Beneath the Sea," changed name from Scicolone to Loren and appeared under the name in "Aida," when Americans first saw her. An international "cover girl," she's currently shooting "Black Orchid" for Ponti-Girosi (Paramount) and is current in "Desire under the Elms." Her "Houseboat" with Cary Grant is upcoming.

MARIA SCHELL—was born in Vienna and has been an international star for several years, though the broad American public is seeing her for the first time in Metro's "The Brothers Karamazov," in which she plays Grushenka. She has won many international acting awards (including the ones at Cannes and Venice). Brought up in Switzerland, Miss Schell at the age of 16 already had appeared in her first picture, a Swiss production. In 1948, she appeared in "Angel with a Trumpet' 'in both the British and Austrian versions and then made several films for Sir Alexander Korda. She didn't make her first German film until 1950.

CURT JURGENS—at 42 is well on the way to becoming another middleaged matinee idol in the Ezio Pinza tradition. Born in Munich Germany, he got his first film part in 1935, playing the young Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria. Since then he's appeared in 89 pictures and an equal number of plays. In 1957 he starred in seven films, four made in France in English, French and German versions and three produced on the Coast. He appears in "The Enemy Below," "Ths Happy Feeling" and the upcoming "Me and the Colonel." Venice voted him "best actor" in 1955.

CLAIRE BLOOM—rates as one of Britain's most attractive imports. A seasoned legit actress (she's been on the stage since the age of 15), she came to first attention on the screen playing opposite Charles Chaplin in "Limelight." After that, she turned down lucrative film offers to appear on the stage for the Old Vic at $125 a week. Then came "Richard III" and her latest for the U.S. is Metro's "Brothers Karamazov."

ROSSANO BRAZZI—has been a part of the Italian film industry since 1939, appearing in films and also producing them as well as making appearances on the stage. Another of the truly "international" actors, he came to attention in the States with "Three Coins in the Fountain" in 1953. After that came "Summertime," "Barefoot Contessa," and—lately—"Legend of the Lost" and "South Pacific." Born in Boogna, Brazzi originally studied to be a lawyer (he has his degree), then joined a Rome repertory company and appeared in films. He's currently shooting "A Certain Smile" in Paris for 20th-Fox.

LOUIS JOURDAN—was born in France and came to the States in 1947 when David O. Selznick brought him over. His first film role was in "Le Corsaire" in 1940 and made nine more French films within three years, also appearing on stage. Came the Nazis and Jourdan was on a work gang. He escaped to the free zone where he found a group making films. After the war, he went to London. His first U.S. film was "The Paradine Case." He's soon to be seen in "Gigi," in which he sings on the screen for the first time.

MARISA ALLASIO—has only one American film, "Seven Hills of Rome," under her belt, along with seven Italian pictures, but the demand for her in Hollywood is considerable. She entered a beauty contest at th age of 14. Her latest Italian film, "Poor But Handsome," was a great b.o. favorite in Italy.

ANNA MAGNANI—made her American film debut in 1955 in "The Rose Tattoo" and is current in "Wild is the Wind." One of Italy's best-known actresses, she started as a nightclub singer, which was also the part she played in her first film, back in 1935. She has done all kinds of roles, ranging from drama to comedy. She won an Oscar for her "Rose Tattoo" performance. She speaks Italian, French and English.

KAY KENDALL—had a long list of British films to her credit before, in 1957, she appeared and made a hit in "Les Girls." Also schooled on the stage, she had her first film part at the age of 17, but the picture flopped and she returned to the theatre. During the past six years she's appeared in more than a dozen films for the J. Arthur Rank Organization and has done tv. In "Les Girls" she exhibited an outstanding comedy talent. Miss Kendall is married to Rex Harrison, as if you didn't know.

LILO PULVER—made 22 comedies in Europe before she realized her ambition and was discovered by Hollywood—as a dramatic star. She started out in Switzerland where she made her stage debut in Goethe's "Clavigo." More stage work followed and then she appeared with Hans Albers in the German film, "Foehn." This was followed by a long string of screen comedies, all with her full firstname billing of Liselotte. This was changed to Lilo when Universal signed her to a fiveyear contract and cast her in "A Time to Love and a Time to Die."

Secret Police Twist

Films have a way of travelling.

During the war, the Nazis made a picture called "G. P. U." (The Soviet Secret Police) which, being in the form of a sensationalist expose, was designed to jutify the German attack on Russia.

Now, Hoffberg Productions has that same picture dubbed into English, and is peddling it to the American theatres. Film has virtually no Nazi propaganda in it, being concerned primarily with exposing the Soviet "Gestapo."

Sniff 'Barter' As Russian Pitch For U.S. Films

Those close to the Soviet-American film negotiations say they have the uneasy feeling the Russians may again be veering towards the "barter" type of deal. Nothing has been said so far, but the signs are in the wind and the American industry representatives are poised for the demand.

On several occasions in the past, the American reps have explained to the Soviet film men that any "exchange" is out of the question. Eric Johnston, prez of the Motion Picture Export Assn., reiterated this again last week, adding it was his impression that the Russians knew and appreciate the MPEA position.

But others, who've been in on the two negotiating sessions so far, express fear that the notion of the government or the MPEA taking a block of Soviet features for distribution in the States still isn't dead among the Russians; and they wouldn't be surprised if, at a crucial moment, it popped up again.

The Soviets have been screening a lot of American films in Washington and the MPEA has begun to screen Russian features for American distributors. There appears to have been no definite indication of precisely how many films the Soviets plan to buy, and how many they would expect the Americans to take in return.

A high company official last week said it was feasible that the State Dept. might ask the industry to take on some pictures if it turned out that none of the Soviet pictures offered roused commercial interest. However, he stressed, if such a proposition were acceded to by Hollywood, he and many others would regret it greatly. He pointed out, too, that this would set an impossible precedent for other countries who've long been hounding MPEA for some sort of reciprocity arrangement.

Twentieth Century Record Corp. has been authorized to conduct a records business in New York, with capital stock of $100,000, $100 par value. Prentiss-Hall Corp. filed the certificate of incorporation with the Secretary of State in Albany.

CALLING ALL NATIONS

Today the "foreign market" (America to the Europeans, Europe to the Americans; and all the rest of the world to them both) is of the utmost importance to all producers of moving pictures. Nearly all nations possessing studios and creating filmed entertainment are intent upon creating features capable of playoff in allen lands.

Co-production is one omen of this internationalization. Everything is shared nowadays from glamour to finance, from quota permits to annual festivals. But more than currencies is sought. Each nation also seeks prestige. Films are of high voltage impact in the development of national tourism, in the struggle for people's hearts and minds.

Russia is downright anxious to have its films exhibited in America and almost equally interested in exhibiting American pictures to its nationals. Japan has been centering much attention on New York and London. India was elated to win the grand prize at a first-time festival held in San Francisco. France is vastly cheered to have recently made substantial progress in American playing time. Italy is gathering its forces, catching second wind, for a new surge of world competition. Germany is slowly turning away from its postwar preoccupation with its own domestic market and is studying American, and other, release channels.

True some national film industries remain relatively weak, Argentina is distinctly laggard, far behind Mexico which enjoys, for example, a $3,000,000 annual gross in the U.S. Austria is "locked in" to the German market, and to some extent so is Switzerland. But even little Denmark hopes to break out internationally. Sweden, of course, has continued through the years to secure some foreign circulation, not just for nude bathing epics.

That the problems, troubles and approaches of the British film industry are increasingly similar to those of the American film industry is clear. Rank, it is to be noted, garners out-of-country bookings totaling about 50% of its rentals, which is the going ratio for Hollywood, too.

A faraway land like Malaya imported nearly 650 feature films last year. There, as in many other countries, there is a thriving local trade in language dubbing. In the most remote areas of the world, wherever there is electricity, however flickering, films are vital diversion. Only this winter in the snow-marooned country of northern Canada the same one 16 millimeter cowboy film was shown night after night for three weeks, pending the next airplane, to the same fascinated Eskimaux.

Here is not the appropriate place to dwell upon the growing dependence of television itself upon films, whether old and borrowed, or new and self-tallored. But to the extent that the home screen relies upon entertainment in transportable cans it ranks as a younger sibling of the theatre screen. Indeed prominent personages in the American television industry deplore the drift from "live" programming to filmed programming.

Suffice to point out that the present internationalization of the motion picture becomes vividly apparent in the special stories, charts, lists, analyses and display advertisements which comprise this International Film Number.

Motion Pictures—International Medium

By ERIC JOHNSTON

(President, Motion Picture Assn. of America)

Washington, April 8.

The big cliche these days is that the world is condensing. It's shrinking up to the size of a tennis ball, we're told. The bold new wonders of science and technology are annihilating time and distance. The Atlantic Ocean has become a pond, the Pacific Ocean a lake. And it now takes no longer to visit the next continent than it used to take to visit Aunt Minnie in the next county.

There's truth in all this, as there is in most cliches. But in our special business—the international motion picture—I'm not so sure. To my mind, there are prominent signposts pointing in both directions at once. It might be helpful to examine these signposts to etermine which way we're going—and which way we want to go—with the films of each of our countries, the mutual product of all our talents.

The first signpost isn't very cheerful. It is painted in dark and somber shades. It points down a narrowing, ever-constricting lane that finally comes to a dead-end stop. If we travel it, we shall develop long before our time a hardening of the arteries and a stiffening of the joints.

For the world's motion pictures—an industry that today is scarcely 50 years old, that is not even prematurely grey—this would seem a reckless and unnecessary path to follow. How did we happen to get started toward this trail?

The plausible answer is competition—the new competition, electronic and otherwise—that now faces every film producer in the world. No one can deny that the film industry is having its trials and tribulations today. We've all been getting our lumps—in Great Britain, in France, in Italy, all over the world. As for lump-getting, Hollywood is exceptional in only one respect:—we've been getting our lumps a little ahead of everybody else.

But competition, in itself, is not the real explanation. Our trouble, it seems to me, is the way we too often respond to competition in the world market place. What's more, our trouble is self-inflicted. Instead of expanding our markets, we can only narrow and constrict them by putting up ever higher boundaries of tariffs and customs duties and quotas and restrictions and special taxes against the broad interchange of the films of all nations. We may set out to protect the local or national film industry. But we'll end up by crippling the European film industry, the United States film industry, the worldwide film industry. This includes us all.

The Alternative

Fortunately there's a second signpost and we can follow it if we will. It points to a broad highway which the motion picture can travel, ought to travel, is uniquely designed to travel. It is the road toward expanding markets, toward the widest possible access for all the world's films.

In my judgment, the motion picture is a very special thing on the world market place. It is not just a commodity, another bar of soap, or bottle of perfume, or wedge of Provelone cheese. Of all the world's products, it least deserves narrow protectionism and restriction. It flourishes best with the widest access, just as a book or a painting or concerto flourishes.

Like all great art forms, the film is truly international. It is meant to be enjoyed by people regardless of nationality or sovereignty or point of origin. The film's greatest strength—against all competition—is its unique capacity to reach men's minds and hearts everywhere. This, I think, is the film's mission and the mission of our industry. In today's world—condensing or expanding—I can imagine no greater mission.

Perhaps in past lush times, when we had only ourselves to compete against, there was some excuse for being standoffish, for protectionist attitudes and regulations. But today our competition from outside our industry is big enough to bring us together—and our opportunities for building new markets are also bigger than ever before.

The world's films, wherever produced, can cross all boundaries and borders except just one:—

And this is the border, the boundary, we create and inflict upon ourselves.

We have reached a time for expansion, not restriction. The American motion picture industry is ready to join with the industries of all nations in building our mutual business. We believe deeply in this course. It is our credo and hope for the future.

I said a moment ago that the motion picture is not just another commodity. If we look on it as just another bar of soap, we depreciate it and we depreciate ourselves.

Then, perhaps we better be in the soap business instead of the film business.

Once we attempt to fence and barricade the motion picture, like we do commodities under tariff laws, we destroy one of the inherent qualities of the motion picture, which is its universality.

I think it is time to stop thinking just in terms of a European market, or an American market, or an Asian market. I think all of us everywhere engaged in this proud and rewarding occupation, the motion picture, should think and act in terms of a world market. There lies the best future for us all.

Foreign Films In America: Up From Zero

[FRENCH ECLIPSE ITALIANS, GERMANS COMING ALIVE]

By FRED HIFT

SELLING AMERICA

Where and How Is Foreign Feature To Get Bookings in Depth?—Rank-Yank Defies Some Trade Maxims

Though the flow of foreign films into the U.S. has risen to flood tide, distribution methods have not substantially changed and, with the logical exception of the British, most imports still are confined to strictly limited circulation.

It's not so much a question of their inability to achieve the "depth" penetration so ardently sought by the French, but an economic equation that balances volume against such factors as cost of prints, cost of distribution, low rentals, etc. In other words, the foreign film biz is one segment of the industry where circulation and profits don't necessarily match.

Gradually, very gradually, this situation is changing, particularly with the oncoming of the dubbed films, which are a better bet for the commercial houses and can play down the circuit line by overcoming the subtitle barrier. But even though a dubbed import stands a better chance for wide playoff in the U.S. mart, it still generally pans out in the second-feature category and "La Strada" proved that the aceptance isn't uniform across the country.

Foreign film distributors are split into two groups. One goes on the theory that it isn't necessary to maintain more than a couple of offices across the country, with the bulk of the selling up to the sub-distributors. The other goes for penetration via a large number of offices. Latter segment feels that the added overhead is made up for by the greater business volume. In this group are the J. Arthur Rank Organization and Distributors Corp. of America.

Sub Distribs

Efficiency of the sub-distributors has been a matter of much discussion. Some lean to the view that they do as good a job as can be expected. Others take the view that foreign films need specialized attention, which the grass-root handlers can't give them. In any case, if an important film is involved, the axiom still is: We can sell it by telephone from New York; and in the instance of the top firstruns this is unquestionably true.

As for the release of foreign lingualers by the major companies, the feeling is still widespread that the big companies aren't geared for specialized handling. However, producers abroad continue to dream of "major" distribution, sometimes overlooking the fact that the "major" tag extends down the line, also to prints and costs.

Only company really active in the field is Columbia Pictures, which releases via Kingsley-International. Now United Artists, having acqured "Une Parisienne," the Brigitte Bardot picture, with Ilya Lopert, may get into the fray too. Metro has several of the Ealing films, which it financed, but hasn't done much with them yet. Warner Bros. released a dubbed import, the French "Paris Does Strange Things" and will put out the German "So Lange Du Da Bist" (As Long as You Are Here) with Maria Schell.

Token Circulation

The vast majority of imports get little more than token circulation in the States. Those that succeed are primarily exploitaton entries, which may open around the country before hitting New York, and the films which make a mark for themselves in the Manhattan arties where the metropolitan reviewers help 'em along. But the art circuit pipeline is crowded and the number of outlets is still very limited, there being no more than about 300 houses that regularly and steadily book the foreign product.

In the metropolitan area, the situaton changes from week to week. One moment, the arties are booked up tight. The next, several houses are looking for product. It's generally agreed that there is need for a house or two on the East side of Manhattan, but building costs are prohibitive. There has been talk of the Beekman Theatre going first-run and also of the RKO 58th St. Theatre. Length of run, of course, is an important factor. When there are two or three b.o. hits, staying for months, and additional houses are tried up with offbeat American product which has begun to seep into the East side showcases, the competition for the remaining outlets is hot.

Situation is complicated by the fact that most of the outlets are owned by distributors who tend to showcase their own films in them and tend to hold them over even though the business is mediocre. Length of run in Manhattan is a big selling point out-of-town, and in those terms it's worth to hold over a picture.

A great deal of effort is going behind the current pust to get more theatres throughout the States to accept foreign films. The commercial situations, aware that some imports can draw 'em in, are beginning to listen and a good many will book imports, particularly if they're dubbed. In the future, more and more films will be made available in dual versions at the same time where, in the past, the dubbing job followed in the wake of a successful subtitled run. But "penetration" will be more of a question of demand than distributor pressure.

The British have easier sledding primarily because they don't face the language barrier. Yet, even British pictures still move within great limitations and the Rank Organization is finding out that to "sell" its product is as much a matter of pressure and persuasion as it is a process of gradual conditioning. Like the French, the Italians and others, they're finding that it's on thing to book a picture and quite another to get the public to come see it.

Still fighting—and gradually winning—the battle for expansion in the American market, foreign films are beginning to give Hollywood a run for its money in the domestic market.

Realistically, there haven't been any resounding victories, but there have been breakthroughs; no great fortunes are being made, but a picture like "God Created Woman" from France can hope to pile up $2,000,000 or more in film rental; no one is mobbing foreign stars, but their names are beginning to be known and have some marquee value.

To an extent, the concept of the shrinking world has helped the foreign film in the States. Finally abandoning their traditionalist isolationist stance, Americans in depth have come to take an interest in what happens in Europe. Many have come in contact with Europeans or have been among the millions that have flocked to the Continent on a look-see.

Americans are appearing in European pictures, and to an even greater extent, Europeans are being cast in Hollywood films. It is the kind of reciprocity that nurtures familiarity; and in the film biz, this doesn't spell contempt, but boxoffice.

Don't Forget Basic Fact: 'Art' Circuit Still Limited

In gauging the status of the foreign film in the U. S. today, a degree of relativity is pertinent. It is still a small business. The number of "art" theatres has grown to around 700 to 800, of which any one film can play about 400. These houses will mix the British product with the foreign lingualers. There has been a sharp rise in the total of houses that will play imports either occasionally or even as part of regular policy, but some of these are "fringe" situations which turned to "art" as a last, desperate measure.

There's still resistance, and a good deal of it, to the overseas product, not because it comes from any one particular country, but because it represents a strange and unknown element.

In other words, those who seek from time to time to make it appear that the foreign film has hit the bigtime (usually after one picture or the other has caught on), are misrepresenting the rate of improvement.

It is true, however, that imports are no longer shut out of the socalled "commercial" houses. It's true, too, that their potential has risen a great deal, not only because of the continued flow of film, but also because the distributors have become adept in experimentation and in selling. Dubbing is on the increase, and dubbing to many represents a strong hope for much greater success in the future.

Foreign films unquestionably have a future in the American market. They represent, for one reason or the other, the "offbeat" attraction. At a time when the public definitely is shopping for the unusual, that's a plus factor. Furthermore, the idea has sunk in that imports are more frankly daring and sexy than their Hollywood competition and this, too, have left an impression.

Product Shortage Somewhat Favors Imported Features

In addition, economic factors have a bearing. Exhibitors are crying "product shortage," and with the majors cutting down on programmers, the dubbed imports stand a better chance. Gradually, exhibitors (rarely in the mood for "experimentation") are catching on to the availabilability of the overseas product. The lines of communication with the distributors in New York have been strengthened both via repeated contact and also via the spread of offices which the importers have established in various parts of the country to do a better selling job.

Self-help, too, is a part of the story. The French Film Bureau in New York is mailing a flow of publicity about French films and the French industry to all segments of the trade, and the newspapers and magazines are being bombarded with material from France, telling the story of the French film and the French stars.

Relatively speaking, in other words, the foreign film has come a long, long way from the near-zero mark at which it found itself right after the war and from which it was temporarily lifted by the Italians. Naturally if contrasted to the American product, the performance of the imports is still very limited; and likely to stay that way for the "run-of-the-mill" product coming over from Europe.

What the distributors feel is that more and more "big" foreign films are on the horizon. By this they mean films that click in New York and can then be sold widely throughout the country in dubbed form. It is a technique that has not yet been fully defined. "La Strada," was dubbed after it was a hit in the original version. "God Created Woman" was available simultaneously in both the dubbed and the original versions, and now another Brigitte Bardot release, "Une Parisienne," is to be released in N. Y. in July in both dubbed and original form at two theatres. A popular dubbed film can get as many as 5,000 dates.

The danger is that the few successes may blind producers abroad to true conditions in the American market. As one rose doesn't make a summer, so one big hit doesn't automatically create a demand for foreign films, though unquestionably it helps. The fact is that the number of truly attractive films from abroad (attractive in terms of their American b.o. potential) is very limited.

A "God Created Woman" will hit a record number of bookings and gain entry where foreign films have never seen the light of a screen. Yet another French picture, well reviewed in New York and energetically sold, was able to get all of three dates and it grossed but $7,000.

Sex Is Boxoffice But Not Always Predictable Value

"Sex," say the savants, "sells." But does it? "God Created Woman" is cleaning up and another sexy item, "Adorable Creatures," flopped.

"Give 'em art in the art houses," says another fellow, and he points to the success of "Gervaise" (at least in New York). But many thought that "Wages of Fear" was "art," and it flopped.

There is virtually no yardstick, even if one eliminates the whims of the New York critics who carry a certain weight when it comes to imports. "Diabolique" was smash all the way in Europe, and it duplicated its success in the States. But for each of these films there are a dozen which, by all prior standards, should have done well in the States and didn't. "A Condemned Man Escapes" is one example. "Ordet" another.

There is little question that the French film today dominates the scene, with the previously potent Italians lagging behind. But considering the volume of French production, the qualities of the Paris imports is hardly overwhelming. Unquestionably, the French know how to handle sex in their films, and this puts them ahead. But sex alone can also spell trouble in the U. S., and not only because the critics tend to look down their noses at such films.

"God Created Woman" didn't play in Jacksonville, Fla., for instance, for the simple reason that the towns fathers feared that it would create too pressing a demand for a local censor board.

On the overall, the outlook for the foreign films in the States is bright; at least the percentage of moneymakers is likely to rise if for no other reason than that the volume of bookings is likely to rise. It is still true today, on most foreign films, that New York represents 50% or more of an import's total income. But, gradually, the acceptance pattern is changing, at least on the more highly popularized French and Italian entries.

Germans Begin to Impact Long-Lost Yankee Marts

Coming up in the background are the Germans, whose production keeps pumping out films which are generally too "typically German" in character to get across in the States. Yet, "The Last Bridge" and "Devil's General" appear to have broken the ice, and a number of other German films of promise will be released this year, including "Captain von Koepenick." The rising popularity of such German stars as Maria Schell and Curt Jurgens unquestionably will help the Germans break the barrier.

The Japanese, who caused a brief flurry in the States via a series of films starting with "Rashomon," have lost some of their tentative advantage. Both the Germans and the Japanese held film weeks in Manhattan to introduce their new films to trade and press. Underlying all this is the theory that it takes only a couple of hits to break through. It's a theory fondly held by many in the foreign film field, though it would appear to lack merit in the light of actual experience.

The success of the foreign film in the American market—and no one can deny the considerable progress that has been made—has not been due to some "icebreakers." It has been due to a combination of steady "pounding," amounting to a process of education of exhibitors and public alike, and to economic factors quite outside the purview of the foreign film itself, i.e. the soft condition of the market for American pictures.

In its original form, equipped with sub'itles, the imports will never escape the art circuit straightjacket. This circuit is comparatively small, but its patronage is growing. Dubbed, however, and properly exploited, foreign films are at the point where they can tackle the American competition on equal terms.

This past year, the number of strong foreign entries was sharply limited. The French flooded the market (much to the chagrin of those who saw in this a serious dilution of their reputation for quality), but not till late in the year did some really good French films appear. "God Created Woman" irritated the critics, but took off like lightning; "Gervaise" and "Razzia" did well and "Gates of Paris" came on the scene. So did "The Adulteress" and "The Bride Is Much Too Beautiful," which cashed in on the Bardot fad.

Earlier, the French had released "Four Bags Full," which didn't live up to expectations; "We Are All Murderers," "Fruits of Summer," "Pantaloon," "Only the French Can," "Passionate Summer," "The Sorceress," "Time of Desire," "Versailles," "Nana" (also very strong at the b.o.), "A Man Escaped," "The French They are a Funny Race," etc.

The year's top entries from Italy were "Gold of Naples" (going out dubbed) and "La Strada" of course. "Nights of Cabiria" didn't open till very late in the year.

Copenhagen's Nordisk Expands

By VICTOR SKAARUP

Copenhagen, April 8.

Nordisk, oldest film producing company in Denmark, which celebrated its 50th anniversary a year ago, has embarked upon a sales campaign to sell its product in foreign markets. As a key factor in this it has hired Olaf W. Borgesen, 48, who has been with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Copenhagen exchange since 1937 and latterly its manager.

As new foreign sales manager of Nordisk he will have two main tasks. First, to secure more playdates in Sweden, Norway, Finland, and wherever else may be possible. Second, he will seek co-production deals with foreign film companies in order to get rental money out of the Nordisk studios here.

Borgesen will exit Metro at the end of this week, then holiday until May 1.

Once Big Producer

(In connection with VARIETY*'s International Film Section, let one footnote serve as a reminder: until talking pictures came along in 1928, Denmark was a leading European film producer, selling its silents all over the continent here and across the seas as well. The Danish tongue is, of course, scarcely exportable. Even the other Scandinavians have trouble.*

'Inside Russia' Remarks Behaviour of Critics On Moscow Dailies

John Gunther's new Harper book, "Inside Russia Today," being published today (Wed.), has some interesting and unusual things to say about show biz within the Soviet Union. Here are some digested excerpts from his book, published by special permission:

Moscow has more than 30 legitimate theatres; four of these are exclusively for children. There are several peculiarities about theatrical life in Moscow. One is that (except in special circumstances) a long continuous run is impossible; each theatre gives as a rule four or five different plays a week, since all are repertory houses. If a new play is a success, however, it may stay in the repertoire of a given theatre for a long period; one new play, first produced in 1954, is still a hit. Another peculiarity is that there are no stars, at least officially, and certainly no star system. Instead, prominent performers become in time "Honored Artists of the RSFSR" (or other republic), rising to be "People's Artists" on the republic level, and then, the supreme honor, are promoted to be "People's Artists of the USSR."

There are no fewer than 700 legitimate theatres in the Soviet Union, and 350,000 theatrical "groups." Every provincial capital or town of consequence has its legitimate theatre or theatres—a new play by a Russian dramatist of renown may be playing simultaneously in as many as 300 houses.

If a dramatist writes a play, he is at liberty to submit it to any theatre. It may be accepted; it may not. If not, the dramatist has further recourse; five or six magazines and one publishing house exist primarily for publishing plays not yet produced. The effect of publication is to make the text of the unproduced play available all over the Soviet Union. Then, if a success, it may have another chance in Moscow.

Moscow's Bardot

In Moscow recently, when "The Respectful Prostitute" (retitled "Lizzie McKay") was put on, the title role was played by a femme considered to be the Soviet equivalent of Brigitte Bardot and the "sexiest" actress in Moscow. She is, however, 53.

Dramatic criticism can be very sharp in Moscow . . . Moreover actors and actresses are privileged — indeed encouraged—to write letters to the papers, expressing their countercriticism, if any, to the critics. One remarkable practice is the well-known Soviet institution of public criticism. Each Moscow theatre, once or twice a year, holds a mass meeting, which is widely advertised; the public is invited to turn out and, if so inclined, heckle and ask questions of producer, director, author, and actors, who are assembled on the stage. Speeches from the audience are limited to three minutes, and hundreds of people speak. One play recently discussed in such a session was Lillian Hellman's "Autumn Garden" which has been a pronounced recent success in Moscow.

The Moscow Art Theatre is the only public place of its kind in Russia that did not use the hammer and sickle as an insignia; instead it has its own symbol, a dove.

Recordings of American jazz bring bizarre prices on the black market, as much as 400 rubles ($100 at par) for a single record. These recordings are taken on tape from Voice of America or other broadcasts, and then reproduced on, of all things, disks made of discarded X-ray plates salvaged from hospitals. A marked favorite at the moment is Elvis Presley; others are Louis Armstrong, Rosemary Clooney, Frank Sinatra and Patti Page.

Israeli Accept German Films; Make Some Cuts

Tel Aviv, April 1.

Many of Israel's film theatres now are showing German-language pix following the lifting of the ban against them recently. Since Switzerland, where German is one of three official languages, is represented in Israel by an Ambassador and Austria by a Minister, and because Israel's contacts with western Germany are many, it was difficult for the Israeli government to uphold its refusal (comprehensible from many viewpoints) to permit showings of German-speaking pix.

At first, only films of Swiss and Austrian origin were licensed for performance. But during the past month, German productions (mostly co-productions) have also been released. First really successful pic shown here was "Sissy," which ran in Tel Aviv for 12 weeks. It presented exhibitors with the peculiar problem of its using in one scene the Austrian national anthem (identical to tune with that of Germany) with the German anthem unacceptable. This was handled via synchronizing using the sound of church bells, recorded in Nazareth.

Films now showing with great success are "Piroshka," a German production shot in Hungary, and "Ich und meine Frau" (Me and My Wife) starring Paula Wessely and Attila Hoerbiger. Showing in April will be the German-speaking version of "Casino de Paris," with Caterina Valente, Vittorio de Sica, and Gilbert Becaud. Due for early release is the Maria Schell vehicle, "Rose Bernd" after the Gerhart Hauptmann play of the same name.

Tel Aviv's billboards are now truly international, with U. S. pix advertised side by side with "Bolshoi Ballet" as well as French and Indian productions.

Yugoslavs' Films Turning Modern

By STOJAN BRALOVIC

Belgrade, April 8.

Bettered prospects for improved quality of product marks 1958 in the Yugoslav film industry. First of all the studios and their facilities have been stepped up so that numerically much more activity can be handled. Only five years back, in 1953, the grand total of production for the year amounted to five feature films. It was up to 16 last year and should be 20 for 1958. All of which reflects effort and maturity in a film industry which started from scratch.

Two further developments favor upgrading of the entertainment. First should be mentioned a new relaxation of the bureaucracy rigidity so that "modern themes" may be included. Then, too, co-production with other nations is now coming into play.

Only one film now planned for 1958 is of traditional background Four will be centred upon World War II, naturally close to Yugoslavs as a much-buffeted land then.

"Black Pearls," Sarajevo production, will treat the problem of juvenile delinquency. "I Am Coming Back," Sarajevo production will concentrate on a tragic love affair of a revolutionary. "Good Sea," Ljubljana production, will be about men whose destiny depends on the whims of the sea. "That Night," Belgrade production, brings the drama of a New Year's Eve when a rejected woman precipitates a tragedy. "Between Today And Tomorrow," Montenegro production, is a story about two Danube bargemen and a woman. "Division BBB," Belgrade production, is a drama from the Yugoslav oilfields. "The H-8," Zagreb production, deals with a mixup of human destinies and a tragedy in the bus on the highway. "The Earth," Zagreb production, is a sad story about settlers. "Kala," Ljubljana production, tells of a dog reverting to the wild to become a wolf and of man saving its pups from the wilderness and other men.

TWAIN FRUSTRATIONS DO MEET

Hungarian Film Picketed in N.Y.; Will Public Go Along With 'Exchange'?

Importers of foreign films, particularly those now being asked by the U.S. State Dept. to consider the acquisition of Soviet pictures, took note last week when shouting pickets paraded in front of the Normandie Theatre, N.Y. where the Hungarian film, "Merry-Go-Round," had opened.

It was the first new Hungarian picture to preem in the States since the war and several of the metropolitan critics liked parts of it.

Film, shown in Venice in 1956 and screened again privately at Cannes last year, tells a love story against a background of Hungarian farm life. Woven into it are the pros and cons of collective farming. The pickets, identifying themselves as being from the American-Hungarian Federation, called the picture "propaganda inspired by Russia."

Richard Brandt, prez of Trans-Lux Distributing which acquired the picture for the States, said box-office for it was zero. But he defended vigorously the importation of the film. "We will play pictures from any country with which the United States has a trade agreement, and that excludes for the moment only Red China and North Korea," he said. "In importing and booking the picture (the Normandie is a Trans-Lux house) we thought we were contributing to the exchange of information between the U.S. and the communist countries, an exchange which our Government appears to encourage."

Brandt explained the "Merry-Go-Round" had been made by a "liberal" group before the Hungarian revolution. "The film has more anti-Soviet propaganda in it than many American productions," he said. The star of the film committed suicide after last year's uprising when many of his friends were shot down.

Incident came at a time when the industry is being asked to cooperate in making a film deal with the Soviets and when the Hungarian government has before it a draft proposal under which Hungary would buy a number of American films. Agreement has been signed by the Americans, but not yet by the Hungarians.

Most of the reviewers thought "Merry-Go-Round" slow and tedious, but commented on the quality of the photography. The Herald-Tribune reviewer thought the film was an indication that "the Hungarians are going to make an impression on the American film market." Considering the circumstances, it's a far-fetched conclusion.

Screen, Ponies Alone Under Tax

Madras, India, April 8.

Motion picture theatres and race tracks apparently will be the only amusements with an admission tax as a result of the approval by the Madras legislature of a government measure increasing the tax on cinema shows and horse racing. Tax varies from 25% to 40%.

Since the entertainment tax on other sports, music performances, drama and other public entertainment has been abolished, a strong protest was lodged with the government by the South Indian Film Chamber of Commerce which convened at an emergency meeting. Beef, however, had no effect on the solons.

The finance minister of the Madras State told the Assembly that the increase in the film and racing tax would augment revenue from this source although the entertainment on the other amusements has been abolished.

Los Angeles, April 8.

National Theatres Inc., declared quarterly dividend of 12½c. per share on outstanding common stock.

Melon is payable May 1 to stockholders of record at close of business April 17.

Mexican Features Collect $3-Mil In U.S. Rents

Competition, via the entry of Columbia Pictures, has enlivened the Mexican film market in the States which today is worth more than $3,000,000 in film rental.

What once used to be an exclusive enterprise now has been turned into turmoil and the latest development involves an investigation by the U. S. Justice Department into antitrust angles brought to its attention by exhibitors.

Some 540 houses in he U. S. play the Spanish lingualers, almost all of them coming from Mexico. The main market for these films is in New York and in the Southwest and West as well as some of the industrial cities, like Detroit. It is a business that fluctuates with the state of the crops, the level of employment, etc., but it is still gradually growing and expanding.

In the field are Azteca, Clasa-Mohme, as of last year, Columbia, which also produces in Mexico. Col, at first, had a hard time breaking through the established pattern. It expects to handle between 26 to 30 films in 1958, and Col execs say they're able to get wide bookings.

Some of the exhibitors, however, have been having a hard time, and it was on their complaints that the Dept. of Justice went into action. Charge was that, when a house booked Col's Mexican releases, it was threatened with the withdrawal of films handled by Azteca and Clasa-Mohme.

Tactics late last year led to a lawsuit by a Chicago exhibitor, who claimed that Azteca had written him, warning it would withdraw its product if he continued playing the Col lineup. The threat is serious since Col does'nt have sufficient product to keep a house going for a full year.

Tie between Azteca and Clasa-Mohme isn't absolutely clear. Two years ago, Gustav Mohme reportedly made a deal under which he would sell out to Cimex, the Mexican export agency. Takeover wasn't to have taken place until next September. Thus, both Azteca and Clasa-Mohme appear to be controlled centrally in Mexico City. Earlier, Sam Seidelman set up a Mexican distribution firm in the States. He never went into action. Outfit folded as soon as Mohme made his deal.

This was well before Col entered the picture, and reports at the time said that the Seidelman operation was designed merely to "urge" Mohme to make his deal. Mohme depended on the supply of Mexican product, and with Azteca and Seidelman splitting the supply, not much would have been left for Clasa-Mohme. The Mexicans make about 90 films a year.

Sacha Guitry's Last Script

Paris, April 8.

Titles and themes in the planning or scripting stage around the French film studios include Sacha Guitry's final work, which deals with a variety of husbands and wives.

Hakim is doing a biopic of the American dancer Isadora Duncan.

Jean Gabin will be seen in a story of, to nobody's surprise, the Paris underworld.

EUROPE'S TASKS MUCH LIKE YANKS

Paralleling the concern in the domestic U. S. market, Hollywood's lucrative but obstacle-strewn foreign mart is currently the subject of intense study on the part of all of the major film companies. The aim is to cut down distribution costs without impairing efficiency and — equally important — without lowering the potential for expansion.

American films today must rely on the foreign market as much, if not more so, so they rely on their States-side revenues. The entire structure of the industry and of film financing today is geared to certain high-level expectations of earnings abroad, and in the face of these expectations, the gradual drop in overseas income is noted with more than passing concern.

This is not to say that the foreign market income isn't still very satisfactory. In fact, it's been at record levels for the past several years. In 1957, American films abroad did a net (potentially remittable) business of about $217,000,000. Maybe around $190,000,000 of this, if not more, actually was remitted to the States.

But where, in the past, the outlook has always been one of tempered optimism, there's now no question that the struggle to maintain past earning levels has begun in earnest. The companies know that the overseas mart, as presently constituted, is beginning to sag. They also know that they virtually cannot afford to let this process of deterioration, caused partly by the inroads of television in Europe and elsewhere, go too far. They're cutting costs to try to balance the drop.

That 'Leisure Pound'

The area hardest hit has been Britain, where business for all films has been off sharply because of what the Rank Organization's John Davis recently termed the competition for "the leisure pound." The British market long has stood as the most important in Europe, despite quota restrictions, and its vascillations are being felt. In part this loss has been made up for by the growth of the German market, with its freely remittable currency.

The American film companies no longer expect to expand their business in Europe. All they can hope for is that they can maintain the status quo there, fighting all the time—against quotas, taxes, duties, remittance restrictions, the nationalistic desires to "protect" local industries, etc. For the future, the companies are looking to Latin America and, to a lesser degree, to Asia.

Europe A Patchquilt

The situation in Europe is one of many lights and shadows. On the one hand, the Hollywood films still top the popularity parade with audiences and it continues to draw everywhere. On the other, "fencing in" process, long a postwar sport of restriction-minded European governments and industries, continues and has been given much impetus with the rising concept of the European Common Market, which has great application to the film industry on the Continent.

Europe's film industries were raised from the ashes in the postwar era, pulled up by their bootstraps by governments lavish with subsidies. With the exception of the French, none of the European countries had much of an industry before the war. Now, feeling more and more the pinch of rising costs and limited markets, Europe's industries are on the wane once again, with Italy a dramatic example of what can happen. This has brought about a feeling of frustration and a sense of urgency in protecting the home markets.

On the American side, the frustrations have been of a different variety, due in part to the rising prominence of the independents. As Europe moves to become more of an entity as a market, the power of the American industry has lessened. This was demonstrated in Spain and in Denmark where the Motion Picture Export Assn. imposed import embargos and then found itself in the unenviable position of wishing it could get back in. It took more than two years to reasonably resolve either of the two situations. It did, however, teach MPEA a bitter lesson: It could no longer afford to "scare" countries into deals via the past expedient of withholding its pictures.

Common Market?

There is a strong feeling on the part of many American film executives that the common market for films isn't going to be a reality, at least not for many years to come. They base this, in part, on the theory that it will be difficult to include Germany into such an arrangement, at least as long as the current German free-trade concept is maintained.

In Latin America, inflation is haunting the film companies, but the amounts they get out of these countries still are huge and continue to grow as concessions, such as the raising of admission prices, are gradually forced. The key markets are Mexico and Brazil, with Argentina ranking third.

In Asia, progress has been slow and the troubles many. The dollar shortage is being felt, and has caused difficulties in India and in the Philippines. Japan, too, is a headache, though it's a prime market for the Americans.

Around the world, the Hollywood motion picture is fighting an uphill battle for, at least, the status quo.

Kalmus' Technicolor Optimism; But Doubts Enough Volume To Keep 3 European Labs Going

In an unusually bouncy and optimistic mood despite a low net for 1957—$95,946 or 5c per share against $1,226,149 or 60c per share in 1956—Technicolor prexy Herbert T. Kalmus last week predicted a Hollywood swing-back to color and improved business for his company.

In his annual report to the stockholders, Kalmus disclosed that Techni had disbanded its graphic arts division which it had established in January of 1956. Despite efforts to boost business, volume apparently still fell far short of the $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 which Techni felt was necessary to continue the operation.

On the other hand, Kalmus indicated that the lab's Technirama printing process, which allows a producer to get virtually any prints he wants from a wide-area negative, was catching on, and that Techni's Consumer Photographic products and Services division was doing well. "Operating figures for the month of January, 1958, were better than for any other period since acquisition of the assets of Pavelle Color Inc.," he said. Outfit still plans to build a new consumer film processing and printing lab on the Coast.

As for Techni's foreign labs, Kalmus reported that Technicolor Ltd. in London had shown a net of £314,775 for 1957, i.e. only a £12,895 drop from 1956 "despite a not insubstantial decrease in volume of production and increase in both labor and material costs."

News from Societe Technicolor in Paris wasn't that good, however. Plant is just about breaking even, but that's before the Italian lab has started operating. Discussions with three of Technicolor's affiliated companies abroad were started in '57 "with a view to finding a way to solve the problems of the French company," Kalmus reported.

In Italy, Technicolor Italiana is progressing with plant construction and should start servicing the Italo industry during the second half of 1958. But Kalmus admitted a hitch in Techni's original plans.

"When the ground work was being laid for the establishment of these affiliated companies in France and Italy, in our high volume years 1953-54-55 and even 1956, there seemed to be an abundance of business to keep the three Technicolor foreign plants in ful. operation. Now, however, with the London and Paris laboratories operating and the Italian laboratory soon to be ready to start operations and with those laboratories feeling the very important reduction in the volun.e of American business which Technicolor Corp. can send them, there is not enough business to keep all three plants operating successfully."

Explaining Techni's low net, Kalmus said about $1,001,000 had been invested in plants and equipment during 1957. Since Jan. 1, 1954, the lab has invested $14,280,000 in such assets.

Kalmus reported net sales for 1957 of $24,674,620 against $29,445,950 in 1956, $32,418,000 in 1955 and $34,654,000 in 1954. Despite this steady downward trent, however, the Techni head still felt that "the tide has turned." "The request of our customers for pictures for 1958 indicate that the pendulum is swinging back to color as compared with black and white," he wrote.

Cinerama Success Made Commies Scream 'Foul!'

By HY HOLLINGER

No account of international film relations in 1958 may pass without mention of the unique part played by Cinerama. Here was the motion picture innovation which became:

—The daddy of other wide-screen systems, such as CinemaScope, VistaVision, Todd-AO and CineMiracle.

—A political prestige tool for Uncle Sam.

Cinerama, under the auspices of Robin International Cinerama, headed by international business man Nicolas Reisini, has been on display as a commercial enterprise in a number of foreign countries since 1954. However, the medium gained its greatest prestige and honors for the U.S. when it was offered as an official U.S. Government exhibit at two trade fairs —Damascus, Syria in 1954 and Bangkok, Thailand in 1955.

The success of the showing of "This Is Cinerama," first picture in the three-trip medium, was welcomed so enthusiastically by visitors to the fairs that it caused a Government official to term the medium as "America's best ambassador abroad." Exhibition of the medium at the fair was made possible by Stanley Warner Corp., which owns the exhibition and production rights to the process, and Cinerama Inc., the equipment manufacturing and installation company.

At the time of the Damascus fair, the U.S. Information Agency said that the showings of Cinerama were so successful the local Communists were accusing the United Stataes of "unfair competition."

At Bangkok, as a result of the Cinerama presentation, the U.S. exhibit was awarded first prize for originality. Demands for tickets to a 2,000-seat theatre were so great that the showing of Cinerama was extended for two weeks after the official closing date of the fair.

Later this month Cinerama will be on a view at the Brussels World Fair—privately—and not as U.S. exhibit.

Neuilly and Studio Parisiens, with five stages, do video and publicity film work only.

The above studios vary in price according to age, since space does not seem to be a deciding factor. The daily rates are for a bare studio only. All have cutting room, projection, and sound facilities. Prices for these come to: For sound it is 25,000 francs per day sans personnel. Cutting rooms are 18,000 to 25,000 francs per day. Projection is 3,000 francs per hour. Electricity is 100 francs per kw hour during shooting and 50 during construction and preparation. A camera can be rented for 8,000 francs per day.

Note: Studio space has been computed in metres 39 inches to a metre) and prices in francs with 420 francs to the dollar. Prices are the rental rates per day.

There are also seven large sound stages at the Victorine Studios in Nice, two at Marseilles and two in Bordeaux. Prices equal Parisian setups.

Pros, Cons of Dubbing Linguals For States

Is dubbing the salvation for the foreign film?

Past year probably has seen more pictures dubbed into English than any combination of prior years, yet the addition of the English soundtracks hasn't meant an automatic boost to every film. In fact, the only dubbed releases that really clicked were "La Strada," "God Created Woman" and "Rodan."

The independents who handle imports are aware that there is greater acceptance of dubbed films among exhibitors and the public than before. But they also know that, before they go for a dubbing job, a careful evaluation of the picture involved is necessary. Dubbing the "wrong" release can mean simply piling a loss upon losses inasmuch as the lip sync process runs anywhere from $10,000 to $25,000 or, in the case of a major studio doing the job, even higher.

Also, the indies must keep in mind that, once a film is dubbed, the automatic channelling into the commercial route requires an additional outlay for extra prints and a greater advertising effort. If the film clicks, that's a gain and the money is well spent. If it flops, the extra coin just adds to the red ink.

There are two types of films that lend themselves ideally for dubbing. One is the cheap exploitation picture from abroad which gets by on "shock" values and certainly needs English dialog for the mass market. The other is the picture that either has a personality to carry it (like Brigitte Bardot) or is constructed so that dubbing doesn't intrude.

That there is no insurance in dubbing is demonstrated vividly by the soft b.o. of such dubbed releases as "08/15," "Vickie," "A Man Escaped," "French Can-Can," etc. Dubbing outfits say the German and Swedish films, involving slow speech, are the most difficult to "convert." French and Italian is easier. Now, one or two British films also may be "Americanized" for greater acceptance in the States, particularly where given roles are spoken in the cockney accent.

Gradually, release methods are being adjusted to take cognizance of dubbing values. Latest refinement comes with Ilya Lopert's "Une Parisienne," which will open day-and-date at the Fine Arts and Astor Theatres in Gotham. Former will feature the original subtitled version, latter the dubbed film. This is being done in Europe all the time, but has never been tried in the States.

Edward L. Kingsley of Kingsley International was the first one to point out last year that distributors with good films on their hands, which they plan to dub, should have these English versions available simultaneously with the original version. That's the policy he followed, with great success, with "God Created Woman." Film is playing off in dubbed form through most of the country, and is likely to play 4,000 to 5,000 dates where, with titles, it'd be restricted to about 500 to 1,000.

Though leading dubbing experts, like Peter Riethof, are praised for doing very good dubbing jobs, the impression persists that European dubbing—if done with enough care—is still superior. In part this is credited to the corps of trained actors available for dubbing in places like Paris, Rome and Berlin. European dubbing costs are lower than those prevailing in New York, and a picture may be dubbed on the Continent for as little as $7,000 or $8,000. However, these are rarely perfect jobs, the fault usually being laid to sloppy script preparation.

However, even with care and the most up-to-date equipment, dubbing in the States isn't necessarily of top quality. "Vickie," lip synced at the Disney studios, was roundly criticized for its dubbing job, and "La Strada" also came in for some negative comment. Despite the presence of Ingrid Bergman in the cast, "Paris Does Strange Things" (released via Warner Bros.) didn't raise any dust in its dubbed form and, again, the dubbing quality was poor.

When it comes to the action-exploitation films, like "Rodan," the public is less apt to be critical of the dubbing. It's a different story with the slower and more talky "art" films.

Cannes Paces The Festivals

Knowing— Not 'Guessing'

(ABOUT FRENCH FILM AUDIENCES)

By CLAUDE DEGAND
(Press & Statistics Head, Centre National de la Cinematographie)

Paris, April 8.

Although film executives have generally been showing, all over the world, a tendency to rely on their personal experience and "flair" rather than on scientific analysis, market studies, a well known thing in other industries and trades, are beginning to appear in the film field also.

Apparently film people are beginning to realize that, even for the best "professional," even for the hard boiled producer or distributor, it's a difficult thing to "guess" or "feel" with a reasonable amount of certainty what the customer wants and prefers, what he hopes for when he enters the theatre, how he feels when he looks at the pictures, what is his state of mind when he gets out, and, in fact, what is going to be his behavior tomorrow or next week as far as film shows are concerned.

Nobody denies that, more than in most other trades, there is a great deal of uncertainty about the degree of success (or failure) that awaits the product of the film industry: it certainly is more difficult to deliver a film that will attract full houses of paying spectators than manufacture a cake of soap that will sell in the thousands of cases. House film people should endeavor to put all the trumps in their hands: in other words avail themselves, at least as much as other industries, of the advantages which are to be found in scientific market studies.

Anyway, let us make reference to Germany where a poll was conducted in 1955 and showed that 29% of the population, 18 and over, never goes to see a picture. In the States, the results of the first nationwide study of the American motion picture audience ever undertaken by the motion picture industry have just been published.

But, what has been—and what shall be—done in France?

France has now a survey under way: its results will soon be available. But in fact, it's the second one within a relatively short period.

In Autumn 1953, Jacques Flaud, director general of the Centre du Cinema, considering the recent and continuing drop in attendance, wanted to obtain a fair idea of the French consumer's point of view in the matter of film entertainment, and, accordingly, instructed me to have a survey made for the C.N.C.

After much preliminary work (owing to the lack of similar experience on which to fall back), I was able to launch, through the channel of the Dourdin's Institute a nationwide Gallup: during February and March of 1954, 2,000 Frenchmen over 15 and living in towns of 2,000 inhabitants and over were interviewed, more than 60 questions being fired at each of them. In June, we were able to publish the results.

Audience Poll Proves Informative

What did we discover?

(1)— that out of every 100 Frenchmen (people under 15 and rural areas excluded) 36 are not moviegoers.

(2)— that out of these 36, 30 used to go a few years ago but don't go any more (the other six having never been moviegoers) which was all the more important as:

a) our usual French film statistics, accurate and far reaching as they are, cannot provide this kind of information.

b) this showed that the plight of the French film industry, bad as it was at the time, could be balanced by the prospect of having 30% of the population at its disposal as a potential mass of spectators.

We also discovered that of 64 (out of every 100 Frenchmen) moviegoers:

+ 51 choose their film before going to the cinema, which has thus become a "premeditated purchase."
+ 41 go with someone (child or grown up).
+ 42 look for pure entertainment.

Penetrating deeper into the survey, we were able to give the composition of a typical French cinema audience:

+ Middle class people account for 79% of the total.
+ People under 39 years account for 69% of the total.
+ Men account for 55% (and women for 45%) of the total.

But is the Frenchman a frequent moviegoer?

The Frenchman, in general, attends a film show 18 times a year (from 19 to 22 times in middle-classes, 36 times for young people under 25). But among those 64 Frenchmen out of every 100 constituting the cinema audience, the annual frequency has been found to be 29, the winter frequency being about twice as high as that of summer.

Many more important facts were stressed by the survey. But that was four years ago and it was necessary to make a fresh analysis: although moviegoers have grown in number since 1954, we are still short of reaching the Italian and German level, and television, though progressing slowly, is more and more looming as a dangerous rival.

It will be easily understood that if the second Gallup is conducted on very nearly the same basis as the 1954 Gallup: we will thus be in a position to draw fruitful comparisons.

But what would be the use of such research if it was to remain another bottom of the drawer item? Even in America, the home country of Gallups, it is generally admitted that the motion picture industry has been notorious in ignoring surveys of this kind; much more so in France . . .

That is why, exactly as Ralph D. Hetzel, executive vice president of MPAA, said in his comment of the survey which he had carried out for his association, I will stress that all the data collected is nothing more than a tool with which to carry on further work.

For there should be no doubt in anyone's mind that in any future attempts to widen the French audience one would have to take into consideration the sense of direction offered by the motivational profile provided in the survey; the success—as Hetzel expressed it—would probably be, in the long run, a matter of individual company as well 25 of industry application.

American Showmen Think French Manage Best Balance Between 'Art' and 'Boxoffice' Positions

American film industry's attitude towards the international film festivals has changed substantially in recent years as such events began to reach an acceptable compromise between "art" and "commerce."

Right after the war, when Cannes, Venice and Berlin established themselves and began to put on the pressure for films, Hollywood developed a definite antagonism against any of these events, reasoning being twofold: (1) They were nothing much more than tourist traps, and (2) Their standards "automatically" discriminated against the U.S. entries.

Even today, tourism is an important consideration at all festivals. The amount the casino at Cannes would lose if the Cannes fest were suddenly to be discontinued is difficult to estimate, but surely would run into the zillions of francs.

But the festivals have gradually stretched into a new pattern that satisfies not only those who seek screen "art" (and there's plenty to be found at least at Cannes and Venice) and others who maintain that film is nothing much more than merchandise whose value is best determined by the number of people it entertains, i.e. the number of people it attracts because it is good entertainment.

Foreign Markets

The foreign market today is tremendously important to the American industry, which from it grows its major sustenance. Each picture playing at one of the fests not only rates an extra permit, but its earnings are freely remittable. Art or no art, that's cash in the pocket for the distributors.

Quite apart from that, films being screened at festivals come to the attention of several hundred journalists from every corner of the globe; they get written about, discussed, praised and torn to pieces. Whichever way it goes, though, the titles of the competing pictures are spotlighted internationally and sink into the consciousness of millions.

The Americans are aware that the festivals can work two ways. A picture can get loud praise and add millions to its earning potential as a result. But it also can get torn apart, and this can detract from its original commercial esimate. This was one of the points that had the U.S. companies unhappy: They entered pictures which they regarded as commercially valuable, only to have them panned to the nth degree by highbrow scribes.

On the festival side, the commercial values today loom higher, as witness the victory of "Friendly Persuasion" at Cannes last year. On the American side, the realization is growing that it's wise to howl with the wolves, i.e. to take cognizance that the fests are aimed at much more than simply a trade fair concept. There has been discussion at the Motion Picture Export Assn. in New York with a view to finding a more realistic formula for selecting the official fest entries. These talks so far have led nowhere, and the Cannes selections for 1958 were arrived at in the same way as before. Difference is that a number of top films were available. Whether Metro's "The Brothers Karamazov" falls into the category of film that will please European critics remains to be seen. At least it has a European star (Maria Schell).

On the other hand, "Long, Hot Summer," which Cannes is inviting, has an "arty" quality that unquestionably will strike a responsive chord in Europe.

Of the three top fests on the Continent, Cannes certainly is tops by virtue of combining both commercial and artistic values. It aims to offer the best of the international screen, and it also constitutes a kind of international trade "fair," where film men from the world over can make personal contact, arrange deals, negotiate joint production, discuss their joint problems, etc.

Who's That Across the Line?

Berlin is much more commercially-minded, and it still has the aura of being part of the East-West propaganda battle. It has grown every year, but it is primarily important in terms of the German market. Eventually, if plans to invite the East to participate at the Berlin fest jell, Berlin may become the most important film contact point between Russia and her satellites and the rest of the world. Such (limited) contact is now achieved at Cannes.

Venice, being last in line, is the most "arty" of the fests and it has a great deal of prestige value. But few American importers go to Venice to find exciting new films to buy.

The American industry, at times overawed by the number of international fests announced, has generally come to believe in participating in many of them for the sake of exposure. It is no longer the big pitch for counteracting Soviet propaganda, but rather a realization that, in an international market that is growing steadily more compact and independent, Hollywood cannot afford to stand aloof.

Winners of the Past

Since World War II End Cannes Awards Have Laureled Many Americans

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, April 8.

They're not giving out any cash awards at the competitive film festivals, but the financial stakes involved make the $64,000 question a small-change affair by comparison. A top commercial film that doesn't catch a prize may be hurt, but a weak b.o. picture can easily be pushed over the top by an artistic kudos.

At all of the festivals, the hue and cry about "art" vs. "commerce" is inevitably raised, and festivals' juries over the years have gradually swung away from the strictly highbrow approach. Looksee at the Yank winners at the Cannes festival, which gets underway May 2 and runs through May 18, provides some clues as to what types of features please Cannes juries (taking into account, of course, the pressures and counter-pressures that pervade the jury rooms anywhere).

Year by year, these were some of the top Cannes winners since the inception of the competition:

1946—There were seven Hollywood films, but the Americans only captured an acting kudos for Ray Milland in "The Lost Weekend" and an animation nod to Walt Disney for "Make Mine Music." Michele Morgan got a prize for "Symphonie Pastorale" (a French comeback for her after a fair Hollywood career) and Roberto Rossellini's "Open City," marking the start of Italy's neo-realist era, was overlooked.

1947—The U.S. sent nine pictures and got three awards in category prizes. "Crossfire" got the top social nod, "Ziegfeld Follies" emerged as the best musical and Disney scored again with "Dumbo."

1949—This was the year the jury became more clearly oriented towards film as an art medium. Hollywood sent six films and reaped an award via Edward G. Robinson in "House of Strangers." Louis de Rochemont's "Lost Boundaries" was recognized in the best scenario category and "The Set Up" made it in the lensing class. That year, Sir Carol Reed got recognition for "The Third Man" and Rene Clement got an award for "Walls of Malapaga," which later failed to do business in the States.

There began, around this time, an awareness that the festival sword could cut two ways. It became obvious that the jury preferred the "deeper," more artistic and thoughtful films and that a top commercial film, screened but panned, could actually be hurt rather than helped.

1951—There were four American films that year and Bette Davis got the acting award for "All About Eve." Italy's Vittorio DeSica shared top honors with Sweden's Alf Sjoberg for "Miracle in Milan" and "Miss Julie" respectively. This was the beginning of an upbeat curve for the Swedes. Britain also scored via an acting award for Michael Redgrave in "The Browning Version."

1952—Only three majors sent entries that year, and one indie. The acting prizes went to the U.S. (Marlon Brando for "Viva Zapata" and Lee Grant for "Detective Story") while the indie "The Medium," (the Gian Carlo-Menotti opera) got the nod for the best lyric. France that year showed "Fanfan La Tulipe" (which later did well in the States) and "We Are All Murderers," shown in the States only last year with little more than prestige success.

1953—Four American films were shown plus one out-of-competition. The U.S. got the nod for the most diverting picture with "Lili" and for the best thesping for Shirley Booth in "Come Back Little Sheba." The big prize went to France's "The Wages of Fear," which later was a dismal failure in the States, both in its original and in the dubbed versions.

1954—Five American entries, but only one prize, to Disney for "The Living Desert." "From Here to Eternity" was out of the running due to its recent Oscar award and got only a pat on the back. The Japanese copped the top prize with their colorful "Gates of Hell."

1955—The wheel finally turned (or maybe Hollywood had made it clear that it was getting fed up with being browbeaten by the longhairs). Anyway, this was America's year. "Marty" took the top prize, which helped it greatly in Europe. Spencer Tracy collected the acting award for "Bad Day at Black Rock" while the prizes for direction went to Jules Dassin for "Rififi" and to Russia's Sergei Vassiliev for "Heroes of Chipka." Italy scored with "The Lost Continent" (which didn't come to the States until two years later) and Elia Kazan's "East of Eden" was judged the best dramatic film. The Soviets' "Romeo and Juliet" made it as the most lyrical film and it later had an art house run in the States. Israel also was heard from for the first time with "Hill 24 Doesn't Answer."

1956—Four Hollywood pictures were in the running, but only Susan Hayward got an acting prize for her "I'll Cry Tomorrow." The top award went to "The World of Silence" and H. G. Clouzot's "The Picasso Mystery." Sweden had "Smiles of a Summer Night." "World of Silence" was a hit in the U.S., "Picasso" flopped and "Smiles" did very nice business.

1957—Again it was America's year. "Friendly Persuasion" won the prize in spite of adverse press and audience reaction. Sweden and Poland showed great advances and Yank Negro actor John Kitzmiller took the acting award for his performance in the Yugoslav film, "The Valley of Peace." Russia amazed everyone with "The 41st," which had a love story and comparatively little propaganda and Argentina made a show via its "House of the Angel." Greece showed "Girl in Black" and "S'ella," both of which were released in the U.S. last year with fair success, and Hungary contributed "The Little Merry-go-round," which has just gone into release in the States.

Paris Tones France's Playoff

FILM INDUSTRY 'INDIVIDUALISTIC' IN COMPONENTS THOUGH DEPENDENT ON SUBSIDY

Paris, April 8.

The French film system is still a primarily "individualistic" setup compared to the corporate aspects of U. S. filmmaking. The French have no real "major" companies with stars under contract. However, there are some companies that usually carry the main burden of production activity, and this also applies to distribution.

Paradox creeps in since the French industry is also partly nationalized via the administrative powers of the governmental Centre Du Cinema which gives production licenses, handles censorship, foreign agreements and keeps the industry balanced via Film Aid Law handouts.

Of 440 legal production outfits only 176 participated in production in 1957, and most of these did so via coproduction with others. In the distrib picture of 171 enterprises 16 handled over two thirds of the biz of which eight are French (Cinedis, Cocinor, Pathe, Gaumont, Sirius, Marceau, Discifilms, Corona) and the others the eight Yank majors.

Industry sources feel that mergers will be necessary (a) to cut rising production costs and (b) to fit into the coming European Common Mart. West Germany and Italy are fairly manageable as number of producers and distribs, compared to the splintered French trade.

The leading producing companies, that is those who can be counted on for one or two pix a year, are CLM, CCFC, Filmsonor, Franco - London Film, Hoche (Raoul Levy), Gibe, Marceau, Pathe, Sirius, Gaumont, Speva, UGC, Cocinor, Graetz, Rank-Guibert and Gray Films. Many of these also have distribution aspects with the distrib putting money into production.

Though French filmgoing has risen, and foreign acceptance has bettered, the French film cannot amortize itself sans Film Aid. Of the $125,000,000 local gross $40,000,000 goes for taxes. This is another paradox as the government takes with one hand and gives with the other. But Aid is considered essential here with some basic changes in operation called for; such as not forcing producers to put Aid coin right back into pictures, which has led to overproduction, and giving special aid on daring, offbeat subject matter and the use of young talents rather than the questionable present method of handouts for "quality" features. Opinion is always split as to what a quality film is.

With its newfound but precarious equilibrium the French film has reconquered its own market and took 22 weeks of playing time in 1957 over the called for 20, and took over 50% of the grosses with slightly over 32% going to the U. S., and other countries making up the balance.

French sell centers on the Paris firstrun for about 30% of the revenues accrue here though Paris is only 19% of the overall attendance. Capital usually sets the styles for the other key cities and rural areas. But with television beginning to be a factor of competition new economic factors are coming into play.

Something new here—the "road-show"—obtained good results for such Yank offerings as Cinerama, "Around the World in 80 Days" (UA), "The Ten Commandments" and "War and Peace" (Par) and now Columbia's "The Bridge on the River Kwai" installed at a small art house after a phenom eight-week regular run. French-made blockbusters are now being readied for this type of handling, per the three-hour new version of "Les Miserables."

A general look at investments show 21% of funds coming from distributors, 13% from labs, studios and insurance companies, 13% from banks, 5% from creators and technicians, and 15% from producers with 35% based on Government Film Aid.

FRANCE CLAIMS 'FIRSTS'

Lists Fadeouts, Dissolves and Double Exposures As Its Own

Washington, April 8.

France is responsible for more "firsts" in motion picture and still photography than any other nation, claims a issue of "France Actuelle," a fortnightly information publication issued here by French interests. Among the claimed "firsts" in motion pictures:

The 16-frames-per-second camera, by Auguste and Louis Lumiere; the first motion picture, by the Lumieres, "The Sprayer Sprayed," a slapstick sequence running a few seconds; first newsreels by Charles Pathe, about 1900; first surgical cinematography in 1900 by Prof. Louis Doyen; first fadeouts, dissolves and double exposures by Georges Melies, about the turn of the century.

First film dramatizations by Georges Melies; first multi-reel films, notably "Queen Elizabeth" in four reels, brought to this country in 1912 by Adolph Zukor; the original Cinemascope process by Henri Cretien.

And, incidentally, the lightweight, portable tv camera which CBS introduced to this country from France.

French Features-To-Come Checklist

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, April 8.

French feature films currently being readied for market, at various stages of exploitation, are as follows:

"Les Amants De Demain" (Tomorrow's Lovers) (CCFC). Marks the return of Edith Piaf to pix in drama of a woman who kills her unfaithful lover and finds brief love with a man who did likewise with his vis-a-vis.

"Amere Victoire" (Bitter Victory) (Col). Made as a French pic in English by Yank Nicholas Ray. It has Curd Jurgens, Richard Burton and Ruth Roman. Vigorous war pic suffering from some ambiguity of the characterizations.

"Amour De Poche" (Pocket Love) (Gaumont). Comedy about a scientist who can make people pocketsize and how this is used to keep his jealous fiancee from knowing of a new love. Intermittently amusing.

"A Pied, A Cheval Et En Voiture" (On Foot, By Horse And in A Car) (Cinedis). Perhaps surprise comedy hit of the year though humor is patchy.

"Ascenseur Pour L'Echafaud" (Elevator to the Gallows) (Lux). Work of a 25-year old director, Louis Malle. A taut thriller of an ironic end to a perfect crime. Somewhat weak on characterization and overcontrived, this won the top film award of the year. It probably has art chances for U. S.

"Le Beau Serge" (AJYM). Made by 28-year old Claude Chabrol concerns return of a native to his small town. Looks local to France in appeal but promising.

"La Bonne Tisane" (Good Medicine) (Lux). hospital-gangster tale.

"Escapade" (Pathe). Cinderella takeoff of the innocent girl and the handsome gangster. Has the Louis Jourdan name.

"C'Est La Faute D'Adam" (Sonofilm). Estimated a chancey item for the U. S.

"Charmants Garcons" (Sirius). Zizi Jeanmaire assailed by plenty of men. Fairly diverting but lack of real impact.

"L Dos Au Mur" (Back to Wall) (Gaumont). Fairly slick murder yearn.

"L'Ecole Des Cocottes" (School for Flirts) (Pathe). A satire on the 1920's. Might divert Yanks.

"Les Fanatigues" (Pathe). A suspense item about a man trying to kill a dictator on a plane and how humanity thwarts him.

"Maigret Tend Un Piege" (Maigret Lays a Trap) (Rank). Competently told murder yarn with Jean Gabin, but lacks stature.

"Sois Belle Et Tais Toi" (Be Lovely and Keep Quiet) (Ege). Silken comedy thriller with playoff chances aided by Mylene Demongeot and Henri Vidal.

"Les Temps Des Oeus Durs" (Time of Hardboiled Eggs) (CCFC). Satire on art. Includes new comic Darry Cowl and Fernand Gravey.

"Tous Peuvent Me Teur" (Anyone Can Kill Me) (Sofradis). Series of murders in a prison. Exploitable.

"Le Triporteur" (The Delivery Boy) (Cyclope). With Darry Cowl and only intermittently funny. Color costs may limit this for export to States.

"Les 3 Font Les Paires" (Gaumont). Zany murder tale that does not quite come off, but with some yoks.

"Une Manche Et La Belle" (Beauty Up Her Sleeve) (Cinedis). Murders and doublecross, but possibly too much like Yank counterparts.

"Une Vie" (Silver). Includes Swiss Miss, Maria Schell. Dramatic tale of a woman's life in the 19th century. Good U. S. chances.

Les Bijoutiers Dy Clair Du Lune" (Col). Anglo version is "The Night the Sky Fell In" and it is a robust, earthy pic with Brigitte Bardot to insure art and general success.

"Le Desert De Pigalle" (Cinedis). "Worker-priest" trying to save a prostie. Sexsational and exploitable. Anticipate U. S. censorship trouble.

"En Cas De Malheur" (In Case of Accident) (Cinedis). Again Brigitte Bardot. She's a delinquent who seduces staid lawyer Jean Gabin. Racy and taut, it looks like a good arty import with general chances too.

"Les Espions" (The Spies) (Cinedis). H. G. Clouzot's strange tale of the world of espionage. It spins a telling atmosphere. Heavy on gab but odds favor some acceptance in U. S.

"La Loi C'est La Loi" (Law is the Law) (Cinedis). Teams Fernandel and Italo comic Toto for a risible tale of smuggling. Okay arter.

"Les Miserables" (Pathe). 'Nth remake of the Victor Hugo novel. Bigscale in production and length. Might have some Yank playoff possibilities. It has Jean Gabin.

"Montparnasse 19" (Lux). Has Gerard Philipe as the tortured painter Modigliani. Period and cast could help this for art dating in U. S.

"Nathalie" (Gaumont). Martine Carol as a wisecracking model who outsmarts the police and crooks. Fairly diverting. Good general prospects outside France.

"Pot-Bouille" (Boiling Pot) (CCFC). Boudoir tale told with tact and spice. Gerard Philipe and Daniele Darrieux add up to the adult appeal of a "La Ronde."

"Retour De Manivelle" (Turn of Handle) (Rank). Murder. Main asset the Michele Morgan name. Forecast unexciting.

"Sans Famille" (Nobody's Boy) (Cinedis). Sprawling retelling of a Gallic classic. Broad appeal and acting helps.

"Tamango" (Discifilm). With Curd Jurgens and Dorothy Dandridge about a slaving ship. Stacks for States.

"Le Septieme Ciel" (Seventh Heaven) (Gaumont). Re-do of macabre comedy. Daniele Darrieux and Noel Noel. Possible specialized U. S. opportunities.

"Therese Etienne" (Col). Naturalistic drama. Questionable for American markets.

INTERNATIONAL JUDGES BACK AT CANNES

Cannes, April 8.

The full, international jury will be reinstated for this year's Cannes film festival, which rolls May 2 and, in its two weeks of screenings, festivities, interviews and negotiations, aims to avoid the pitfalls of both its own past and those that have hurt other fests.

The assembly of the international jury, instead of the one of last year, composed primarily of Academie Francaise members with their lofty and removed notions about "art," is somehow symbolic of Cannes' determination to emerge as the number one fest.

This will be the 11th Cannes go-'round and, as the fest continues as the top prestige event in its own competitive area, it's becoming clear that the American major companies can no longer afford to go along for the ride only, to appease foreign customers. All the elements—from the American industry's heavy dependence on the foreign market, to the rising quota threat, to the prospects of the European Common Market—combine to force the Americans into a greater degree of thoughtful and wholehearted cooperation.

Needs More Budget

This is being acutely realized in Europe by the American film reps stationed in France. Fred Gronich, the Motion Picture Export Assn.'s new continental manager, makes no bones about his hope for a bigger budget for Cannes this year in order to hand out better publicity material to the some 500 scribes expected to cover the event, and to get more personalities down to cash in on the publicity bonanza that inevitably flows from Cannes.

That's not to mention the free licenses and free remittances—up to $50,000 on each picture—that can also mean a sizable chunk of coin for the majors along with publicity and release outlets for winners.

There is a feeling here that, as Cannes grows in both stature and importance, the American industry must send more weighty and unusual films. The view, not necessarily shared by all, is that the "deeper" pix not only are more likely to snare prizes, but also need the boost. Blockbusters and the general run of "good" pictures can be shown outside of the competition, and this would be a benefit for all concerned.

Cannes itself is cognizant of the need for improvements. A higher budget this year will mean invites to a wider range of personalities, and the reduction to one official entry per country leaves leeway for invitation to "unusual" films.

This year will tell whether Cannes will retain its top fest position in Europe over Venice and Berlin. Cannes has spotlighted the work of lesser filmmaking countries, and it has been responsible for "creating" some stars. Both esthetics and the pocketbook can be served at Cannes if countries send their best and if Cannes can solve its pressures, intrigues and touristic scramblings. It's been plain in the past how budgetary troubles can lead to ill-will.

Robert Favre LeBret has been Cannes prexy since the fest's inception and, despite the rugged pace, he's been able to survive without an ulcer. First Cannes fest came off—humbly—in 1946, without a film palace as yet. It was patterned largely after Venice. Over the years, the Yanks started wondering whether the French and Italians had set up prizes between themselves, since the American films seemed unable to get more than secondary awards. But, as Cannes grew, the Hollywood entries managed to gain greater attention.

The first big U. S. break came in 1955, when "Marty" snared the Golden Palm award. From then on, American films and American talent were steadily in the running. Last year's fest was won by "Friendly Persuasion."

HONOLULU LOVES BARDOT

Opened In Nabe—Then Moved Downtown

Honolulu, April 8.

Brigitte Bardot feature, "And God Created Woman" (Kingsley-Intl.), has moved to Royal Theatres' downtown Roosevelt for an extended run. Switch followed two weeks of sensational biz at the circuit's neighborhood Queen Theatre.

Queen had to oust "Woman" in order to participate in a day-and-date showing of "Wild Is the Wind" (Paramount) with the King and Palace Theatres.

30 Nations For '58 Cannes Fest

Paris, April 8.

Cannes Film Festival for 1958 will run May 2-18 and, so far, 30 countries are participating and 17 have already picked their films. Various events will take place within the framework of the festival, such as meetings of international film bodies, a "vidfilm" festival and prize, and outside screenings of international features and shorts.

Film Palace here is being enlarged by 1,000 seats. Work is now going on. The jury is practically picked and will have an international composition, with four French and seven foreign members. All are directly involved in films to eliminate last year's difficulties when prestige jurists ignorant of film matters handed out unpopular laurels.

Young directors who were unveiled at past festivals will be repped as well as oldtime kudosed directors. Michael Cacoyannis, who put Greece on the filmmaking map via "Stella" and "The Girl In Black," though he has yet to win a prize, will have his new release, "The Last Lie" with Ellie Lambetti. Spain's Juan Bardem has "La Vengenza," 2nd India's multi-winner Satyajit Ray "Para Pathar" (The Philosopher's Stone).

Sweden sends Arne Sucksdorff's "En Djungelsaga" (The Arc and the Flute) and Poland Aleksander Ford's "Osmy Dzien Tygodnia" (The Eighth Day of the Week) a Polish-West-German production. West Germany sends a musical fable "Das Wirthaus Im Spessart" (The Inn In Speessart), and Austria the third sequel to "Sissl."

Japan is repped by "Yukiguni" (The Snow Country) and Italy "L'Huomo Di Paglia" (The Straw Man) and "Fortunella" with Giuletta Massina. France will probably enter Jacques Tati's "Mon Oncle" and "Montparnasse 19." Norway has "Ni Liv" (The Fugitive) and England either "The Key" (Col) or "Orders to Kill." Hungary, Rumania, Russia and Czechoslovakia rep the Eastern countries with "Vasvirag" (Iron Flower), "The Fools of Baragan" made by French director Louis Daquin, "The Lovers" and "When the Stroks Pass," respectively.

Argentina has "Rosaura a Las Diez" and Switzerland "Bronze Faces." Official Yank entry is Metro's "The Brothers Karamazov" with two more to be added.

From May 10-14 a series of vidfilms will be shown from West Germany, Belgium, Canada, U.S., France, Italy, Japan and Sweden. A special jury will give a prize to the best vidpic to be called The Eurovision Prize. There will also be meetings of the Federation of International Film Producers, and huddles between governmental reps from Italy, France and West Germany on the Common Market Film Problems.

Latest feature jury members are actress Madeleine Robinson, playwright Marcel Achard, painter Bernard Buffet, film critic Jean De Baroncelli from France, screenwriter Cesare Zavattini from Italy, director Serge Youtkevitch from Russia, director Ladislao Vajda from Spain, film critic Tomiko Asabuki from Japan and director Helmut Kautner from West Germany. Yank and English members are to be picked. On the U.S. side, Mel Ferrer, Billy Wilder and Robert Aldrich have been mentioned.

France's Big Grossers: '50 to '57

Paris, April 8.

Any appraisal of French boxoffice blockbusters must naturally distinguish between what the French liked and what other nationals went for. They coincided in some cases, were fiercely disagreed in other cases. Tracing back the releases to 1950, the student of the Cinema du Francaise comes up with these remarks for the record:

"And God Created Woman" (Levy), which is the sexpot-in-chief in the U.S. market (via Kingsley), was only so-so when unspooled here. Brigitte Bardot has since achieved her standing as an "American" favorite and in the publicity and perhaps some reflex-action French pride her latest for Filmsonor, "Une Parisienne" is a mop-up (U.S. rights commanded a phenomenal advance of $220,000).

"Rififi" (Inudsfilms), Jules Dassin's taut gangster pic, was a worldwide hit. It has no stars but fine playing, plus a tour-de-force silent 30 minute segment of the robbery of a jewelry store that gave it its uniqueness.

"French Cancan" (Franco-London), of Jean Renoir with Jean Gabin, Francoise Arnoul and Mexico's Maria Felix, was magnetic for the homeland, but this poetic evocation of the building of the Moulin Rouge did not touch the American understanding.

Sacha Guitry's "Versailles" (CLM), which is still the all-time high here, flopped in the U.S. where its costumed bedroom shenanigans in royal Versailles demanded too much knowledge of French history and manners.

"The Little Word of Don Camillo" and "The Return of Don Camillo" (Francinex-Amato) to be considered as a pair, both directed by Julien Duvivier and starring Fernandel and Gino Cervi as the battling priest and Communist mayor of a small Italo town. This hit sensibilities here but was not a big Yank cup of tea.

"Notre Dame De Paris" (Hakim) with Gina Lollobrigida and Anthony Quinn pushed this remake of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" into the big brackets. English version, made for Allied Artists, has gotten a good blanket playoff in the U.S. and proves that this type of film can be made in two lingos for good results sometimes.

"Diaboliques" (Filmsonor) paid off on both sides due to the shocker aspects pumped into it by H. G. Clouzot. Simone Signoret, Vera Clouzot and Paul Meurisse held their own with the film's morbid aspects.

"Fanfan La Tulipe" (Filmsonor), with Miss Lollobrigida and Gerard Philipe, was big on both sides of the Atlantic due to its lighthearted adventure, gentle anti-war theme and its fine pace and acting.

"Wages of Fear" (Filmsonor), H. G. Clouzot's taut suspense item of the torturous trek of two nitroglycerin trucks, won money and film fest awards but did not make it in the U.S. The controversy about the trimming job is said to have militated against it.

"Gervaise" (Dorfman), with Maria Schell, is now repeating its European success in Yank art houses. Rene Clement's rendering of Emile Zola's lowlife 19th century, and its humane aspects, have made this big b.o. in spite of its grim, downbeat character. It also made actress Schell.

"Lucrece Borgia" (Filmsonor), with Martine Carol, played it for bawdy, sexsational aspects and Christian-Jaque's adroit direction gave this spec values. It did big here and well in Yank playoffs, attracting censorship and Church opposition, (an aid?).

"La Traversee De Paris" (Four Bags Full) (Franco-London) was a boff offbeater here on the acting of Bourvil and Jean Gabin and its deft handling of life under the occupation. It was a smash here but only fair in the U.S. The subject might have been too specifically Gallic.

"Un Grand Patron" (The Perfectionist) (Discina), with Pierre Fresnay, was a talky, conventional drama about the life of a great surgeon. It cut a big b.o. path natively but died in the States where it appeared "soaky."

"Les Femmes S'En Balancent" (Pathe) and "Votre Devoue Blake," are two Eddie Constantine-starring releases which cleaned up this side on this Yank player's popularity and phlegm. Still unknown in his native land, Constantine will soon make an American pic here for U.A.

"Les Grandes Maneuvres" (Filmsonor), Rene Clair's bittersweet tale of a 1900's military garrison Don Juan, was smash here but languished among the Yanks. Its half tones were not to U.S. taste (Clair's "Belles De Nuit" (Filmsonor) also was bigger at home. These releases did not make it in spite of names like Michele Morgan, Gina Lollobrigida and Gerard Philipe).

"Napoleon" (CLM), Guitry's version, was boff among his buffs. Has still to playoff in America.

"Justice Est Faite." This had a message for the citizens of France, concerning the French jury system but was only a moderate booking item for the States.

"Le Triporteur." Amusing to the public this side is a new zany named Darry Cowl. He's half-Harpo Marx, half Jerry Lewis—or, you might say, brash. This comedy and another, "Cyclope," have clicked in French theatres but nobody yet knows whether this comic would beguile the U.S.

"Michel Strogoff" (Modernes), with Curd Jurgens, was a fairly static retelling of the Jules Verne tale but did big here and might be worth Yank dualer chances.

"Vacance De Monsieur Hulot" (Discina) was an international comic triumph for Tati. His fey character, Hulot, set off yocks that could be understood anywhere, and he is probably the most original creative French comic in decades.

U.S. Boxoffice Of French Stars

Paris, April 8.

French stars by and large have not become "big" boxoffice for outside-France situations. This statement requires qualification, of course, since in times past Maurice Chevalier had a major following in America. Ditto, if in lesser degree, the late Raimu, the late Louis Jouvet. Fernandel has some special following in the States, and is among the French cinema personalities exhibited there extensively, as would be true of Danielle Darrieux, once under Hollywood contract. Michele Morgan, Gerard Philipe, Martine Carol, Jean Marais are others who could be named as partly familiar to Yank spectators.

All of this is now changed as the United States, in all its sections, has wildly discovered France's sex kitten, Brigitte Bardot, the north, and south, the east and west (of her) and suddenly there is in America a French name that is "electric."

It is probably a justified generality to say of French film actors of star rank that they are better trained and more versatile than the acting average among Hollywood stars.

U.S. SOLDIERS DO, TOO, LIKE SOLDIER PIX

Wiesbaden, April 8.

The list just released here of the 10 most popular films that played during 1957 on the combined Army and Air Force Motion Picture Circuit in Europe gives a lie to the oft-quoted opinion that servicemen and their families don't like to see features with military themes.

The military background — or foreground—appears in four of the 10 most-attended pictures, "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Battle Hymn," "Friendly Persuasion," and "Joe Butterfly."

In fact, war is the only consistent theme in the top 10 releases, with just one musical "High Society," and just one Western, "Gunfight at O.K. Corral," refuting another report that servicemen prefer Westerns above all other film material.

More than 2,000,000 tickets, at 25c apiece, were sold on the GI theatre chain for these top films, and the number one, "Giant," alone sold over 25,000 tickets to the military personnel and their dependents in Europe.

Here's the list in order of box office admissions:

1. "Giant," (WB)
2. "The Girl Can't Help It," (20th-Fox)
3. "High Society," (MGM)
4. "Teahouse of August Moon," (MGM)
5. "Trapeze," (U. A.)
6. "Gunfight at O.K. Corral," (Par)
7. "Battle Hymn," (U)
8. "Hollywood or Bust," (Par)
9. "Friendly Persuasion," (Allied)
10. "Joe Butterfly," (U)

In France, Too, It's Old Experts Vs. Young Promise

Paris, April 8.

Though quality hasn't kept pace with quantity in the output of French pictures, some new talents have slowly been emerging in the French cinema.

The top names still are in the old guard of the French filmmakers. Among the new directors are Roger Vadim and Alexandre Astruc, who have tried to look to French youth but have tended to be electic and sensational in their treatments.

Louis Malle, Eduard Molinaro, Marcel Camus, Michel Boisrond, Norbert Carbonneaux, Claude Boissol, Jack Pinateau also are among the young hopefuls. All have demonstrated growing technical prowess, but none have as yet turned out a really top film.

Oldsters like Rene Clair, Jean Renoir, Julien Duvivier, Abel Gance, Jean Paul Le Chanois, Marcel L'Herbier, Jean Gremillon, Jean Cocteau, Claude Vermorel, Leo Joannon, Henri Calef, Carlo Rim, Jean Dveville, Christian-Jaque, Marcel Pagnol, Jacques Becker, Andre Cayatte, Robert Bresson, Marcel Carne, Jean Delannoy, Rene Clement, Claude Autant-Lara, H. G. Clouzot, Henri Decoin, Yves and Marc Allegret, Jacques Tati are turning 'em out.

There are some good workmen who come between the two groups, like Henri Verneuil, Ralph Habib, Jacqueleine Audry, John Berry, Yves Ciampi and others.

But youth has to make itself felt here to give the French film new drive and direction and to replace artifice by art to regain the French film both the prestige and the commercial interest in the great American and world markets.

Britain: High Novelty Content

By DICK RICHARDS

London, April 8.

Here as in America the tiredest maxim, "There's nothing wrong with the film industry that good films won't solve," has been worn threadbare. Its latest parroting was by director Anthony Asquith. He didn't say when the socko product was coming, nor from whom. Meantime Britain needs 80 features every year to keep the home fires burning (another tired phrase) and this is risk capital of sizeable proportions.

Caution has lately ruled here.

The lights were recently blinking red and J. Arthur Rank reacted with staff and schedule slashes. Meantime the film trade is planning as well as pruning, producing more than proverbs.

At the present reporting Rank will roll 11 big ones during the balance of 1958. That's down nine from first intentions. One of the abondoned projects is "Lawrence of Arabia" to star Dirk Borgarde and which was to have been directed by the aforesaid Anthony Asquith, of the nothing-wrong-but school of cheery sayings.

Producer Hugh Stewart and director John Paddy Carstairs will propel Britain's top funny man, Norm Wisdom via an item labelled "The Square Peg." Just returned from the States to fulfill her committment to Rank is Jeannie Carson and she ties up with Donald Sinden and Rank's recent roistering ambassador to the States, James Robertson Justice, in Compton Mackenzie's yarn, "Rockets Galore," to be done by Basil Dearden and Michael Relph.

An oldie, "39 Steps," will be re-made by the "Doctor" team, Betty Fox and Ralph Thomas, as a new vehicle for the busy, but currently indisposed Kenneth More. Husband-and-wife Bill Travers and Virginia McKenna, will, with Yvonne Mitchell, appear in "The Passionate Summer," which is a Kenneth Harper indie under the Rank banner. Julian Wartle will also make "Lightblue," a comedy with Hardy Kruger, for Rank.

The Rank Organization states with commendable caution that if conditions improve (meaning, presumably, if the tax situation is eased) its program will be reconsidered and possibly restored to the previously stated figure of 20 feature films.

British Lion, which has recently re-jigged its outfit to harness the talents of some ace producers, anticipates nine future productions. Boulting Brothers enter two more in the humor stakes. Ian Carmichal will star in "I'm All Right, Jack" (a well-known British Services' phrase which means that the speaker is doing okay for himself and to hell with anybody else wishing to get in on anything that's going!) and Terry-Thomas in "Carlton-Browne of the Foreign Office," a pic which would surely be re-titled by anybody but the irrepressible Boulting twins. The Launder-Gilliat twosome have a couple of pix coming up, "Vote for Me," a by-election comedy, and "Bridle Path," and their contract star, Bill Travers, will probably be inked for both.

With Jack Clayton directing, the Woolf Brothers signed up Lawrence Harvey, Simone Signoret and Heather Sears (a slick international trio) for "Room at the Top," from John Braine's novel. Indie producer Anthony Havelock-Allan has another Hollywood team, Jean Simmons and Stewart Granger, for "The Night Comers." Among other British Lion films entering the production fray is the screen version of Agatha Christie's "whodunit." "The Mousetrap," which, after five years is still part of the West End theatrical scene.

Deflating Chesties

With two features currently on the floor at Elstree (a drama called "No Trees in the Street," with Sylvia Syms, Stanley Holloway and Herbert Lom, and "Girls at Sea," a naval comedy with Ronald Shiner and America's Anne Kimbell), Associated-British contemplates several more. The most ambitious will be "H.M.S. Ulyssees," from the Alastair MacLean book, which A. P. B. C. hope will do for the Navy what "The Dam Busters" did for the R.A.F. "Cinderella Nightingale," from Robert Muller's novel, will examine the rise to temporary fame of a shopgirl whose only asset is a big bosom. The bosom will be Carole Lesley's. A comedy-drama, this may, it is expected, bust wide open the present show biz exploitation of no talent dames.

Ealing Films, with "Dunkirk" just released and with its current tie-up with Metro, regards the international market with confidence. A new Alec Guinness subject, based on Daphne du Maurier's novel, "The Scapegoat" will start shooting in France this summer. Other Ealing subjects scheduled for production this year include "Lord of the Flies," a novel by William Golding, "Tunes of Glory," dealing with life in the peace-time barracks of a Highland regiment, and "The Siege," which Harry Watt will direct near Sydney, while screenplay writer T. E. B. Clarke is, at present, working on a new musical comedy, "Ratcliff's Highway." Another "offbeat" project is an original about the adventures of a Dixieland band travelling around Britain on one night stands.

Warwick, which intends to concentrate on one or two big features each year, has "The Hellians" lined up. It is a Western which will probably be shot mainly in Canada and will star Henry Fonda and Ernest Borgnine. Also Vic Mature (an old Warwick favorite) is to make "The Bandit" for Warwick, with British players in support.

Most of the independent producers have enterprises afoot. Herbert Wilcox and Anna Neagle are to make another film starring Frankie Vaughan called "The Lady is a Square," the lady in question being Miss Neagle. Maxwell Setton has just started on "Monty's Double," with John Mills as the man who organizes one of the great war hoaxes of all time, the impersonation of Field Marshall Montgomery by a lieutenant, to be played by Clifton James, acting his own exploit.

Later Setton will film the life story of Joseph Conrad, the Polish ship-captain-novelist and "The Battle of Ballymaghee" 'an Irish subject for which Setton is angling for Maureen O'Hara and Paul Douglas. Finally, he will also do "The Innocent Gunman." This calls for four stars of differing nationalities. American British, French and Italian, a clear case of deliberate wooing of the international market.

George Minter of Renown has four pix nearly set for a 1958 'off.' First will be "The Rough and the Smooth," from Robin Maugham's novel to be followed by "The Falcon," which will be filmed mainly in Thailand and concerns a cabin boy who becomes the Siamese prime minister. Minter also plans another war story, "Sea of Sand," which features the Allied victories in the Eastern campaigns of World War II. Finally, Stephen King-Hall has written an original for Renown, "The Heavens Laugh," which concerns a German boy befriended by an English colonel.

One of Britain's most successful production companies, Hammer, shows no signs of pessimism, having found a golden formula . . . horror. Hammer will remake "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and also an eerie story called "The Night Creatures." The setup is also making the ambitious pic, "The Phoenix" on location in Berlin. "The Man in Half Moon Street," another thriller, and then, in quick succession, films of four novels, "Brat Farrar," "Build Us A Dam," "Charter to Danger" and "Chorus of Echoes." This widens Hammer's horror range, for James Carreras, their topper, insists that he will make horror films only until the public's appetite is sated for such films.

Major Danny Angel has three films set up for 1958, which 20th-Fox will distribute, two of them starring one of Britain's hottest bets, Kenneth More. First, "The Sheriff of Fractured Jaw," in which More will play an Englishman who becomes a sheriff. Jayne Mansfield is to co-star. More's other assignment is "Have Monocle, Will Travel," based on the true adventures of an ex-British colonel who was stunted by Britain's Daily Sketch as the man who would fulfill any legal task for their readers. Later in the year, Academy Award writer, Daniel Fuchs, will script "South of Java Head" for Angel.

Winwell Productions is also getting on the horror bandwagon with three, "The Human Beast" and "Night of the Ghoul" and another based on a story by Edgar Allan Poe. A fourth Winwell production will be a psychological thriller called "Pursuit." Monarch plans three productions this year, including "The Man from the Sea," from the Michael Innes' novel.

Britain Imports, Too

The international touch is evident in British films, too, as witness a list of foreign stars to appear in forthcoming J. Arthur Rank productions.

They include Yoko Tani from Japan, Melina Mercouri from Greece, Louis Jourdan from France, Luciana Paluzzi from Italy, Hardy Kruger from Germany and a large number of Americans.

EADY FUND LOOKS BELOW ESTIMATE

London, April 8.

New representatives are to be made to the Board of Trade by the British Film Producers Assn., drawing the attention of the government to the fact that the statutory Eady levy in its first year is likely to yield considerably less than anticipated. In the Act, which came into operation last October, it was estimated that in its first year the subsidy would total $10,500,000, but on present performance it is likely to gross somewhat less than $7,000,000.

The difference between estimate and performance is mainly because of the serious decline in attendance throughout the country, which was the subject of a special Board of Trade survey last week. In small part, too, the widespread shuttering of picture theatres is a contributory factor.

The BFPA first raised the matter with F. W. Erroll, Parliamentary Secretary to the BOT, last January, but the minister then suggested that it was too early to make a final estimate for the year. He indicated at that time, however, that action was statutorily possible and the government would act if it became necessary. The producers will now urge the government to take steps to insure that the $10,-500,000 target is reached.

Meantime, the BFPA has welcomed the action of the British Film Fund Agency (which is responsible for administering the coin) in speeding up disbursements.

'If British Tax Stays, Too Bad For Industry'

J. Arthur Rank Organization will cut its production schedule further unless the upcoming British budget incorporates concessions to the British film trade. This was reported in N.Y. by John Davis, managing director of the Rank outfit. He said the British industry had submitted an "unanswerable case" for tax relief, and that, if it weren't granted, "a material number of theatres" will close.

Rank production plans depend on the budget, but currently call for the production of 16 films in '58. Davis said he'd be interested in producing films in CineMiracle, Cinerama, etc. but indicated that the costs involved were too high.

Elaborating on his worldwide servicing deal with RKO, Davis said Mexico and Japan weren't included in the arrangements. He also said that Rank was in a position to service others similarly, but added that no discussions along that line were taking place. Under the Rank deal with RKO, latter will finance films and sell them, with the Rank Organization to take care of the physical handling.

Davis said Rank's foreign income was still rising and now accounted for about 52% of the company's total revenue. This approximately corresponds to the ratio of the major American distributors.

As for the impact of tv in Britain, Davis said it hadn't worn off yet and wasn't likely to considering that there wasn't yet saturation of the market. Britain has 12,500,000 homes and about 8,500,-000 tv sets. Also, the commercial webs have yet to be extended to certain areas of the country. Davis said there was no intention of selling any more Rank films to tv in the States.

U.K. Teenage Come-on

London, April 8.

A new policy of Saturday shows for teenagers only has been inaugurated at the Odeon and Gaumont circuits.

Teenage shows, catering to 13 to 16-year-olds, will be additional to the existing boys and girls cinema clubs, of which the Rank Organization run some 350. In addition to selected films, the program will include guest artists, talent contests and record sessions.

EDINBURGH CONCEPT: NEW IDEA FESTIVAL

By GORDON IRVING

Edinburgh, April 1.

Film directors, producers and personalities from many different nations will again congregate here Aug. 24 for the 12th Edinburgh International Film Festival.

An innovation this year will be an international confab on future trends and developments in films, with leading authorities contributing to debate.

Festival runs for three weeks, and will feature outstanding examples of what the planners term "The Living Cinema" from all over the world. Junket will run Aug. 24 to Sept. 14.

There will also be a residential school of film study.

Film Festival will be housed this year for first time in spacious new headquarters of the Edinburgh Film Guild, allowing for more accommodation all round.

An official told VARIETY: "Edinburgh remains a Festival of new ideas, of new ways of expression. It honors the adventurous, the experimental, and it recognizes the film maker as a creative artist."

Performances are skedded for each day from Aug. 24 to Sept. 14. Gala showings are set for leading city cinemas Aug. 24, 31 and Sept. 7 and 14. At these and other performances, distinguished filmmakers will introduce their own productions.

Savings Cancelled In Co-Production

Primary value of producing films abroad is no longer in cost savings, which have been wiped out, but rather in the added attraction such pictures have for the international market, Richard Gordon, partner with Charles F. Vetter Jr. in Amalgamated Productions, declares.

Gordon's comments came as he wrapped up a distribution deal with Metro for two pictures, "The Haunted Strangler," starring Boris Karloff, and "Fiend Without a Face," starring Marshall Thompson. Deal is worldwide (excepting the United Kingdom) and is on a percentage basis.

Amalgamated has been in business for two years during which time it produced 10 pictures abroad, mostly in Britain. They were all medium-budget films with definite exploitation angles, featuring a combination of local and American players. After making seven films abroad as coproductions, Gordon and Vetter formed their own unit and started producing independently, raising their own finances and making films prior to completing distribution arrangements.

For 1958, Amalgamated intends to make at least six pictures. In the past, its "The Counterfeit Plan" was handled by Warner Bros. in the Western Hemisphere and Republic Pictures released "The Fighting Wildcats."

Pointing out that the domestic market no longer allowed the recoupment of negative costs on medium-budget films, Gordon stressed the need for turning out product that could appeal worldwide in theatrical distribution. He said he and Vetter had plans for producing in Germany, where talent was plentiful and the marke sound.

BRITAIN IN A TV-ALTERED FILM WORLD; RANK'S MARKETS NOW 52% O'SEAS

By ARTHUR WATKINS
(President, British Film Producers Assn.)

London.

With the limiting of Hollywood film production in the face of intensive television competiton and the resulting shortage of product available to exhibitors, both in the U. S. and other countries, there is obviously a great chance for the European film in the markets of the world. A prospect is opening out which would have seemed impossible five years ago. The identity of language between this country and the U. S. gives Britain an obvious advantage in this field so far as the American market is concerned.

Expansion of the export market is daily becoming a factor of increasing importance for film producers everywhere, following on the opposition which each country in turn is experiencing not only from television but from other forms of recreation to which the public are turning. Hollywood from its earliest days recognized the importance of this export market and, throughout its heyday, it was the strength of American film production that it was able to clear the cost of a picture at home and make its profit abroad.

One could not fail to admire the drive and efficiency with which American companies, under the M.P.A.A. organized, expanded and maintained sales organizations for Hollywood films in all the countries of the world. European countries have now recognized this vital field and the competition for foreign screen time is very keen, particularly in those countries, of which there are too many, were licenses are restricted.

One of the first British companies to assess realistically the importance of foreign expansion has been the Rank Organization, which now maintains its own distribution setup in 27 countries.

John Davis, its managing director, stated very recently in New York that Rank's foreign income was on the increase and now stood at 52% of all income. Further evidence of the importance which the Rank Organization attach to sales abroad has been provided by formation a year ago of Rank Film Distributors of America Inc. with headquarters in New York and branches throughout the U. S. This now organization is already making rapid headway in the American domestic market.

April 15—'B' Day

British production is fully equipped to take advantage of the now expanding world market. The British industry as a whole is anxiously awaiting the result of the budget on April 15, when it is earnestly hoped that the strong plea which has been made for total abolition of entertainments tax will succeed and that British producers, distributors and exhibitors will have the crippling tax burden lifted from their backs and a real impediment to progress thus removed. Good news on Budget Day will have an immediate effect on production plans throughout British studios.

At a recent meeting of producers it was agreed that a figure of 92 British feature films could be accepted as the number likely to be made during the forthcoming quota year. This figure will undoubtedly be increased if tax relief is given. There are 12 studios in the United Kingdom with a total of 49 stages, all as efficiently and modernly equipped as any in the world.

Foreign stars, directors and producers in increasing numbers arrive daily at London Airport. During the past month and during the next the following have been working or will be working alongside British colleagues in the making of British films—Laslo Benedek, Billy Wilder, Stanley Donen, Mark Robson, George Pal, Joseph Kaufman, Raoul Walsh, Charlton Heston, Cary Grant, Ingrid Bergman, Robert Stack, Stewart Granger, Jean Simmons, Jeff Chandler, Jack Palance, Victor McLagen Kathryn Grayson and Jayne Mansfield. There is an unmistakable and dramatic transfer of emphasis in film production from Hollywood to this country. London is rapidly becoming one of the world's peak film production centres.

The prospect opening up before British producers is bright. There is a great chance and it must not be lost. Success will be assured if certain vital factors are borne in mind.

Hollywood Set the Pattern

Creative talent from abroad, whether from America or other countries, should be welcomed and absorbed. This is no time for the narrow parochial view which seeks at all costs to keep the foreigner out. The greatness of Hollywood rested on its power to absorb and use talent from every corner of the world. The experience of Hollywood gained in its distinguished past can be allied to British native talent in every field of film production to ensure a happy and successful marriage between the two. At the same time a proper proportion must be maintained between the extent of the British and American contribution. The American influence must not be allowed so to predominate that the resulting film, while observing the formalities necessary to achieve British registration is to all intents and purposes an American film in spirit and in content and will be recognized as such whever it is shown. That kind of film would be rightly regarded as an abuse of our quota system and an unjustifiable encroachment on the funds available through the Statutory Levy and as such properly resented by British producers.

Can Have Its Own Character

The result, furthermore, can often be a bad film, in which the true balance has been disturbed, the story distorted and Americanized to attract U. S. audiences, and the picture falling between the two stools of the two countries and attracting the public in neither. Where, on the other hand, the proportions between the British and foreign contribution are properly controlled the result can be a film which is truly international in character, which is based on a story selected with this object in view, and which thus provides opportunities for the characteristic contribution which the talent of each country has to make. One need only mention "The Bridge on the River Kwai."

Apart from the film which is international in character, success in foreign markets can be equally achieved by the picture which is truly national in character, and some of the best and most successful British films have been just this, representing the way of life in our country to the rest of the world. There are however pitfalls here, and there have been cases of such films enjoying a great success in this country but failing to make quite the same mark abroad. The reason is perhaps that an important lesson has not been learned—or if learned, forgotten—namely that the story of the film has to tell must be one that can be understood by audiences everywhere and not so rooted in the native idiom that its true impact can only be felt in its home country.

The same is true in reverse of American films coming in this country.

If we here are to enjoy, for example, a story of small-town life in an American state, it must be presented in such a way that we recognize the universality of the problems raised in the film, the general application of its troubles and trials and humors to human beings everywhere. It comes down in the end to a simple matter—and yet often so very far from simple—of good story telling; that basic requirement of the successful picture, without which all the work of its directors, stars and technicians is lost—a good script.

Today then there is a great and rewarding chance for the European film in the markets of the world. That chance is a particularly real and exciting one for British films in the U. S. and producers in this country were never in better shape or better equipped or more eager to seize their chance.

Cash for Showmanship

London, April 8.

Robert Parsons, manager of the Apollo Theatre, Ardleigh, Manchester, has won first prize in the Associated British national publicity contest and at a luncheon last Friday (28) was handed a cheque for $560.

Runner-up in the contest was Douglas Adams, manager of the Regal, Kirkcaldy, who collected $280, with third prize going to Nat Matthews of the Ritz, Leyton, who received $140. Latter was also the winner of this year's MGM contest.

Total prize money in the contest amounts to $2,800 and, additionally, there will be an award of $28 to the assistant manager in each of the winning theatres.

Ireland's Ardmore Studio Starts With Two Stages; Pix Under British Quota

Dublin, April 8.

Ireland's first film studios at Ardmore, Bray, near Dublin, sponsored by Louis Elliman and Emmet Dalton, who are joint managing directors of the enterprise, swings into operation this week (April 7) with the production of a series of films featuring the Abbey Theatre Players.

The complete project involves four large stages and one smaller stage on a 38-acre site. The initial part of the development, however, is confined to two large stages and the smaller one, together with administrative block, workshops, etc.

Although located in Ireland, films made at Ardmore will qualify for British quota. The Board of Trade has already given its official interpretation of the Quota Act to this effect and, as previously reported, the Association of Cine Technicians has come to an understanding on the same question with the Irish Unions. Negotiations are already in progress for a number of British producers to use the new studios in the coming months.

Each of the two main stages in the first part of the development measures 100 ft. by 80 ft. A processing laboratory is planed as a subsequent adjunct to the operations.

DUST OFF OLDIES

Metro's Six 'Most Requested Library Items' Reissued

London, April 1.

Metro is reissuing in the United Kingdom six of its boxoffice hits of past years. They are "Annie Get Your Gun," with Betty Hutton and Howard Keel, "Random Harvest" starring Ronald Colman and Greer Garson, Luise Rainer's "The Great Waltz," "Anchors Aweigh," with Gene Kelly and Frank Sinatra, "San Francisco," the Gable-Tracy starrer and the Laurel and Hardy "Nothing But Trouble."

Metro asserts that this half dozen, covering drama, romance, musicals and slapstick, represents "the most frequently requested from its vast library."

Merchants Rescue Cinema

London, April 1.

A picture theatre, which has lost $8,400 and paid almost $22,000 in admission tax since 1956, has been saved from going dark by a $2,800 gift from the local council and businessmen. The cinema in W. Drayton, Middlesex, which serves several thousand people, has been operating at a weekly loss of $112.

Commenting on the gift, the managing director of the theatre said: "The money will help us to keep going until the Budget, when we hope for relief from entertainments tax."

Inside Stuff—International

Arca's production, "The Third Sex" (later retitled "Other Than You and I"), was Germany's most controversial film of the past year because of its depiction of homosexuality. Critics objected to film's tendency to equate homosexual and modern art. (A central figure, an intellectual nance, is a modern art collector.) Controversy was intensified by the fact that Veit Harlan, of "Jew Suss" association, directed.

To start with, the Freiwillige Selbstkontrolle, W. Germany's self-censorship group, rejected the film in its original version. Quite a number of scenes had to be cut and others added for release. The result film got rather distorted—or, quote Harlan: "Nearly just the opposite of what I had in mind."

"My prime intention," director said, "was to oppose the German law (paragraph 175) which regards the homosexuals as criminals. This paragraph, which in most civilized countries doesn't exist, is inhuman. People who are like that can't be punished. Of course, my film didn't intend to approve the public activity of these people. On the contrary, it was also an attack against those who attempt to seduce juveniles. Such persons, of course, are criminals. I tried to be as objective and tolerant as possible and to further understanding for those who are homosexuals by nature. My film showed, for instance, a scene in which the homosexual art collector (the evil-doer) looks up a lawyer as he needs a counsel. The lawyer, a queer himself, gives him a turndown saying that homosexuals have a special duty and responsibility to behave decently and not to trespass the law. This very important scene was cut too. And all these cuts contributed to distort this film's message."

Not just occasionally but quite frequently Berlin film fans query about old foreign (mostly American) film star names. They want to know whatever became of those once celebrated screen personalities. In most cases, the local German answer men are helpless since they have lost track themselves and lack files. Here are some recently mentioned names (arranged alphabetically): Renee Adoree, Vilma Banky, Richard Barthelmess, Warner Baxter, Monte Blue, Clara Bow, George O'Brien, Ronald Colman, Jackie Cooper, Richard Cromwell, Hoot Gibson, William Haines, James Hall, Jack Holt, Ben Lyon, Rod La Roque, Douglas MacLean, Zasu Pitts, Milton Sills, Wladimir Sokoloff, Franchot Tone.

A court suit is probably upcoming on the planned Dino DeLaurentiis production of "Grand Tour," for which Marilyn Monroe has been reportedly cast, with France as the setting for the pic. A French writer, Ary Arcady, in a letter published by Paris' "Le Figaro," claims precedence on the subject via a screenplay he wrote and deposited with the French Authors and Publishers office back in 1955. Writer claims that theme of his script is "entirely similar" to that of the planned DeLaurentiis production, which French director Rene Clement is slated to direct, and that he excludes all possibility of coincidence due to originality of the subject matter. The DeLaurentiis script is based on an original story by John and Rebecca Michael. Arcady, whose script was titled "Pullmann 57," says he's ready to go to court to defend his interests.

While the film festival prizewinning Indian film "Pather Panchali," a lyrical human document, goes begging for playdates in the U.S., where sex is now art, a web of arties have been built up in Paris, and around France, to unspool just those such features as "Panchali" which regular and even so-called arty exhibs are afraid will lay a box-office egg.

Members are all privately owned theatres banded together under an organization called the Cinemas D'Art Et D'Essai (Film Theatres of Art and Experiment) with 10 in Paris and 93 in France. It also has contact with like setups in other countries (West Germany, Italy, England, Scandanavia, Benelux Countries), and with 800 theatres in it they can spell a career for offbeat pix.

When Billy Wilder was in Berlin last November, he urged local press to honor the late Ernst Lubitsch by a memorial plaque on the house in which Lubitsch was born there. Wilder called Lubitsch the greatest of all German film directors. Club of Berlin Film Journalists carried the ball. Plaque couldn't go to Lubitsch's actual house of birth since it's in Soviet Sector; so memorial tablet is up at the Zoo Palast.

Vienna film studio technicians wonder sometimes what sort of people Austrians are thought to be by Americans. One inquiry from a unit manager, "Can towels be purchased in Austria?" provoked sarcasm. "We have been supposedly civilized for some hundreds of years and we do occasionally wash.

2,000 CHINESE WAITERS USED AS FILMS EXTRAS

London, April 8.

About 2,000 Chinese extras, recruited from all parts of Britain, will report to the Metro-British Studios at Elstree at the end of this month as extras for "Inn of Sixth Happiness" (20th), this may create a crisis in almost every Chop Suey cafe in the country. To get this number of real Chinese to meet the crowd scene requirements, 20th-Fox was compelled to seek them in nearly every Chinese rstaurant here. Most of them are waiters but a few are also cooks. They come from restaurants in the West End, in Limehouse—the pre-war Chinatown in London—and from dock areas.

The presence of this large contingent will also give 20th-Fox its own catering problems. It is making plans for native dishes to be available to the extras. "Happiness" began to roll at Elstree last Monday (31). It stars Ingrid Bergman, Curt Jurgens and Robert Donat.

Originally it had been planned to film location backgrounds in Hong Kong but as there weren't enough British-Chinese subjects available, the pic's quota ticket might have been in jeopardy. In any event, the unit discovered that parts of North Wales look even better than the genuine article.

Whet Public Awareness Of Todd-AO System In Britain Via Contest

London, April 8.

As part of its campaign to launch Todd-AO in UK the Circuit's Management Association has tied up with the hefty circulation of the Daily Express in a contest spotlighting the first Todd-AO starrer, "South Pacific," which opens at the Dominion on April 21. The competition offers a vacation for two in Honolulu, plus expenses to a total value of $12,600.

The "South Pacific" contest, started on Monday (31), is planned for two weeks and contestants are asked to imagine that they are in charge of a campaign to publicize the film and list, in order of its appeal, 10 of its most outstanding features.

British Tourist Biz Up 7%

London, April 1.

The British tourist industry got off to a good start this year with January returns showing a 7% rise over the same month last year. Foreign visitors to Britain in the first month of the year totalled 41,500.

Americans accounted for the greater part of the increase, the total of 6,000 U.S. visitors being 17% more than in January 1957. Three-quarters of all U.S. visitors came to Britain by air.

B.O. Tax Still The Virus Enervating British Cinema

By DICK RICHARDS

London, April 8.

In almost any direction in Britain you are liable to behold a cinema which is either in the red, or precariously poised. Since the war ended around 500 have shuttered, but of this number about 400 quit the struggle since the beginning of 1956. Some 4 100 motion picture houses remain but prospects for a quarter of them are edgy.

The big bad wolf is, of course, falling attendances. In 1949 the 1,500 million attendances of the previous year dropped by 5½%. Since then the decline has steadily increased until last year, when the number of tabs sold fell with a dull thud by 18% and attendances sagged below the danger line of 1,000 million on the year.

What are the causes of this downbeat story? The competition of television with the reluctance of patrons to pay higher prices for seats when still paying off on their tv sets, the discriminatory entertainments tax (which can now be fairly referred to as a cinema tax, pending any possible good news in the April 15 budget), rising costs in staff wages and general administration of cinemas. All these factors have hit hard.

Witness the recent case when two cinemas on a major circuit turned into all-star wrestling arenas on which, with one show a week, they can profit because no tax is payable on wrestling as an entertainment.

Sounds Like States

Close reading of the pages of VARIETY in the past few years has repeatedly borne home to students of the problem the similarity of the exhibitors' woe in Britain as against the United States and Canada. Here, as overseas, the exhibitors have sometimes been charged, not without merit, with sloppy managerial performance.

Too little attention to the psychology of the moviegoer in a television-and-parking-problem age is true here as in the States. Britons complain, as do Yanks, of discourteous staffs, failure of the theatre to schedule its showings to harmonize with public transportation. Something of the old "family atmosphere" of the British cinema has gone out, and a pity.

Yet for all the pessimism and criticism, and the cold sweats induced by video it remains a fact here, as in the U. S., that when the picture is a blockbuster, the crowds come out.

The sale of ice cream, soft drinks, confectionery and similar profitable sidelines has naturally sunk with falling attendances and the bigger circuits have had to retrench. Thus the Rank circuit has turned many of its cinema-cafes into dance halls, in an effort to attract people. The ABC circuit waved an optimistic flag at its recent luncheon for its champion staff managers, but executive D. J. Goodlatte had to admit that times were hard and, without tax relief, would become even harder and called for even greater effort in the future from his staffs.

Dickens' 7-Times-Told 'A Tale of Two Cities'; Record Given in Full

Milwaukee.

Editor, VARIETY:

In his appraisal of the Rank production of Dickens' unforgettable historical novel of the French Revolution, "A Tale of Two Cities" (1859), VARIETY's London reviewer, Rich, notes (in your Feb. 12 issue, p. 18) that this is the third time that "Dickens' famed yarn crops up on the screen."

Actually it is the seventh, and VARIETY's older readers and exhibitors may have seen or shown all seven in the course of the last 40 years. For the sake of straightening out the half-forgotten record it may not be amiss to recall briefly some of the more memorable adaptations of this celebrated British classic.

In 1911 William Humphreys directed a version for Vitagraph that was released both one reel at a time and/or as a single three-reel feature that was praised for its economy of footage at a time when the rental-conscious producers were already prone to pad or stretch out virtually every short feature to 4-5 reels. Its innovations in lighting and the director's experimentation with "sculptural masses" also attracted favorable comment. The film enjoyed a gala premiere in Calcutta that was attended by both British and Indian dignitaries. In its cast Maurice Costello starred as Sydney Carton, and he was supported in style by such favorites as James Morrison and the late Norma Talmadge.

When the seven-reel Fox version of "A Tale of Two Cities" was released in 1917, a British correspondent in the American trade press, J. B. Sutcliffe, noted that this is "the fourth adaptation of the Dickens story offered to exhibitors" and by far the best so far for its "careful production." Frank Lloyd, its producer, achieved his first major directorial triumph for this rather selective version of the Dickens novel that featured William Farnum in the dual Carton-Darnay role. In his support appeared such stalwarts of that era as Charles Clary (Marquis St. Evremonde), Herschel Mayall (Defarge), Ralph Lewis (Roger Cly), Josef Swickard (Dr. Manette), Willard Louis (Mr. Stryker), and Jewel Carmen (Lucie). The unbilled Florence Vidor also scored in a bit as Mimi.

Some people regarded the then 41-year-old Farnum as a little too old for his double role and thought that his performance failed to capture the essence of Carton's psychology. Comparisons were drawn between his interpretation and that of the English actor, Mar-

Britons in Berlin

Berlin, April 8.

Foreign producers keep coming and going here. Latest to utilize the Berlin locale is Sabre Productions of London which shot exteriors for its "Two-Headed Spy." Stayed nine days with an American producer (Hal Chester) and American (ex-Hungarian Andre de Toth) director. Cast, headed by Jack Hawkins, is British.

"The Two-Headed Spy" concerns spy who worked both sides.

Jack Hawkins, film's lead, was given press reception by Columbia which will distribute "Spy."

HATE THAT TAX, LOVE THAT BARDOT

Confidence Runs Strong But Television Clouds Appear: Comes Common Market — Then What?

By HAROLD MYERS

London, April 8.

The national film industries throughout the whole of Europe are burdened by heavy taxation, restricted by quotas, are alert to the growing competitive danger of television, and are nearly all dependent on subsidies. Yet, in London, Paris, Rome, Berlin, Munich, Hamburg, Vienna and Copenhagen there is a stimulating feeling of confidence, an air of expectancy, together with a realization of tough times ahead which must be acepted as a challenge.

Each of the national industries has its own particular and acute problems. In Great Britain, standing streets ahead of all the other issues, is the crushing weight of the admission tax, which drains some $80,000,000 annually away from the boxoffice. Industry will learn if any pity is in store when the Chancellor of the Exchequer presents his post-Easter Budget. If he has accepted the trade plea for total abolition there will be an immediate green-light in production expansion, and various films which have been on the drawing board for some time will start rolling with the minimum delay.

If, on the other hand, the Chancellor ignores the trade claim, there can be little doubt that the coming year will see a further retrenchment in British production and the shuttering of even more theatres. Indeed, at this point, one man's say-so is the key to the future prosperity of British motion picture industry.

The British film industry has it bad in more ways than one. The rate of taxation is higher in the United Kingdom than anywhere else in Europe. To aggravate the situation, Britain, too, is the only European country which has a serious rival in television. As of this date, more than 7,000,000 receivers are licensed here and the commercial network, inaugurated in the Fall of 1955, is now rapidly blanketing the entire country. Feature films are regularly shown on both channels and although there is a plan to regulate this in the future, the immediate situation is urgent and critical.

Britain Alone

Nowhere else in Europe does the film industry face this dual menace of tax and tv on the same scale. In Germany, for example, admission duty is roughly 25% of the receipts; and over the past years takings have been mounting in a healthy style. Only in the first quarter of this year was there any indication of a downward trend in the sales graph, whereas in other countries the decline has been going on steadily for some years.

In Germany they are only just beginning to feel the pinch from tv. Altogether, in the Western half of the country, there are less than one-and-a-half million receivers—and only one channel under State management. The second outlet is expected within a year and this will probably be a commercial operation—very likely modelled on the British pattern.

Latter development will undobutedly spark an increase in the number of home receivers and the competitive spirit may result in a higher standard of programming which could lure potential moviegoers away from their theatres. But for the time being the German industry is mainly riding high with a healthy domestic market, yet with a growing realization that German-made pictures have not yet made an appreciable dent in the potential foreign markets.

France, with less than 1,000,000 tv receivers spread throughout the entire country, does not, at this time, worry unduly about the threat of the home screen. And along the boulevards in the vicinity of the Champs Elysees, where most of the film fraternity are to be seen, there is a healthy feeling of confidence. Much of this, it must be admitted, is due the the personal success of one French star, who is now a hot b.o. attraction, not only in her native Paris, but throughout America, through Britain, through Germany and through most of the other countries where star personalitie.. sell pictures. One doesn't need a crystal ball to identify this current b.o. phenomenon. Brigitte Bardot is now a household name and one of the growing number of continental stars whose pix have crashed the language barriers for top results in all the top markets.

The French film industry, however, is far from being dependent on just one star alone. The success of Miss Bardot is a spur to the others and there are many top names on the studio rosters who have already earned international acclaim. There's Maurice Chevalier, for example; Fernandel, who recently completed a film with Bob Hope; Martine Carol, now starring in "The Phoenix" which is in production in Berlin; and Simone Signoret, starring in "Room at the Top" a British pic under the Romulus banner. Just a few of the top-flight French names. The European film scene, more now than ever before, is being activized by the increasing volume of American production and co-production.

BOT Confirms Big Cinema Decline

London, April 8.

The slump in the number of cinemas throughout Britain was confirmed by the latest Board of Trade returns published here last week. Total admissions in the final quarter of last year, at nearly 190,000,000, were 22% below the same period in the previous year. Survey cites this is the highest rate of quarterly decline that has so far occurred though results were probably affected to some extent by the amount of sickness prevalent during the period.

Gross takings, at $56,840,000 for the quarter, were 16% below the previous year. The fall was less than that in admissions because of increased prices which were introduced last fall which resulted in an average price per ticket of approximately 29c.

Total gross takings during 1957, at $252,160,000, were $22,200,000 below last year and the lowest annual figure recorded since the BOT began compiling statistics in 1950.

To complete the depressing picture, the report shows that admissions last year varied from 57% to 78% of the 1950 level. To some extent, the fall in admissions is related to the growth of tv coverage in the country.

The report also adds that each year since 1950 has shown a net decrease in the number of picture theatres, but closures in 1956 and 1957 were much higher than in the preceding years. Last year's total was 204 closures, seven openings and 22 reopening, making a net loss of 175.

A & F Film Corp. of Montreal, Canada, marks its 20th anniversary this year. Indie film distributor is in both the theatrical and tv field and is launching the "A & F Anniversary Fantasy" to tie in with its anni.

212 U. S. PERFORMERS IN ENGLAND IN 1957

London, April 1.

A total of 212 American artists were given permits to work in Britain last year, including 153 who came in as individuals and 59 as members of unit companies. That is revealed in the annual report of British Actors' Equity, which shows that the grand total of foreign permits for the year was 1,572. Italy was in the lead with 247, including 214 for opera, the Soviet Union third with 178 and France fourth with 169.

Feature films provided the main source of employment for visiting American artists, with a total of 71. Ballet was runner-up with 53 and commercial tv was third with 23. BBC-TV accounted for 13. Straight plays and musicals added 27, opera a further 12 and revues three. There was one in the miscellaneous category.

The Soviet Union total is made up of 118 miscellaneous and 60 for BBC-TV.

British Exhibs Exceeded Last Quota Obligations

London, April 1.

British exhibitors exceeded their legal quota obligations for the year 1956-7, according to an analysis prepared by the Board of Trade returns. The three major circuits (Odeon, Gaumont-British and Associated British) were particularly well ahead of their obligations, each giving 37% screen time to British first features.

The BOT returns are based on 3,952 theatres, 135 of which were entitled to quota relief. Altogether, 111 cinemas are exempt from the quota.

After allowing for reliefs, the average prescribed quotas for the 3,952 theatres were 25.5% for first features and 23.8% for the supporting program. Over-89% either achieved or exceeded their first feature quotas and 80% their supporting quotas The majority who failed to meet their obligations did so by a narrow margin.

Aussie Film Biz May Hit Record

Sydney, April 1.

This Easter should prove beyond all reasonable doubt to the cinema crepe hangers that there's nothing the matter with the Aussie boxoffice when there's a good pic on the screen. It should also prove that the public is prepared to pay top prices to view the type of fare it wants to see irrespective of any other outside opposition—tele, plush clubs and late-closing hotels.

In this key city, this Easter will see probably the strongest product lineup ever to emerge from Hollywood. Right now two blockbusters are doing turnaway biz at top admissions—"Bridge on River Kwai" (Col) and "10 Commandments" (Par).

In addition to these two hits, there's "Around World in 80 Days" (UA), and "An Affair to Remember" (20th), both hitting the six-month mark. Coming in for Easter will be "Peyton Place" (20th), "Farewell to Arms" (20th) and "Raintree County" (M-G).

Distribs and exhibs have got together in an allout effort to win the patrons back to the cinema. There's showmanship seen here today that was missing during the last 12 months as pix hit the skids simply because of an antiquated idea that any piece of celluloid was good enough for the public.

The late Mike Todd showed the locals what could be done via specialized ballyhoo to sell a pic. His "80 Days" blueprint forever will remain a monument to a great showman in this part of the world.

The great success of "Kwai" and "10 C's" here at increased admissions has even put a gag on those major newspapers allied to teevee from taking slaps at pix and telling their readers that "Hollywood is all washed up."

Queues have been lining up in Indian summer weather to purchase seats for the top films far in advance as three weeks.

SEEKING DAVID NIVEN, NOW ON VIDPIX TRIP

Hollywood, April 8.

David Niven is being paged by Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger to star in "The Reason Why," which they plan to film in England this summer. Niven starred for the pair in 1946 in "Stairway to Heaven."

C.B.F. Woodham-Smith tome is based on background of the charge of the Light Brigade during the Crimean war.

Govt. Tells Unions It's Worried About Pix Biz

London, April 8.

The British government has told film industry unions that it is anxious for the future of the British film industry. The statement was made by F. J. Erroll, Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, when he met a deputation from the six industry unions on a revision of the Quota Act which expires in 1960.

The unions main proposals already have been submitted to the government in memorandum form and were amplified by the delegation.

Campaign To Kayo Tax On Brit. Cinema Ducats Ends; Wait Govt. Ruling

By HAROLD MYERS

London, April 8.

There's just one week to go to Budget Day (15) but the campaign to abolish the cinema tax, which reached its peak a few days back with a spate of political activity, has virtually come to an end. The British picture industry is now anxiously awaiting the decision of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

It is no exaggeration to say that on his Budget speech depends the future and stability of the British industry. In a bold and imaginative campaign, which has won the support of politicians and the press throughout the country, a united industry has made a forthright plea for total abolition of the cinema tax.

This, admittedly, would cost the treasury some $80,000,000 every year, but this, it is argued, is a small price to pay for saving the British pix industry. If the Chancellor fails to concede the claim, the next few months will witness mass closure of theatres which have been hanging on in the hope of relief. It will see a further decline in the volume of production and will mark even further rationalization in distribution.

Although the industry has been campaigning vigorously over the years for tax relief, this is the first time they've gone all out for total abolition. It has been obliged to do so because of the drastic drop in theatre receipts throughout the country. For the first time since the war, admissions have fallen below the 1939 level and, as was conceded by a government spokesman in the House of Lords a fortnight ago, there is no sign that the drop is being halted.

One of the more ambitious moves in the campaign was a special meeting in the House of Commons at which stars, producers and exhibitors explained the urgency of the problem to more than 200 Members of Parliament. Sir Michael Balcon summed up the trade's contention that it is not worried about tv—it just wants the chance to fight it on an equal footing.

Separate Horror Film Rating Plan Hits Snag

London, April 1.

Introduction of a separate certificate for horror pictures by the British Board of Film Censors has been rated undesirable by the Cinema Consultative Committee. It was suggested that the "H" certificate should be revived in order that patrons would be able to distinguish a horror pic from the normal fare barred to those under 16 under the existing "X" rating.

After considering the idea, the committee found it difficult to believe that patrons were unable to judge for themselves from the title of the offering and its advertising whether or not it was a horror film. It was also pointed out that there had been a tendency recently for horror pix to introduce other elements which might merit the "X" tag.

2 BRITISH PRODUCER ORGS AGREE ON UNIONS

London, April 8.

The two British organizations representing film producers have agreed to work jointly on all labor matters. They have co-operated since last summer on an ad hoc basis, but have now made formal arrangements for the future.

In a joint statement last week the British Film Producers Assn. and the Federation of British Film Makers announced that future negotiations with the unions will be conducted on a joint basis, but day-to-day problems arising out of the interpretation and application of the agreements will be dealt with through the labor relations department of the BFPA. The unions concerned have agreed that in future the Federation will be treated as a signatory to the existing agreements negotiated between themselves and the BFPA.

Arthur T. L. Watkins, the BFPA prexy, said that the Federation would be represented on the Association's labor relations committee and that Federation members would receive all the reports issued by the personnel department.

Collins New Chairman British Lion Studio Co.

London, April 8.

Douglas Collins, recently named chairman of British Lion Films, has now been appointed to a similar position with British Lion Studio Co. He succeeds Harold C. Drayton, who resigned because of pressure of other business activities.

Sir David Cunynghame has also resigned his seat on the board of the studio company. He's being replaced by Sidney Gilliat, who recently became a director of British Lion Films.

Hawaiian Film Trade Holds at 1957 Total

Honolulu, April 8.

Motion picture theatre patronage in this area is "about the same as last year," according to Fred G. Williams, president of Consolidated Amus. Co., Hawaii's major circuit.

Williams agree with mainland contentions that "it take a big picture these days." He cited "10 Commandments" (Par) with its 11-week run and the present first-run showing of "Sayonara," stretching into sixth week at Kuhio Theatre.

Rank Launches 1st Sat.

London, April 8.

The Rank Organization launched its first ever Saturday (5) morning teenage show last weekend at the Gaumont, Shepherd's Bush and contract star Anne Heywood and bandleader Eric Delaney were on hand for the preem. The program combined selected films, with disk sessions and guest spots filled by amateur and professional talent. During the next three weeks the theatre will run a teenage talent contest.

The venture will extend next Saturday (12) to Southampton and will gradually spread to other parts of the country. The Rank Organization also launched a teenage talent contest last week as a tieup with "6.5 Special."

Aussie Unions Fight Pix-to-TV

Sydney, April 1.

Aussie projectionists and other powerful allied show biz unionists have told distributors here to lay off tele product deals irrespective of the celluloid vintage. The combined union force, an ultra-strong setup in this territory has threatened to blacklist pix dated into cinemas by those distributors slapping additional cream on their financial cake via the selling of pix to the local tv outfits.

Independent exhibs, too, are marshalling forces to curb distribs going overboard on tele sales on a bid to upbeat revenue here. It's understood the unionists will back the independents in any mooted battle with the distribs.

In the Newcastle zone, important industrial centre, exhibitors are reported tabooing the Warner product following a heavy tv sale by this distrib outfit. The independents are now linking with other exhibs to present a united front in a product nix.

Key showmen here point out that the major newspapers presently are all out to downbeat the film biz. Stories about the decline in production, studios going into the red, cinema shutdowns, etc., are front-paged in the dailies. Showmen say this hurtful propaganda is understood when it's realized that all the key newspapers here are top stockholders in commercial tele stations.

British Techni Profit Off $24,906 from '57

London, April 8.

Technicolor, Ltd., in common with the film industry in general, has had a difficult year, according to its chairman's statement at the annual meeting. Profits for 1957 amounted to $438,970, which is $24,906 less than the previous year. There were 154,377,354 feet of film sold during the year or a decline of 19%.

While concerned at the marked drop in both profit and business, Techni announced it faces the future with confidence, mainly because it has manufactured and installed equipment which will enable it to process 65m film. It has tied up with Loew's to process "Ben Hur," which will be lensed in 65m negative film. Pointing out the value of Technicolor as a boxoffice boost, the chairman referred to VARIETY's January list of 14 "all time boxoffice champs," all of which have grossed more than $9,000,000.

ITALY

The Situation In Its Film Industry

By EITEL MONACO
(President, A.N.I.C.A.)

Rome, April 8.

The work achieved by Italian film production in 1957, the recognitions of quality obtained by Italian films in all the Film Festivals of 1957, and only recently the bestowal of the Oscar for the best foreign film to "Le notti di Cabiria," permit us to express an optimistic valuation on the prospects of our national cinematographic industry.

The first data on grosses in this country also contradict the fears of a serious reduction in the number of spectators due to the powerful development made by television in Italy. In fact, the number of tickets sold and the cash takings have undergone a reduction of less than 3%.

In Italy in 1957 we have had about 760 million spectators who have spent 112 billion lire in the cinema, figures which give the lie to those who maintained that the public itself is deserting our cinemas.

However it is necessary to bear in mind that a critical situation for the exhibition sector has occurred because of the increase in the number of film houses in Italy. This involves the division of the cash takings among an excessive number of cinemas; the number of cinemas has exactly doubled in the last eight years, rising to more than 16,000 among all-season theatres and open arenas. All this has caused a reduction of the average cash takings of individual cinemas and of the average profit of individual films, making the burden of the taxes which fall on cinema entertainment felt more heavily: in fact our cinema in the twelve months of 1957 has paid about 30% of its takings into the Italian State Treasury.

With regard to economic progress of the production and the film rentals, the volume of foreign films put in circulation on our market in 1957 has been about the same as that of the previous year: 240 American films and 120 European films. The Italian film production has, on the other hand, reached the quota of 130 films in 1957, with an increase of 20% over the previous year. With regard to this, it is necessary to emphasize the development of films made in coproduction: of the 130 films produced in 1957, more than 40%, that is 55, have been made by Italian firms in association with foreign firms, a half in Italy and a half abroad: also in the last year, the majority of the co-produced films have been made with France, with 37 films, 14 have been made with Spain, and four with Germany.

The commercial results of the new production have been satisfactory on the whole. In the peak months of the "high" season (December-January) in the major cinemas in the most important Italian cities the cash takings of Italian films have increased by more than 50%, in comparison with the previous season. All in all, in the year 1957, Italian films have realized about a third of the total cash take in the national cinemas.

Some of our best films have aroused great interest abroad and have been awarded more prizes than in any previous record year. Two recent films by Federico Fellini have achieved highest recognition with the award of the Oscar for the best foreign film shown in the United States, and in all the Festivals of 1957 Italian films have been the object of the widest approval from international critics and public.

We have reason to hope that these recognitions, supported by the enterprise of UNITALIA FILM, will increase the interest of the international public in our production.

The Italian Cinema has always aimed at the improvement of both the artistic and spectacular level of production. The Association of the Italian Cinematographic Industrials has, in 1957, launched many enterprises, among which two are of great importance: a series of meetings for the exponents of national literature to achieve a greater contribution of the latter sector in the search for ideas and subjects for our films, and the creation of a "Study Centre" to assist our producers in the choice and in the working out of subjects in order to attain the greatest approval with the public of the international market.

These efforts have been made with the idea of a wider action towards the improvement of conditions in which our film industry must operate. In fact it is necessary to go on to a revision of the heavy taxes in the home market, to extend the actual sources of credit for our industry, to continue with the enterprises of international collaboration undertaken by the Italian cinema, on the basis of the experience of the past years within the framework of the needs of the Europeon common market.

A few results have already been reached: we have reduced the cost of production, selected our industrial schemes, made an organic system of international agreements: I think I can confirm that we have put an end to the all too hurried prophecies of those who until last year talked of the imminent closing and failure of our studios.

The Italian film industry can today say that it has overcome the period of greatest difficulty in the last two years and above all that it has used this experience as a lesson which will help towards a more profitable future.

On the other hand, the difficulties of the cinema industry are not only Italian: the arrival of new forms of competitive entertainment raises the problm of quality and of industrial organization. The Italian cinema during the last year has worked hard to find a solution to these problems in the conviction of being able to bring a not irrelevant contribution to the future of the cinema.

Seven-Times-Told-Toll

tin Harvey, and Farnum's acting was criticized for its lack of the spiritual exaltation that Harvey projected to his audiences.

Britain's Herbert Wilcox released his seven-reel version of the "Tale" in 1926 under the title of "The Only Way." Its immediate source was the stage play by Freeman Wills and Frederick Langbridge. In America this film was distributed by United Artists.

The version of the "Tale" that most people will recall (due on TV any moment?) was that produced in 1935 by David O. Selznick for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in its halcyon days. It was directed by Jack Conway with some interesting revolutionary sequences arranged by Val Lewton and Jacques Tourneur. This two-hour feature boasted probably the most superb cast ever assembled anywhere to animate this old fiction: among others such luminaries of stage and screen as Ronald Colman, Edna May Oliver, Blanche Yurka, Reginald Owen, Basil Rathbone, Walter Catlett, Donald Woods, Fritz Leiber, H. B. Warner, Billy Bevan, Elizabeth Allan. Its cast alone was enough to make the film a blockbuster, but I daresay it died in the small towns despite (or because of?) its popularity on the high-school reading lists—for, alas, it was a "costume" picture which was and is poison at the boxoffice out in God's country where men are men and women rule the roost.

Anyway, this pre-Rank version of "A Tale of Two Cities" doesn't make VARIETY's expanded and amended list of 183 "All-Time B.O. Champs", as published in your last Anniversary issue.

New French-Italo Pact Attempts to Heal Sore Spots in Co-Prod. Pix

Paris, April 8.

French-Italian film coproductions are usually 70-30 in backing depending on which country they are mainly filmed and which supplies the director and writer. Gallic-slanted productions have all been released here, but only 78 of the 120 Italo-helmed pix have obtained distribution in Paris since 1949. This has led to squawks from French as well as Italo producers.

The French stand to lose Film Aid, given on local and foreign grosses, but may get some via Gallic provincial or French territorial releases. On these split productions Italians usually get the offshore marts. Italians are naturally peeved for they lose their French 30% and also lose some face. Growing disaffection for Italo pix on the part of the French public seems back of this trend. Even the highly regarded "Cabiria" was below expectations though it did fairly well. Big grossing lists here rarely carry boot country pix.

Trying to combat this, a new Franco-Italo Film Accord, on coproductions, recently was made. It called for four types of pix to be made henceforth in coproduction setups.

1. It was restated that all coproductions come in for state Film Aid in each country.

2. All these types of pix must be made by directors who already have some internationally successful pix to their credit. All coproductions made primarily in one country must have a corresponding one made in the other.

3. There will be films in which producers of each country go 50-50, mainly spectacular pix.

4. About 20 coproductions per year will be allowed to use different percentage investment setups if they fall into the category of prestige or art films.

Filmites Protest TV Show

Rome, April 1.

A sharp protest has been forwarded by the Italian exhibitor and production associations, AGIS and ANICA, regarding the projection over the Italian RAI-TV telenet of a weekly publicity short series entitled, "Secrets of the Screen." In this, trick lensing and other production secrets are revealed and explained to the tele public.

The AGIS-ANICA beef is that revelation of such tricks cannot help but prejudice future effect of films on the public by diluting or detracting from the emotional impact of the scenes in which process or trick work is used.

Italian Import License Situation

Rome Cables a Denial of Withholding—Issue Apparently Now Straightened Out

ANICA, the Italian producer-distributor org, last week denied that import licenses had been withheld from the American companies. Story to this effect had appeared in previous week's issue of VARIETY.

Denial was communicated to VARIETY via a representative of the Italian press agency in New York.

It's puzzling, since the Motion Picture Export Assn., which surely doesn't tend to fabricate such problems, said there had been difficulties. However, as of last Friday (4), MPEA said the matter had been "straightened out" and was due possibly to a misunderstanding that arose during the absence of ANICA topper, Eitel Monaco, from Rome.

Original story was that Monaco had acted in protest against discharge of Italian employees due to the closing of some Italian branches by the film companies. Since then, however, a more compelling reason for the licence mixup has emerged.

At one time, Monaco was complaining that not enough American films were sold to Italian independent distribs. The Yank outfits then changed their tactics and started selling large number of films. The original quota was eight. Last year, they sold 32 and so far this year, they sold 23. Now ANICA is complaining that the Americans are "flooding" the market. This cued the blockage of the some ten permits and question whether or not they should be charged to the 1958-59 quota (which the American outfits would consider a breach of the current film agreement).

Impression is that the Italian moves are but a prelude to moves to try and cut the Yank quota.

'Man of Straw' Italy's Entry at Cannes Fest

Rome, April 1.

"Un Uomo di Paglia" (A Man of Straw), a VIDES-LUX production directed by Pietro Germi, has been chosen to represent Italy at the upcoming Cannes Film Festival. Pic also stars Germi plus Franca Bettoia, Luisa Della Noce and Edoardo Nevola. Selection was made by the special committee set up here to select festival choices from among current Italo product.

A list of additional pix has been forwarded to Paris for perusual by Fest authorities in case an opportunity presents itself to "invite" another local production. Official entries this year are limited to one per nation.

Gervasi Describes U.S.-Italo Film Co-op 'Bestest'

Rome, April 8.

Yank-Italian film industry relations have "never been better," according to Frank Gervasi, Mediterranean director for Motion Picture Export Assn., following removal of two thorny questions which had recently threatened to cloud relations between the two parties.

First, MPEA today received assurance that the 1957-58 Yank film licenses will be respected in full. Guarantee which was given Gervasi at meeting with Eitel Monaco, head of ANICA, means there will be no hold-up of (10-odd) remaining licenses, as previously threatened. (Final decision on this was originally to have been made, on the Italian side, by the Foreign Trade Commission at its next meeting on April 10. This decision is now no longer necessary, as situation has been solved.)

Reported from other source that ANICA has asked that less Yank product be sold in future to local independents, and that sales be increasingly conducted through ANICA.

Second, it was decided at a meeting (2) of the Rome Film Board that Yank company, dismissals—where still contemplated—be at least temporarily stopped. Action is here considered a goodwill gesture designed to aid local democratic institutions during the critical upcoming political election period.

Reports that the threat of a license hold-up during past weeks was even remotely connected with the dismissal question were strongly denied here.

According to the local MPEA topper, the Italians have been dealing "fairly and intelligently" in recent negotiations. Gervasi added that any outside attempt to destroy or impair current local harmony would meet with objections from the Rome MPEA office, and he felt confident that Monaco echoed his feelings.

DARK ERA ENDING, NEW FILMS AFOOT

By ROBERT HAWKINS

Rome, April 8.

The Italian Film Industry is slowly gathering momentum after a slow and crisis-ridden winter season, and production plans of varied importance are slowly and hesitantly being announced. Few local industryites will hide the fact that things have rarely looked blacker than in the past several months, and the recent governmental postponement of a vitally needed admission tax cut—though expected—didn't help morale much either.

Yet the past month has shown a slight rise in boxoffice take of both foreign and Italian pictures in this country—largely the result of the arrival of stronger product on the market—and from this and from the spring local filmmakers have taken comfort and by and large decided to move ahead with plans for the coming year.

Dino DeLaurentiis Productions, spurred by tie-ins with Yankee companies, has already jumped the gun and have "The Tempest" (temporary title) rolling in Italy and Yugoslavia under Alberto Lattuada's direction. Item stars Van Heflin, Silvana Mangano, Viveca Lindfors, Geoffrey Horne, Agnes Moorehead, among others and is being made with funds partially supplied by Paramount. Among other more immediate plans, DeLaurentiis has "Grand Tour," to be directed in France by Rene Clement with, he's almost certain, Marilyn Monroe. In current release are two other DeLaurentiis items: "This Angry Age" and 'Fortunella," latter starring Giulietta Masina and Paul Douglas.

Naked Duchess

Titanus Studios, meanwhile, is about to disclose its 1958 production plans which include an impressive roster of 11 features including the upcoming "The Naked Maja"—Ava Garner-Anthony Franciosa starrer to be shot here by Henry Koster. Of the above total, at least three items will be made in association with Yank companies, as in the case of "Maja," and with similar budgets.

Two other Titanus productions will be large-scale "European" items, at least one will be made as a twin production with a Spanish outfit, while five more will be "basically" Italian, though here again links with other nations are possible in the future, as final plans are set. Exact details will be announced by company president Goffredo Lombardo during the annual Titanus convention in June.

One policy switch is already known: Titanus will this year release only Italian-mades, not buy any foreign pix.

The newly-formed VIDES Productions and the veteran Lux Films have recently joined forces and the result is an impressive roster of pix ready for release, some of them destined to represent Italy at this year's large number of International Film Festivals. Among these joint items are "A Man of Straw," "One Hectare of Sky," "The Law is the Law," "The Challenge," and "Le Madame." LUX on its own is readying a feature-length documentary on Spain, "Fiesta Grande," made by the Gras-Craveri team.

'Venus' Is Off

Rizzoli Films, with "Imperial Venus" postponed indefinitely because of the suit involving the company and Gina Lollobrigida, is shooting a new "Ressurrection" in Munich and plans another Renato Castellani pic in the near future, among other pix, many as usual co-produced with other countries.

Maleno Malenotti has two pictures in current release here: "The Girl and the Palio" and "Squarcio" and has bought the rights to Sardou's "Madame Sans-Gene" from Paramount as a vehicle for Gina Lollobrigida, pic to roll later this year. The same actress' latest pic, "Anna of Brooklyn" is also ready for release, and she is slated

'Roadshows' Flop, Italians Won't Rush Their Dinner for Any Theatre

Rome, April 8.

The principal sales medium for motion pictures in Italy is still the poster, as visitors soon realize when they pass through rows of ad-splattered alleys and streets on their way around Italian cities. For many, posters replace newspaper ads, and a majority of local folk still take their cue to an afternoon or evening's entertainment from an effective placard. Consequently, Italo poster art is extremely developed and internationally recognized both artistically and in audience impact.

Newspaper space follows in importance and has developed over the years, though never assuming the proportion or volume known in the States. Magazine space is more limited, while radio appeals are sometimes used to lure customers to a local cinema or to highlight a national ad campaign. "Indirect" publicity is the only kind allowed at the moment over RAI-TV, the Italo telenet, and mostly comprises guest appearances of stars (at eve of premieres) on such top teleshows as "Il Musichiere" or "Lascia o Raddoppia."

Tie-in campaigns and contests have caught on recently and frequent links have been established between pic companies and sewing machine, candy, cosmetics, perfume, and other manufacturing interests here. Almost all of these campaigns are national.

A publicity jackpot of recent years was recently hit by Columbia Pictures' local outlet via the gift of a footbridge to a young schoolgirl who had always to wade across a stream to get to school. Award, tied in with "Bridge on the River Kwai" hit a publicity bonanza even in general news sector, both domestically and foreign and in all media, with moppet finally topping experience via an air trip to the U. S.

Won't Be Hurried

"Roadshowing" may be okay and successful in America, but recent experience has shown that the Italian moviegoer, in the majority of cases, will not be restricted by a set performance schedule, much less by reserved seat policies.

Both "Around the World in 80 Days" and "Ten Commandments" soon switched to continuous shows in their Rome and Milan debuts, following good but under-hopes weeks of a two-or-three-a-day pattern. Since then, and even with slightly lowered tabs, both pix have shown vast proportionate improvement. Moral: an Italian will not be rushed through his dinner hour, as the legitimate theatre here has long found out.

A different approach to merchandising, at least for the local market, perhaps comparable to the stateside art house salesmanship, has recently made an effective dent in local boxoffice figures. Two pix, the Swedish "Dreams of a Summer Night" and the Japanese "Harp of Burma," given a "must-see" arty sell in their Rome debuts, have paid off handsomely and way above hopes, probably setting a new trend. New for Italy that is, as same policy has long worked in Paris and London, not to mention certain U. S. key cities.

Exhibition standards, in a country totaling an inflated 18,000 pic theatres, perforce run the gamut. Large number of new pic houses recently built in this country have naturally raised quality considerably, but there are still many antiquated houses, even in the center of Rome, that must be dealt with in the current industry campaign to lure the customer back into the theatre.

DOWN BANKRUPTCY DRAIN

CINES Italy's Oldest Company, Circa 1906, No More

Rome, April 8.

CINES, the oldest Italian film company, will be dissolved following its bankruptcy. Company was founded in 1906, and has produced 759 features until its recent collapse, in addition to a large number of documentaries and comic shorts.

Busiest periods during its long history were between 1907 and 1915; 1931-34; 1942-45; 1949-57. Company was almost entirely owned by the Italian government under the Treasury Department, while rest of stock package was in hands of two other semigovernmental organizations: Cinecitta Studios and ENIC Theatre circuit. Latter was also dissolved following bankruptcy last year.

CINES, which only produced two pix in last two years, had following the war years racked up an overwhelming deficit and had therefore long ceased to exist as a production power here. Principally for sentimental reasons, the CINES name may still be retained in the eventuality that Cinecitta Studios participates in future pic production, via links with other local production names.

Roman Catholic Church as Film Exhib in Italy

Latest census of Italian film houses (1957) showed the following figures:

"Commercial theatres"

Permanent:	9,479
Summer	1,668
	11,147 total

"Parochial theatres"

Permanent:	5,148
Summer	807
	5,955 total

Grand total: 17,102

Commercial designation applies to ordinary situations. Parochials charge a normal admission but are indirectly controlled by the Roman Catholic Church. This latter condition is a native circumstance unique in Italy. It is also to be noted that the country numbers many houses which operate al-fresco in summer weather only.

ITALO SENATE KAYOES ADMISH TAX RELIEF

Rome, April 1.

News that the much fought-for admission tax reduction law had failed to pass the Italian Senate before this recess has been received here with mixed feelings in the trade. However, few really felt that approval would be forthcoming at this time. Hopes were raised briefly when law passed the House sooner than expected. Senate recess delays any action on the vital law until summer, when film officials hope to get it approved.

Basically, the proposed tax cut was for 25% of current high admission rates

Early government recess also resulted in delay on approval of the new and equally important film censorship legislation, designed to replace the antiquated (1923) current censor law.

Chester Blakely named manager of the Seymour Road Drive-In at Wichita Falls, Tex., operated by Charles Weisenburg. Blakely was formerly with the RKO film exchange until it shuttered.

Broad View of Europe

In Britain, most of the Yank majors have pictures either in production or in preparation and the same goes now for Paris, Rome, Berlin, etc. Italy, particularly, is a favorite venue for the production of spectaculars and has been ever since "Quo Vadis" was made there some years ago. Now the Italian capital is getting steamed up for the upcoming production of "Ben Hur," a giant undertaking by any standards.

Free Trade?

But while there is this on-the-surface activity throughout the whole of Europe, there is a definite and serious political undercurrent with the projected Common Market and Free Trade Area as the ultimate goal. The three principal film-making countries involved in the Common Market negotiations had an unpleasant setback a month or two ago at a top-level session in Bonn at which the French and Italian industries hoped to persuade the German Government to pave the way for agreement by introducing a State subsidy for German film production as already exists in France and Italy. They found it was a case of no dice so far as Germany's economic minister was concerned and the earlier Groschen Plan, modelled on the lines of Britain's Eady Scheme, is now once and for all stone cold. The German producers who promoted this plan have now thrown in the sponge and reconciled themselves to the fact that they'll need to stand on their own feet without any direct state aid.

That, in itself, has led to a new sense of urgency in regard to expansion of foreign trade. Top level talks have been going on for some little time betwen the heads of the German film industry and the Motion Picture Assn. on the best method of penetrating the Western Hemisphere markets. The sense of urgency also led the German film industry to participate in the recent Punta Del Este Festival, sending some of its top brass from Berlin, Munich and Frankfurt as ambassadors.

But sooner or later the Free Trade Area will take shape and the whole European format will undergo a radical change. Restrictive import quotas already operating in France, Italy and Germany will, presumably, go by the board; the 30% British quota may well have to be adjusted if favored-nation treatment is accorded pix from other European studios. Co-production between the film producing nations in Europe, now little more than a trickle, may well play a more vital role. Altogether, the prospects are far-reaching and might conceivably change the existing production pattern.

But that's something for the future. Immediately on the horizon is the elementary economic need to insure maximum returns from the film markets throughout the world. That's the number one priority among all the producers throughout Europe.

Sunny Italy

to make "Solomon and Sheba" next.

Other future Italo plans include: the first local-made science fictioner, "Death Comes from Outer Space" starts soon for Royal Films, with several others to follow for various local filmmakers; a "new" version of the Columbus chronicle is to be produced by Duilio Coletti; Vittorio DeSica returns to direction later this year with "The Last Judgment," written with Cesare Zavattini; Jules Dassin shoots his "La Loi" (The Law) in southern Italy this spring; Anna Magnani will probably make another film here before going to Hollywood later this year; Federico Fellini, who recently won his second Oscar in a row for "Cabiria," is undecided about his next film, but has a script ready in case negotiations with certain actors and actresses he wants jell; while other producers, thinking more in terms of the local market, have announced plans for the usual series of comedies which manage strong grosses at home, and still another group has announced plans for a brace of costume pix set in the days of ancient Rome and Greece, another favorite local staple in times of doubt.

As indicated above, no significant changes are in store for Italian productions in general. The trend, as established some years back, continues as follows: (1) "Big" productions for the international market including the US, co-produced with Yank interests such as U-A, Paramount, Metro, RKO, etc.; (2) "Medium"-budgeted, but elaborate items, made in teamwork with other European producers; (3) generally moderate-budgeted pix made primarily for the Italian market, and very schematically subdivided into: (a) comedies with such popular actors as Toto, Albert Sordi, etc.; (b) "Roman" neighborhood comedies; (c) soap-opera type heavies; (d) "Neapolitan"-styled pix, abounding in song, and specifically intended to cash in among south Italian picgoers.

Germans Plot Call-Girl Sexsationals; Re-Do 'Blue Angel' & 'Grand Hotel'; Turn Attention to Sputnik Themes

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, April 8.

There's many a hitch between the spectacular announcements to the press concerning gigantic new productions—and the final in-the-tin can product.

Germany is no exception to the "beat the band and holler" campaigning from news-conscious producers who'd like a little free space with their dreams.

Sorting out fond fantasy from actuality is sometimes nearly impossible. But nonetheless, this year's upcoming German film production schedule looks nifty—with plenty of international angles to up the grosses in the German-speaking countries like Switzerland, Austria, Northern Italy, and even some items that might score in Yorkville.

Production "plans" forecast everything from Marilyn Monroe making a film for Berolina in Germany to Fritz Lang returning to Germany after a 25 year absence for a mighty come-back epic. And Sputnik themes are soaring.

With the loom-up of top German stars on the Hollywood horizon, the boxoffice for German films abroad starring the same names seems more of a likelihood than in the past. Some of the German vehicles for now well-known names like Maria Schell, Curt Jurgens, O. W. Fischer, Romy Schneider, Lili Palmer, may do business in the States.

Promotion-conscious producers in Germany are aping another American publicity gimmick—following page one. Case in point was the recent murder of the most notorious call-girl in Germany, lush blond Rosemarie Nitribitt of Frankfurt, who catered to the wealthy international set. No less than four German companies now plot films based on her short, colorful life—and Neue Film of Munich, may actually produce a picture literally called "Rosemarie Nitribitt—Love Was My Business."

Partial to Remakes

German showmen are partial to remakes, as some in Hollywood are. The Mr. Dubious attitude of some American exhibitors concerning remakes, and the tendency of American stories to emerge, second time round, with a changed title is not typical of Germany. Berolina, for instance, wouldn't dream of re-titling "The Blue Angel," which in the original version at UFA put Marlene Dietrich on the American map. This is the vehicle for which Berolina dreams of having the services of Marilyn Monroe.

Vicki Baum's 1932 "Grand Hotel" which was a roar from Leo the Lion with Garbo, Crawford, one Beery and two Barrymores in it will emerge during 1958 with a galaxy of German luminaries—Maria Schell, Curt Jurgens, Romy Schneider, O. W. Fischer, Liselotte (Lilo in U.S.) Pulver, Heinz Ruehmann. Gloria will put up the capital. An American director is expected to be engaged, possibly Otto Preminger

"Petersburger Naechte" (Nights in Petersburg), is another remake which CCC is doing for Deutsche Film Hansa to release. It's concerned with a once-rich Russian who convinces his daughter that he's still a well-to-do man and gives her all luxury possible—even though he has to work as manager of a nightclub. Original starred the late Harry Bauer, and the plot has been little changed. The remake is the second film for Johanna von Koczian, who plays the daughter. Ewald Balser will play the father part.

Tolstoi's epic novel "Resurrection" will be filmed by Bavaria Films of Munich for Schorcht release this year, under the German title "Auferstehung."

'Peer Gynt,' Too

Curt Jurgens is doing a CCC production of "Peer Gynt" this year. And he's likewise set for the lead in "Das Koenigliche Spiel" (The Sport of Kings), based on Stefan Zweig's "Chess Novel." Roxy will make the pic, which was originally scheduled for April shooting but has been postponed until fall.

Both Lilli Palmer and Romy Schneider add to the value of "Maedchen in Uniform" (Girls in Uniform) which CCC is producing for Gloria to release in Germany. This, too, is a remake of a picture that was a big hit in Germany nearly 30 years ago—the part was then created by Romy Schneider's mother, Magda Schneider.

Fritz Lang, the onetime UFA director in the States for the last 25 years, will handle here—a production called "Das Indische Grabmal" (The Indian Gravestone).

And with the rocketing success of satellites, there's a fascinating scientific film being made here called "Die Welt Haelt den Atem an" (The World Draws Near to the Atom). It's being done by F. A. Mainz Films, which last year made the documentary film, "The Werner von Braun Story."

This concerns the splitting of the atom, and the earth satellites. It's to be filmed on the Isle of Sylt, in north Germany, and will show the discoveries of German scientists and sensational developments in the U.S. that started the Americans in the earth satellite race. Mainz is doing the film with Herbert Tischendorf's Rhombus Film Productions, and Walt Disney has optioned it for the U.S.

Austria's Picture Sked This Spring

Vienna, April 8.

Now before the cameras in Austrian film studios are the following features:

At Rosenhuegel-Mauer: "The Journey," Alby and Metro coproduction under Anatole Litvak has Yul Brynner, Deborah Kerr, Barbara Von Nady and various U.S. faces brought over for the occasion.

At Sievering: "Sacha Torte" (name of a famous caloric cake of Viennese invention) is a Paula Wessely Production directed by Hans Wolff with Johanna Matz and Gerhard Riedman, screenplayed by Julianne Kay.

At Ring: "Poor as a Church Mouse," the old play of Ladislaud Foder is being directed by Rudolf Ingert. Music of Carl de Groof added.

For the months after April Wien Film (which owns Rosenhuegel, Sievering, Grinzing and Parsch) has "Return to Paradise" to be directed by Karl Hartl. Other productions by Sascha (5 pictures), OEFA (3), Erma (2), Paula Wessely (2), Donau Film (2), Hope-Cosmos (4) and Schoenbrunn (3), Cosmopol Film preparing the stage success "Rendezvous in Vienna" by Fritz Eckhardt with Helmuth Weiss directing, screen book by Kaindorf-Siebelius. Another Cosmopol production will be "Endangered Girls," book by Hans Jacobi and Fritz Rotter, a persiflage on this often used theme.

Zurich, April 8.

If a feature film catches on in Switzerland, it is hardly thanks to ingenious, hard-hitting exploitation. The reason: nearly all familiar exploitation media commonly used (and over-used) in other territories are forbidden by the Swiss Exhibitors' and Distributors Associations. This is particularly felt in Zurich, the country's biggest city (population 422,000) and the most important of the five key cities which also include Basle (197,000), Geneva (164,000), Berne (158,000) and Lausanne (116,000).

Agreement between the Exhibs' and Distribs' bodies in Zurich, signed more than 10 years ago and, with slight changes, re-confirmed last November, not only meticulously specifies maximum size of ads permitted in each individual newspaper by the city's 42 picture-houses (distribs are not allowed to place any ads at all). It also supplies its members (membership is compulsory) with a list of "don't's" in films exploitation, which is considerably longer than the list of "do's." Violation of these restrictions may (and, in extreme cases, does) lead to heavy fines.

Here are some of forbidden practices:

1) Paid newspaper supplements.

2) Billposting and, in fact, any posting away from theatre.

3) Publicity in streetcars and trolleys.

4) Publicity via mailboxes.

5) Distribution of heralds, leaflets or folders of any kind in restaurants, shops or any other public places.

6) Sandwich-men or publicity floats.

Radio and tv being state-owned, no publicity or commercials are accepted or tolerated by these media.

Consequently, the only means of publicizing a film are:

Newspaper ads (limited by restrictions).

Window-display, provided it is not within 110 yards of another theatre.

Acceptance of free publicity by newspapers and magazines. Restrictions are somewhat eased in the other four cities where distribs are free to choose their own means of exploitation. However, this is pretty illusary in Basle and Berne where exhibs have an agreement of their own

Germany Decides What Austria Does

[NO RISK BUT NO PRESTIGE]

By EMIL MAASS

Vienna, April 8.

Count Alexander Kolowrat-Krakowsky, the pioneer here and founder of Austria's first film company, would be surprised, needless to remark, were he alive and able to see what time and the disintegration of the Empire, and two losing wars, has done to the film business.

Austria produces feature films but the Austrian public, alone, would not suffice. The sharing of the German language with the neighbor nation to the north means that Austrian films are influenced by and tailored to the taste of the German market. There lies the payoff.

With the end of World War II, things were dull indeed in this land. But finally a feature was made, "The Long Way," in the bombed studios in Sievering under the direction of Eduard Hoesch. Concerned with a Russian war prisoner, timely then, the three players, Maria Andergast, Hans Holt and Rudolph Prack, have since attained stellar rank in German language cinema.

Life of a 'Satellite'

Today the West German distributor is the dictator. Down to where cheese is marked on the menu cards, everything must be done in Austrian Studios after his wishes. The producer first asks the German distrib if he likes the book. Then he gets orders as to who is to be cast, who to direct, who to write the music, even who contributes the costumes and the settings.

When all the details are settled, he (the Austrian producer) gets the document—that is the guarantee. West Germany puts up from 60 to 70% of the total costs, the Austrian distrib 10% percent, thus leaving a margin of 10 to 20 %. System has its good side, namely, no risk. Producer's sole hazard is his prestige if the picture does not bring back its costs. That is hardly ever the case with production costs of a black and white film about $200,000, in color $320,000. Market conditions favor return of negative at least.

When the producer informs the West German distributor "Picture ready," he is told, when to release it. This accounts for the queer fact, that Austrian product is difficult to place at the film festivals of Cannes, Berlin, Karlsbad and Venice. Austrian producers simply are not free to act without German okay.

Because Austria's film showmen are so Deutsch-mark conditioned and so little enterprising about the festivals, the government here in Vienna, anxious for the publicity of Austrian "art" outside the borders of the Republic, threaten to withdraw the official subsidy which the film makers have enjoyed since the war. A spokesman told VARIETY: "Cancellation of subsidy may come soon. We now see that the producers don't give a hang for the festival participation and Austria's international prestige."

"World" rights are lodged with German distributors, notably Transocean, Exportfilm, Omnia, Ufa and Union.

All efforts by Austria-minded producers to unite into a common front against German dictatorship were frustrated by a few prominent personages, who did not join the Uniaustria (since substituted by the Austrian Association of Film Exporters). Companies even pay one percent to the West German association for foreign currency revenues, sometimes considerable amounts.

Economics of Exhibition

Like most European countries, Austria exhibits its films at stated hours, and for reserved seats. In Vienna performances are apt to be fixed to begin on the hour every second hour. The average price for the country is 22c but in Vienna minor films command 50c (13 schillings, a lot of money here) though houses are scaled according to distance from the screen, further back are the higher.

Exhibitors recently demanded cancellation of the Groschen Tax (a negligible amount to be paid to the government for each sold seat for the benefit of the legitimate theatres). Government did not yield to the house owners demand. Thus the screen still must support other branches of art.

As of now television has not been particularly damaging to the film theatres. If an attraction fails to sell out theatre operators are likely to wag the finger at the Austrian equivalent of jukeboxes, into which young bloods drop too much of their small coin assets, thereby being short of funds for the cinema. If proposals develop to film soccer games for later projection this may well crimp the flickers.

Franco-German Talks Net: Nil

Paris, April 8.

French-West German film accord talks are due to wind today (8), but so far there has been no satisfaction on either side. Germans stuck to their quota of 30 dubbed French releases per year, and the refusal to envisage any German governmental film aid also led to a probable stymying of greater co-production plans under the Common Mart film setup.

Germans felt that the status quo should be enforced until the CM was in actual effect. Then, any needed changes would be discussed. The French contingent was against this idea for they felt it was contrary to the very idea of the CM which was to engender free and unhampered cooperation between the member nations.

French brought up the fact that they are held to 30 features per year while American films have free access. So it looks like the French-German talks may end in deadlock unless last minute agreements are forthcoming.

Jacques Flaud, French Centre Du Cinema head, returned from U.S. this weekend to be in on the tail end of the talks. Flaud was repped by his assistant Andre Parent, and the French industry by Henri Frenay, head of the Syndicate of French Film Producers and Exporters, and producers Henry Deutschmeister, Alan Poire and Emile Natan.

German reps included government officials, industry reps and the heads of the German Export Union. The latter is the org to hypo German pix abroad. The main difficulty is still the German governmental refusal to put coin into film production. This makes it difficult for coproduction activity since French and Italo producers would lose aid on the German side for any split pix.

EAST GERMANY PICKS OWN 'OSCAR' WINNERS

Frankfurt, April 8.

At the same time that West Germany has selected its "Bambis," winner of a film award that's equivalent to the Oscars in America, and here based on a film magazine poll of the most popular stars and films, East Germany has duplicated the awards to having an East Berlin film magazine poll its readers on the most popular East German stars and pictures.

Karla Runkehl placed as the most popular actress in DEFA films (made in East Berlin under Russian control), with Eva-Maria Hagen second and Sonja Sutter third.

Guenther Simon placed as leading actor with Raimund Schelcher second.

Most popular film was "Vergesst mir meine Traudel nicht" (My Traudel Doesn't Forget Me) first, and "Berlin—Ecke Schoenhauser" (Berlin, at Schoenhauser Corner) was second, with "Lissy" third. No films from West Germany were listed, although many East Berliners cross over to view Western movies, in West Berlin, and some West German films play in East Germany.

Berlin Regains Status as Film Centre

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin, April 8.

Berlin's big plus, of course, is tradition. It used to be Germany's film metropolis. Until 1945, roughly 80% and often up to 90% of all Teutonic features were made here, with 10 to 20% in Munich. Since then Berlin is handicapped since most of the studios (Babelsberg, Johannisthal etc.) passed under Communist control. This resulted in a reversed situation between Berlin and Munich. After some quiet years, West Berlin's film production started on comeback. Studios began running capacity. Berliners succeeded in convincing quite a number of their colleagues who had gone westwards for safety reasons that it was no risk to shoot here. Hence ex-Berlin producers came back. Also several new companies were set up here.

Perhaps near 50% of the West German films are now made in Berlin. In March eight films were in the making in Berlin against three in Munich, two in Hamburg and one in Goettingen. Many call now again Berlin this country's film metropolis.

Taxes and Competition

Economically speaking, the situation of the German postwar film remains a tough one. It's still the film industry which is suffering most of all German industries from the consequences of the lost war. The heavy tax load and brutal competition both figure. Here some respective statistics:

National Origin	1957 1958	1956 1957	1955 1956	1954 1955	1953 1954
German	130	148	153	140	135
American	232	232	236	253	225
France	68	68	56	57	67
Italian	33	28	37	42	47
Austria	29	24	22	20	17
Britain	37	40	29	27	15
Sweden	5	4	2	3	12
	556	568	565	561	530

Despite competition, German films have the dominating role. Their b.o. popularity derives from the second-run cinemas and the fact that the provincial districts show a strong predilection for native product. Statistics compiled by "Filmblaetter," a Berlin trade paper, reveal that there were 61 German films among the 100 most successful grossers in West Germany during the 1956-1957 (from Sept. 1, 1956, until Aug. 31, 1957) season. This compilation, which covered this country's eight most important key cities, included 16 American, 11 Austrian, five French, three British and two Italian films in addition to a Franco-Italian and a German-French coproduction.

Germany's most successful distributor was Herzog with 16 features. (Herzog is now UFA Filmverleih here. It became UFA property in May 1957.) Second most successful distrib (15 films) was Constantin within the season 1957-58. Runners-up were Gloria (11), Deutsche London, Schorcht (both 8), Europa and NF (both 6 films among the 100 first grossers). (Note: Deutsche London has been given the name Deutsche Film Hansa last year!). With the exception of Europa and Deutsche Film Hansa (both Hamburg), the top German distribs are headquartered in Munich.

The West German feature film production amounted to at least 106 items, of which 66 were in color, last year. Included in these statistics are 11 coproductions with foreign partners and three full-length fairy-tales.

220 Producers, 898 Films

Within these years, 220 producers made a total of 898 features. Artur Brauner's CCC heads this list with 56 pix, followed by another Berlin outfit, Berolina (which after the death of company's co-owner, Kurt Schulz, became Kurt Ulrich-Film last year) with 45 pictures and Walter Koppel's Real-Film (Hamburg) with 41 films.

Germany's postwar film history is closely connected with the following enterprises:

ARCA

A fast growing outfit (with own studios) is Arca. This company, headed by Gero Wecker, has just increased its stock capital from 100,000 to 500,000 D-Marks. Along with its endeavours to intensify connections abroad, Arca set up last year a daughter company in Rome, the socalled Arca Cinematografica, with Ernesto Purger as head. Another Arca outfit has been set up in Zurich while another one is operating in Goettingen (W.-Germany).

Arca made seven films last year and this year expects to shoot nine. Currently in production is "Love Can Be Poison" with newcomer Sabina Sesselmann, Willy Birgel and Nadja Regin. Veit Harlan, who last year made "Different From You and I" (The Third Sex) for Arca, is directing this one.

Arca was established in 1951 in Goettingen. It started with releasing imports, per the Swedish "One Summer of Happiness," the French "The Respectful Prostitute," "Forbidden Fruit," "Julietta," "French Can-Can" etc. With a solid basis of 300-000 D-Marks as stock capital, Arca then went on to produce its own. The first year (1955) saw the making of six films, and in 1956, Arca made six more, including a big b.o. success, "Liana—the Girl From the Jungle."

Arca is one of the financially strongest film producing companies in Germany. It has now 120 (without artists) on its payroll and another stage is just in the building. Right opposite to its studios in Pichelsberg, a beautifully located outskirt of Berlin, Arca has built a guest house of its own.

Gero Wrecker, Arca's chief, keeps a close eye on new talent. Marion Michael (the "Liane" in several pix), Christian Wolff and Danish Ann Smyrner (she plays the title role in "Lilly—A Girl From the Big Town") are some of his contractees. Screen tests for newcomers are regulation. Company is known for financing many pix all by itself (quite in contrast to most other domestic outfits whose pix are mainly backed by the distribs) and one must rate Arca as one of the most successful outfits.

BEROLINA

Over the past years, Berolina-Film (Berlin) has been one of the most successful producing combines. Company made 45 features within the years of its operation which corresponds to second spot (after CCC) among all West German showmen.

Berolina was founded in 1948 by Kurt Schulz and Kurt Ulrich. But last June, Schulz, 44 died suddenly. Schulz was and stayed a cameraman, having lensed nearly all Berolina pix. Fact that one of the Berolina owners was active in the studio all day as a technician was thought to be one of the reasons why Berolina could register so many financial successes. Death of Schulz split the company.

Kurt Ulrich went on his own and named his company Kurt Ulrich Productions. "Blue Boys" was one of the last pix that came out under the old Berolina label. Ulrich's first pix were "The Legs of Dolores," "Three Men on a Horse," "Everything Will Be Good Again," "Spring in Berlin" and "Two Hearts in May."

CENTRAL CINEMA CO.

Artur Brauner is not only one of the strongest forces in the German film industry but also one of the most unusual ones. His Central Cinema Co., usually just CCC, is strictly a one-man enterprise. Now 40, he came to Berlin shortly after the war and in 1946 financed the first Berlin-made postwar film, "Tell the Truth," a comedy produced by Studio 45. In the fall of 1946 he set up CCC and produced "Morituri," which dedicated itself to the victims

Film Festivals

The International Federation of Film Producers Associations is the validating body. It "recommends" (i.e. urges) some festivals and "recognizes" (i.e. accepts) the others. Cannes, Venice and Berlin are, as of now the three which are given the special status. Herewith the 1958 lineup:

Munich—The Mostest—But Runs Second

By KARIN THIMM

Munich, April 8.

It's one of the paradoxes of the German film business that Munich, with its huge Bavaria studio complex, has had to yield to Berlin and Hamburg as the center of German production. The Munich studios rank among the best in this country, yet—last year—they were often empty even as the Bavaria made strenuous efforts to fill them not only with its own productions, but also through co-production. Some American films—"The Vikings" among them—were shot here.

The situation has reached such proportions that the state government has become concerned, and it has offered 5,000,000 DM (about $1,200,000) to guarantee credits. In addition, several banks have formed a consortium to help finance pictures. It is now hoped that these various activities will stimulate activities at the studio.

Though the Bavaria studios have been in trouble, Munich nevertheless is headquarters for many film firms, big and small. Following is a partial listing of the most important outfits:

Arnold & Ritchter—is a film lab, which also operates two stages and has two modern synchronization studios.

Aura Film—is kept buys mostly with dubbing imports. More than 400 pictures from all over the world have had German dialog added here.

Peter Bamberger's Production—is currently winding up "Kanonen Serenade" (Cannon Serenade) with German and Italian actors, including Victor deSica, Ingmar Zeisberg, Folco Lulli, etc.

Bavaria Filmkunst—operates the eight moder stages of the Bavaria studios which are capabe of turning out a film from start to finished print. There are also four recording studios for synchronization and mixing, music recording studios, a special effects dept, etc.

In 1957, the Bavaria shot a number of its own productions, including "Meine Schoone Mama" (My Beautiful Mama); "Der Glaeserne Turm" (Tower of Glass, with Lili Palmer, Peter van Syck, O. E. Hasse); "Casino de Paris" (with Caterina Valente) which was coproduced with France and Italy; "Alle Wege Fuehren Heim" (All Paths Lead Home); "Immer, wenn der Tag Beginnt" (When Day Dawns); "Ein Stueck von Himmel" (Piece of Heaven, with ski champion Toni Sailer); "Eine Frau die weiss wass Sie Will" (A Woman Who Knows What She wants, with Lili Palmer).

TV Rentals

In addition to these, the Bavaria stages were rented out during the year to tv film productions and regular theatrical features. Among theme were "Taiga," "Die Gruenen Teufel von Monte Cassino" (Green Devils of Monte Cassino). Shooting has started on Tolstoy's "Die Auferstehung". (The Ressurection) and another Toni Sailer picture is due. Some documentaries and ad films also have been made.

Several of the Bavaria productions have been shown with good success abroad, including "Rose Bernd," "Harte Maenner—Heisse Liebe" (Tough Men—Hot Love); "Kleines Zelt—Grosse Liebe" (Little Tent—Great Love), etc. On the other hand, there have been a number of expensive Bavaria productions that didn't click.

Carlton Film—run by Gunther and Klaus Stapenhorst, own two stages and make films. Their "Bettelstudent" (Beggar's Student) did okay abroad. They're currently finishing "Ich war ihm Hoerig" (I was His Slave).

Constantin Film—has come up in the distribution field during the past two years, partly due to the extraordinary success of "La Strada." A new Constantin film (of Witt Production), "Das Wirtshaus im Spessart," (The Inn of Spessart) has been nominated for the Cannes festival. Constantin has a mixed German and foreign program, including such films as "Tamango," "Spione am Werk" (Spys at Work, with Curt Jurgens), "Cabaria," etc.

Others

Divina Film production (owned by Ilse Kubaschewski) works through the Gloria distribution outfit. Divina rented state-owned studios near Munich, with three stages. Among its successful exports are "Die Trapp Familie," "Nachts, Wenn der Teufel Kommt" (At Night, when the Devil Comes), "Arzt von Stalingrad" (Doctor of Stalingrad), etc.

Exportfilm Bischoff & Co.—sells films aboard. Company has 27 films in the 1957-58 season and expects to have about the same next year. One of its international successes last year was "Heute Heiratet Mein Mann" (My Husband Gets Married Today): "Salzburger Geschichten" (It Happened in Salzburg) and "Wie Einst Lili Marlene" (Lili Marlene).

Gloria Film—one of the top distribution outfits in West Germany. Among its title for 1957 were "Das Einfache Maechen," (The Simple Girl), "Nachts Wenn der Teufel Kam," "Endstation Liebe" (Terminus Love), "Auf Wiedersehen Franziska" (Franziska), etc. Coming up for 1958 are another version of "Die Dreigroschen Oper" (Three-penny Opera), "Menschen in Hotel" (People in a Hotel), "Liebelei" (Love Affair) which will star Romy Schneider, a remake of "Maedchen in Uniform," etc.

Koenig Film—makes primarily "country" type of pictures, some of which have been sold to the German houses in the States.

Neubach Film—makes "Heimat" films and others. The 1958 program will include "Ein Lied Geht Um die Welt" (A Song Around the World), "Wilde Rose" (Wild Rose), "Narr der Welt" (Fool of the World) etc.

Neue Film Verleih (NF)—both distributes and finances production. It had, in 1957, "Die Tolle Bomberg" (Wild Bomberg), "Liane, die Weisse Sklavin" (Liane, the White Slave); "Frauenarzt Dr. Bertram" (Woman's Doctor); "Zwei Mann, ein Schwein and die Nacht von Paris" (Four Bags Full, a French film); "El Hakim" with O. W. Fischer. For 1958 are planned "Das Koenigliche Spiel" (after Stefan Zweig's Chess novel, with Curt Jurgens), etc.

Neue Deutsche Filmesellschaft (NDF)—last year made "Robinson Soll Nicht Sterben" (Robinson Shall Not Die) and "Monpti" which Helmut Kautner directed.

Ostermayr Film—is the old among the German firms. It's run by Peter Ostermayr, 75, who founded the Bavaria. Outfit produces one or two pictures a year.

Ring Film—in distribution, offers some evergreens like "Orphee." It also had "Fidelio" and "Don Giovanni" and the French concentration camp film, "Night and Fog."

Roxy Film—in 1957 produced "El Hakim" and "Der Kuehne Schwimmer" (The Brave Swimmer). Two pictures are planned this year, including one with Jurgens.

Sokal Film—had no production last year. For 1958, it plans to make "Helden" (Heroes) after the G. B. Shaw play, "Arms and the Man." It'll star O. W. Fischer and Liselotte Pulver. Another Fischer picture planned is "Mr. Cattle and Mrs. Moon" (after a Priestley play).

Transocean—imports and exports a varied program. It sells many of the Gloria and Deutsche Film Hansa pictures, including "Haie und Kleine Fische" (Sharks and Little Fish), "Made in Germany," "Witwer mit Fuenf Toechtern" (Widower with Five Daughters) etc.

UFA distribution (formerly Herzog)—has its main offices in Munich though UFA production centers in Berlin. So far, the new UFA hasn't produced a picture and it has only distributed other productions. Those included, in 1957, the third part of "Sissi," "Wien Stadt Meiner Traeume" (Vienna, City of My Dreams), "Italienreise—Liebe Inbegriffn" (Trip to Italy—Love Included); "Madeleine under der Legionaer" (Madeleine and the Legionair), "Scampolo" with Romy Schneider, etc.

UFA production should get under way soon. The UFA also has its own export department.

Witt Production—made the successful "Wirtshaus am Spessart" last year. Its 1958 is still uncertan.

Union Film—has a program that includes mostly for-trade mark were shown in West Germany.

Deutsch Style In Ballyhoo: Quiet

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, April 8.

"Merchandising" of motion pictures in Germany is very little like the art of ballyhoo as practiced in the States.

Premiere with kleig lights and standees awaiting the stars' arrival are just about unknown here. When a first-run German film opens, one or two of the German stars may be on hand, but without much fanfare. At end the lights go up and someone generally introduces the star and hands him or her a bouquet of flowers. The star accepts—and that's it.

One exception which rated much applause from the press was Columbia's opening of "Picnic." Tho the Hollywood cast didn't attend, Columbia gave the pic full and fine treatment with a line of limousines conveying top German stars to the preem and klieg-lighting the event. When the film ended, the publicity men staged a "picnic" on the platform, with local players introduced and handed picnic baskets. Then the group tossed goodies from the baskets to people in the audience. Everyone enjoyed the stunt.

Motion Picture Export Association's Fred Gronich, then topper for the organization in Germany, started a campaign with the theatre owners for more color and flair in publicity last year. But the campaign simmered down to nothing. And so it is—or isn't—with the fanfare.

Rathskeller Theatre

Photos displayed before the theatre are generally black and white, with little attempt at dramatic billboards or inviting displays. With many of the theatres located downstairs, it's often only a small outdoor placard that announces what's playing below.

SPIO, the organization of the German film industry, has just started a new campaign with the slogan "Give yourself a couple of wonderful hours — go to the movies," reminiscent of the Hollywood motto at the moment, "Get More out of life."

But the SPIO try has met with much protest from the theatre industry because the accompanying picture shows a young couple holding hands in the theatre. And, argue many of the film folks, there's not much difficulty in luring the young people in, it's the oldsters who need to be influenced, and this picture has little come-on appeal for them.

Most of the German newspapers have good theatre critiques, but a notable lack is—gossp columns. Without the daily chatter of a Hedda or a Louella, the stars never come as close to the folks as they do in the States.

Much of the color and background notes re the stars and the films that are fed to folks in the States are eliminated here. Fan magazines as such play it square—photos of the stars' homes, plots of upcoming films, but no chitchat.

Sometimes a word or photo catches the public eye. For years after the Italian film "Bitter Rice" played here, a sexy femme might be tagged "bitter rice."

Americans have brought in some innovations. United Artists, for instance, hired actors in clown togs to walk thru the towns when "Limelight" opened. Occasionally an old streetcar covered with film ads runs thru the city. Mostly the Germans stick to the trite.

Since 1954, the German Self Censorship Division has been making a check of the film publicity material. Of 1,040 theatre placards, 27 have been rejected, and 28 others have required changes (higher necklines, for instance) to tone them down.

Of 18,000 publicity photos, 200 had been withheld.

Television had just begun to be used to promote films. One German distributor, Constantin, has arranged a half-hour show of clips from its upcoming pictures with background about incidents during filming.

A couple of advantages: all the better-priced theatre tickets are reserved, and are sold for one performance only. Ticket buyer can look at a seat chart, just as for a stage show, and know where he'll be located. But if he comes in late, with the ticket for one performance only, he can't stay over to catch what he's missed unless he buys another entry.

Dial phones in most German cities give a daily rundown of what's at the movies, another way to attract the public.

Once in the theatre, for 20 pfennigs (about 5c) there's a program showing the cast, production credits, and brief outline of the plot—which is often treated as a nice souvenir, and influences friends to attend.

First W. German-Polish Film Barred by Bonn Govt. as Co-Production

Frankfurt, April 8.

The first West German-Polish coproduction to be made is apparently in difficulty, according to word received here. The West Berlin CCC Production has had to inform its Polish partner, Film Polski, that the film just finished, "Der Achte Tag der Woche" (The Eighth Day of the Week), can be referred to only as a German film "working with a Polish associate," and cannot be tabbed a German-Polish co-production.

The federal government at Bonn has ruled that in the absence of a government-level film agreement between the two nations, this picture cannot be called a co-production. Film is based on a Polish script by a Polish author, with Polish director Aleksander Ford, was filmed in Poland and mostly financed by the Poles.

The Poles had hoped that this film could be presented at the Cannes Film Festival as a Polish production, with added draw of a leading actress, the German star, Sonja Ziemann. Some German producers who are in need of outside financing, are resentful over this decision, which apparently closes the way for further financing or co-productions with Poland.

Now See 'Madeleine' As Not So Big at B.O.

Berlin, April 1.

It now seems certain that though at first widely publicized, the Legionary," an UFA release of the German pic, "Madeleine and Melodie production, won't bring in the large amount of coin hoped for. Starring Hildegard Knef (alias Neff) in her first local screen appearance in nearly four years, this film preemed here Jan. 21 at the Zoo Palast and ran there only for 13 days.

"Madeleine," incidentally, was costly to produce, and now the producer may be lucky to cover said costs. Peter Schaeffers, Melodie-Film's boss, opined that it would have been wiser not to launch this film in Berlin since there are too tough critics here. Objectively, many here rate "Madeleine" as one of the better German films of the current season.

GERMANY'S BIG UPBUILD OF THEATRES

Frankfurt, April 8.

There are some 2,500,000 film theatre seats in the Republic of West Germany today. Match this against 50,000,000 population. It means 40 seats per 1,000 citizens. West Berlin's concentration is denser, 50 per 1,000 while areas in the northern section of country run as low as 35 seats per 1,000 census.

Trade custom: about 25% of the houses change bill twice a week. Pertinent theatre data follows:

GERMANS GET WORK OF SINCLAIR LEWIS

Berlin, April 8.

According to Paul Gordon Plays (Berlin), the new German UFA in conjunction with Melodie-Film (Berlin) and Sam Waynberg have acquired the world filmization rights of "Let Us Play King," a novelette by Sinclair Lewis. Melodie will produce pic by order of UFA. Latter will distribute it.

This brief news item borders on the extraordinary since it happens very seldom that German filmites get hold of a work by a famous American author and practically never by such a famed writer as the late Nobel Prize-winner Sinclair Lewis. Reason, of course, is the money barrier. In nearly all previous cases, the Germans were unable to pay the demanded high prices. As to Gordon, the purchase of "King" marks a first in the domestic film industry: Never before have the Germans acquired the filmization rights of a world-famous American author. Financial details of this deal were not revealed.

Deal, incidentally, was negotiated on behalf of UFA by Gordon and on behalf of the property owner, Random House (Harry E. Maule), and the Sinclair Lewis estate represented by Pincus Berner of N. Y. It was closed by a long distance call.

Swiss Status Quo: 4-6 A Year

Zurich April 8.

Production activity in Switzerland this year looks to remain within the usual limited boundaries, i.e. four to six features may be shot. Top and longest-established producing company is Praesens-Film Zurich (Lazar Wechsler). Gloriafilm Zurich (Max Dora) is second, followed by Neue Film A.G. (founded last year), plus a brand new outfit, Unitas-Film, also in Zurich, which has yet to start production.

First Swiss picture this year will be Praesens' "It Happened in Broad Daylight," from an original screenplay by Swiss playwright Friedrich Duerrenmatt (whose "Visit from an Old Lady" is skedded for Broadway as "The Visit," with the Lunts in late April.) "Daylight" is in German with German actors Heinz Ruehmann and Gert Froebe, plus Swiss-French screen star Michel Simon. An as-yet-uncast femme role may go to a Spanish actress. Ladislao Vajda, who did Spain's prize-winning "Marcelino Pan y Vino," is directing. Film will be in black-and-white, standard size. The plot is a present-day whodunit involving a child murder, a wrong suspect etc. The offbeat story line promises a change-of-pace in locally-made pix which, in recent years, have been restricted to popular comedy-drama and filmizations of classical Swiss country-life novels. Praesens hopes to have "Daylight" ready for showing at the Berlin Film Festival next June, as Switzerland's official entry.

Pix in Future

Gloriafilm's production plans are all tentative with no vehicles lined up. However, one or two features are likely to go before the cameras this year.

Neue Film A.G., whose initial entry, "The 10th of May," was released at beginning of the 1957-58 season to moderate results, will follow up this summer with a screen version of classical Swiss writer Jeremias Gotthelf's peasant novel. "Die Kaeserei in der Vehfreude." Latter was brought back to public attention via a successful radio serialization. Richard Schweizer will do screenplay.

Newcomer Unitas-Film starts shooting its maiden effort sometime this month (April). Tentatively titled "Golden Ox Inn," it will star Schaggi Streuli, a big favorite here due to his starring in a string of moneymaking pix in recent years. Unitas' second project is a semi-documentary drama, "Glacier Pilot." It is set for fall production. Dr. Oscar Dueby, former production veepee of Praesens-Film and Gloriafilm, is Unitas' exec. Praesens is distributing both Neue Film A.G.'s and Unitas' product.

All the foregoing is in German tongue. Production is non-existent in the French- and Italian-speaking parts of Switzerland.

So far, only two color pix, Praesens' "Heidi and Peter" and "Between Us the Mountains," latter a commercial failure, and one wide-screen pic ("10th of May") have been produced in Switzerland. All others were in black-and-white, standard size.

There exists one single film studio in this country, the Rosenhof Studio in Zurich, which boasts all of one stage, with limited technical facilities. Major part of local filming is done either on location or in "improvised" studios such as inns, school-halls, gyms etc.

Swiss films which have succeeded in foreign markets and particularly in the U. S., are:

"The Search" (Praesens, 1948; released world-wide by M-G). (Copped a string of Hollywood foreign awards, including three Hollywood Oscars. It is, by a long shot, the most successful Swiss release ever to hit the international market.).

"Marie-Louise" (Praesens, 1944) (Academy Award 1945).

"The Last Chance" (Praesens, 1945) (Golden Globe Award).

"Heidi" (Praesens, 1952) (Several international awards).

"Heidi and Peter" (Praesens, 1954) (released in the U. S. by UA).

"Ull the Farmhand" (Gloriafilm, 1954) (in the German-speaking market only).

"Ull the Tenant" (Praesens, 1955) (ditto).

Gloriafilm's "Policeman Waeckerli," a top grosser locally, did moderate biz in Germany and Austria, on generally good reviews. The same firm's "Upper Town Street" and "Bakery Zuerrer" are lined up for German-Austrian releases.

All Swiss pix exported to Germany and/or Austria have to be dubbed into "Hochdeutsch" (proper German), being in the Swiss dialect which is the colloquial lingo here, but sounds like Chinese to most non-Swiss ears.

GERMAN PRODUCERS ON FOREIGN 'LOCATION'

Frankfurt, April 8.

Just as American film companies are seeking foreign locations for authentic backgrounds, so for the first time since the war German companies are going outside the fatherland for foreign locales.

Liselotte Pulver, who just finished a film for Universal in Hollywood, is going to Paris to film "Der Spieler" (The Player), based on a Dostoievski novel, opposite Gerard Philippe, in May.

German actor Hardy Krueger is filming "Einer kam durch" (One Came Through) for Rank in London, with German director Wolf Rilla also set for the production.

Copenhagen is the setting for the filming of "Ein Seemann Geht am Land" (A Sailor Goes on the Land), starring Karlheinz Boehm and Annie Rosar and Georg Thomalla. Arthur Maria Rabenalt is directing, for Constantin release.

German comedian Heinz Ruehmann is also filming later this summer in Copenhagen. He'll play the lead in "Fuer zwei Groschen Zaertlichkeit" (Affection for Two Pennies). This is to be a Danish-German co-production.

Finally, Romy Schneider, who just returned to Germany from the States, where Disney is releasing her film "The Story of Vickie," now goes into a German film to be lensed in Paris. Titled "Christine," it's a remake of the Arthur Schnitzler dramatization called "Liebelei." Robert Siodmak, Hollywood director, has been signed by Gloria films to direct this pic, with Vittorio De Sica as Miss Schneider's co-star.

Berlin Regains Status As Film Centre

of the Nazi regime. This pic didn't make much capital, but Brauner regards it still as one of his best. (He plans to reissue it.) His next films were "King of Hearts" and "Girls Behind Bars." In 1950, he made three films, one year later, five films, seven in 1952, eight in 1953, twelve in 1954 and also twelve in 1955. His "The Rats" walked off as the winner (as voted by the public) at Berlin's 1955 Film Festival, same success was registered with "Before Sundown" one year later. His "Girls Behind Bars" won a prize at the 1949 Venice Festival, while domestic awards were also given to "20th of July," "Hotel Adlon," "Morituri," "Don't Play With Love" and "Sinful Border."

Brauner has own studios at Berlin-Spandau consisting of seven stages and his property comprises some 35,000 square meters. A number of stages are constantly being rented by other German companies. Last year, Universal shot most of "There's a Time to Love and a Time to Die," here.

Berlin owes much to Brauner, who stuck here. CCC employs 400 people (without the artists) on its playroll. Its 1958-1959 list consists of 27 titles, some coproductions.

CENTRAL-EUROPA

Central-Europa, headed by Waldemar Frank, was established in 1951 and produced quite a number of vidpix before it turned entirely to theatrical product. Company, which has a branch office in Wiesbaden, has been dedicating itself to musical films. Its last films were "Viktor & Viktoria" (a remake) and "If Women Are Lying."

DELOS-FILM

Delos-Film is headed by Bernhard Schmidt, was set up in 1953 and has made a dozen pix so far. One of outfit's best remembered films is "Lili Marlene" which could be sold to several countries. Delos plans the making of "Berry and the Chance" and "The Fathers of My Children," both adapted from novels. Both will roll in Artur Brauner's CCC studios.

FONO-FILM

Dr. Schwerin's Fono Co. made a name via the successful (both with critics and audiences) Lilli Palmer-Curd Juergens starrer, "Devil in Silk." Release has already been exhibited in a number of countries and is due for U. S. exposure. Schwerin now plans a feature on Heinrich Schliemann, 19th Century German archaeologist. Titled "Dream of Gold," this film is to be made in conjunction with an American partner and will be a tinter. Also in prospect is "Early to Bed," adapted from Ann Piper's book. Schwerin has film rights of Hans Fallada's novel, "Little Man—What Now?." This will be a remake. Also on Schwerin's list is a comedy with Grete Weiser, his actress-wife.

Last September, Dr. Schwerin's Fono-Film signed a deal with three other independent producers, Inter-West (Berlin), Corona-Film (Munich) and Filmaufbau (Berlin) for reasons of coordination. The four firms set up the so-called "Filmring GmbH." Latter represents the interests of the four companies. Latter will continue producing on a separate basis, it's true, but their aim is to march together.

MELODIE-FILM

Melodie-Film is another prominent Berlin producer. Headed by Peter Schaffer and Aldo von Pinelli, it dates from 1952 and has made 15 features (mainly musicals) as of end of 1957. Outfit's 16th film, the Hildegard Neff starrer, "Madeleine and the Legionary," was made for UFA release. Melodie-Film, incidentally, belongs to those local producers who are particularly eager to use big foreign names in their films. Maurice Chevalier, Stan Kenton orch, Josephine Baker and several other prominents have been in Melodie films.

In conjunction with Sandrew Bauman Film (Stockholm), Melodie produced also "Swedish Girl" two years ago. Schaeffer is also the owner of a music publishing house (with branch office in N.Y.)

HD-FILM

HD-Film, headed by pic director Hans Deppe (an oldtimer in the German film industry), was set up in Berlin during 1952 and produced strictly for the domestic German language market.

FRITZ GENSCHOW

Fritz Genschow-Film is the producer of children's films. A number of his full-length fairy-tales have rated recognition.

REAL-FILM

Real-Film in Hamburg was founded by Walter Koppel and Hungarian-born Gyula Trebitsch in January, 1947. To them goes credit that Hamburg became one of the three most important German film towns. Real's initial pic in 1947 was "Ark Noah" and it has produced 41 films until the end of last year. Real-Film, which is associated with Europa-Film (top distrib in the land), has made a number of outstanding German film successes of which "Captain From Koepenick" and "Devil's General" perhaps were the most successful with reviewers and customers.

The current season will see the making of at least eight pix, Carl Zuckmayer's "Schinderhannes" of foremost mention. Under the direction of Helmut Kaeutner, it will star Curd Juergens. To commemorate the 100th birthday of Selma Lagerloef, famed Swedish poetess who died in 1940, Real will make a filmization of her novel, "The Girl From Moorhof." Cast hasn't been set up as yet, but Gustav Ucicky will direct. Also on the list is a musical with Marika Roekk who celebrated a nearly sensational comeback (via "At Green Cocktatoo By Night") last year. Entitled "Stage Free for Marika," this film will again be directed by Georg Jacoby, her husband.

Besides making films on its own, Real rents facilities to other companies. It has eight stages, among the most modern in Europe. Company's special pride is an ultra-modern Mitchell back-pro installation which Gyuala Trebitsch bought in N.Y. last year. Besides other facilities, Real also owns three dubbing studios. Walter Koppel himself is one of the strongest personalities in the German film industry. Acknowledging his great contributions to the latter, Koppel was awarded with the Great Federal Cross of Merit in July 1956.

FREIE

Speaking of Hamburg, notice is owing the newly set up Freie Filmproduction GmbH (Free Film Production Ltd.). This company, project of three top film directors (Helmut Kaeutner, Wolfgang Staudte and Harald Braun), intends to make art-slanted pix. Some of the reasons why Hamburg was picked as headquarters are the convenient location and the up-to-date Real studios in which interiors for their films are to be made; the friendly relationship between them and Real chief, Walter Koppel; and the fact that Europa-Film, which is going to release their product, is also located in Hamburg.

UFA

Special attention must be dedicated, of course, to the new UFA which has own studios here at Tempelhof. UFA hasn't yet started its own production (except vidpix) but it has been financing quite a number of films, including "Italian Journey—Love Included," "Star of Africa," "Madeleine and the Legionary" and "Spring in Berlin."

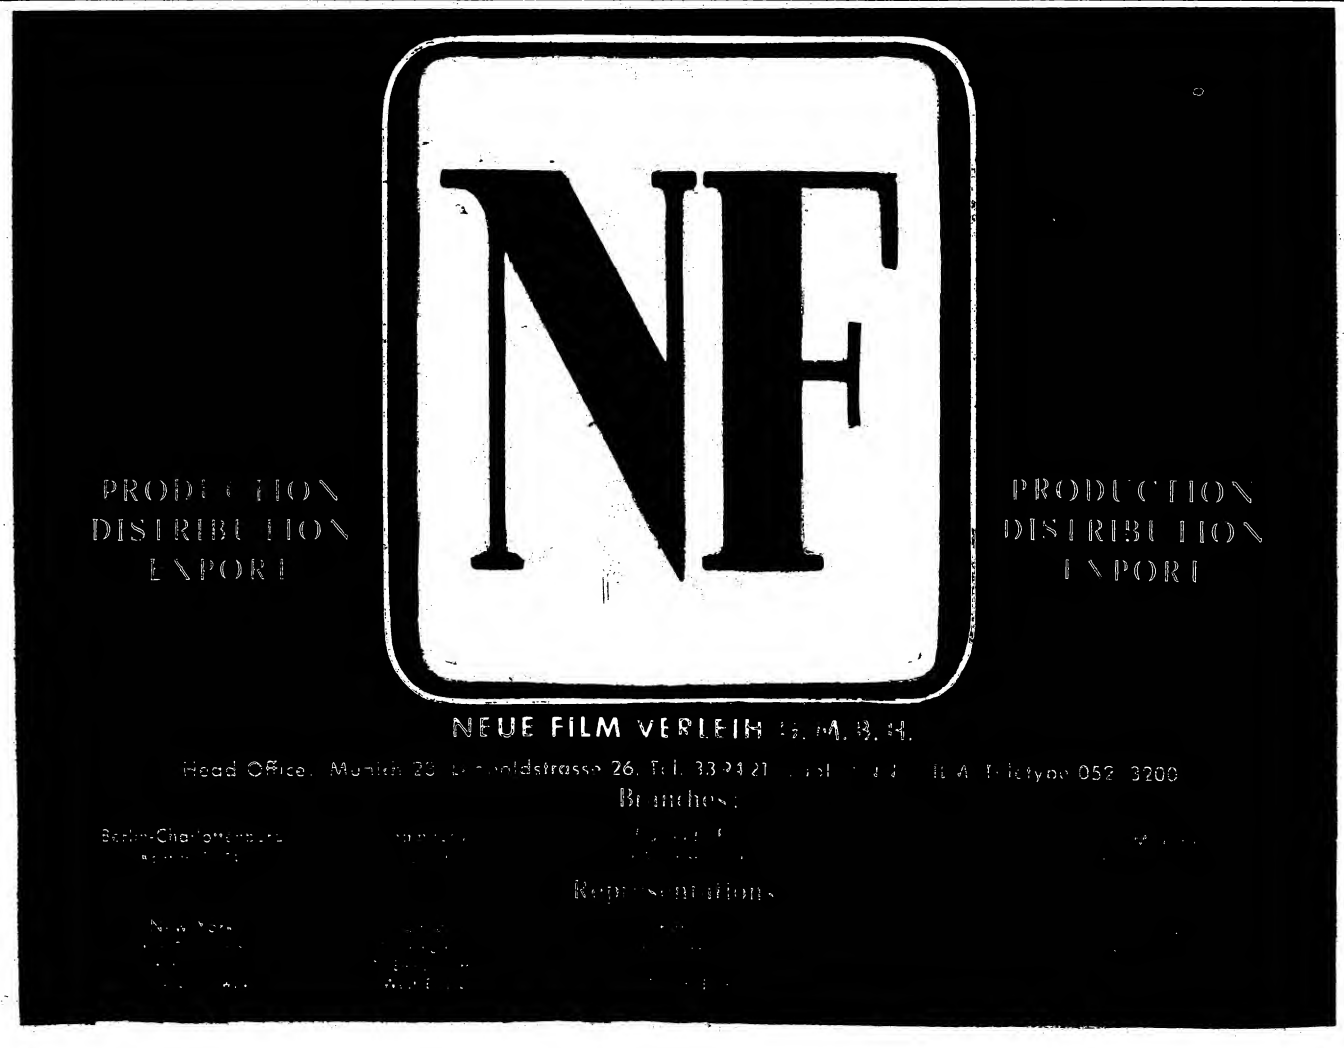
UFA has regained a powerful position in this country. Dozens of cinemas are riding again under the old UFA setup. Its 50th house has just been inaugurated in Hamburg.

Although everything is going on the slow, a considerable number of films are in prospect—40% based on prestige novels. Reportedly, six comedies, three musicals and nine dramas are on draughting boards. In addition, three foreign films will bear the famous UFA rhombus. Maria Schell, Vittorio De Sica, Martine Carol, Folco Lulli, Serge Reggiani and Antonella Lualdi (under the direction of Wolfgang Staudte, Alexandre Astruc and Ralph Habib) will appear in them.

Two, possibly three of some 18 features will be made by UFA itself, the others will be produced by other firms by order of UFA.

WENZEL LUEDECKE

Among the younger local producers, mention Wenzel Luedecke. He is the head of Berliner Synchron GmbH, a dubbing outfit in the huge Mosaik Labs here. He's serviced television films and is German representative of the American CBS series "San Francisco Beat." And, not least, he is the head of the local Inter-West film producing outfit which has made four theatrical films so far. Initial film was the Maria Schell starrer "Master Over Life and Death" directed by Victor Vicas. Other three were "Die Halbstarken" (The Half-Strong Ones), "Terminus-Love" and "Wet Asphalt." Horst Buchholz, idolized star of the German teenage set, headed the cast in all three pix. Buchholz is not under contract with Luedecke but latter has priority rights on him. (In the U. S. Buchholz is known as Henry Bookholt). Luedecke is mainly interested in making teenage exploitation features.



ARG. PRODUCERS 'PROTECTED'

Debris of Peron Film Rackets

Buenos Aires, April 8.

As duly reported in many issues of VARIETY during the past two years, the fire finally lighted under the trousers of Juan Peron has cast doubt upon some of his favorites who were big muscle boys in the film industry here. Efforts are in progress to re-activate the Argentine producers (always charging the film fan and the theatre operator to collect the necessary subsidy) and a new spurt of activity is probable later in 1958.

The invidious question is the same: why is the Mexican film industry so much more successful in producing marketable feature films than its Argentine equivalent? Favoritism and government angles are not unknown in Mexico, but by and large the Mexicans have been the finer cinematographic artists. A number of Mexican releases and stars have drawn favorable notice in Cannes, Venice and Berlin. Argentine scarcely has ever been in the international festival running.

It is hard to separate sheep from goats just now in Argentine film producing enterprises. Listed below are many "shadow" organizations, some in actual bankruptcy. Those names marked with asterisks are the more important. Here's the catalog:

Argentina Sono Film—founded 1933, has five sets with a production capacity of 2-3 pictures simultaneously, 25 individual and two communal dressing-rooms, covers 30,000 sq. metres of land in Martinez, 20 kms from the city. Is now rolling "El Secuestrador" (The Kidnapper) directed by Leopoldo Torre Nilsson and "From the Appenines to the Andes" in co-production with Italo-Mondial-Cine (Folco Quilici). Although this is the best organized of local studios, the Mentasti brothers, who founded and operate it were closely allied with Luis Cesar Amadori in deals with Peron's Dr. Goebbels, Raul A. Apold, and enjoyed a monopoly in production and distribution of news reels, which earned it a place on the "retraint" list during a period of Government probes into the dictatorship's rackets.

Astrum—has one stage and produces telefilms and 16mm. shorts. Has 200 sq. metres 7 kilometers from the center of the city.

Baires—founded 1938, has two sets, 20 individual & two communal dressing-rooms, production capacity 2-3 pictures simultaneously. Has 45,000 sq. mts land 35 kms. from B. Aires at Don Torcuato. These studios are leased to Artistas Argentinos Asociados (AAA) the local version of United Artists. Currently inactive.

EFA (in bankruptcy) production capacity 2-3 pictures simultaneously, four sets, 20 individual & two communal dressing-rooms. ¼ block building 1 km. from Congress building.

Emelco (in bankruptcy)—production capacity 2-3 pictures simultaneously, two sets, 20 individual and two communal dressing-rooms. Had 65,000 sq. metres of buildings in San Isidro, 19 kms from city, now rented to a refrigerator assembly plant.

Film Andes (in Mendoza province)—inactive. Has one set, 10 individual and two communal dressing-rooms, owns four location ground and five covered studio space near Mendoza city in Andean foothills.

Guaranteed — (in bankruptcy), founded 1942 by distributor James Cabouli. Had one set, 14 individual & two communal dressing-rooms and a production capacity of six pictures per annum. Mainly worked in co-production with General Belgrano Pictures. ("La Delatora," "En Carne Viva," "De Niche Tambien se Duerme," "Musica, Alegria, Amor," "La Pecadora," "Springtime of Life" (with Arne Mattson of Sweden), "Of Missing Persons" directed by Pierre Chenal, still unreleased.

Libertador—production capacity 1-2 pictures simultaneously, had studio building 25 kms from center covering quarter block.

* Lowe—has three studio buildings and five crews working simultaneously on production of advertising shorts, cartoons and telefilms. Is currently the most active and efficient producer giving consistent employment to many.

Lumiton (in bankruptcy) — founded 1933, with 98 films to its credit. Had four sets, 10 individual and 2 communal dressing-rooms, production capacity of 3 pictures simultaneously. The studio property covers 1½ blocks 25 kms from center, and is rumored to be planning resumption of production.

Mapol (inactive and most of equipment sold or dispersed)—studios were rented to producers, had 3 sets, 35 individual and 2 communal dressing-rooms, own power equipment, production capacity of 2 pictures simultaneously.

Portena Film—founded 1949 by Luis Landini, made four features. Had one set, nine individual dressing-rooms and production capacity of one picture in a studio building 1,500 sq. mts. from center. Leased intermittently to independent producers.

* San Miguel—founded 1938 by Miguel Machinandiarena, banker and then operator of the Mar del Plata Casino. Produced 60 pictures including "Cabalgata del Circo," featuring Eva Peron. Had 5 sets, 25 individual and two communal dressing-rooms and production capacity of 2-3 pictures simultaneously on a property covering 2 city blocks 35 kms. from the center at Tte. Gen. Riccheri. Last picture was "El Festin de Satanas" (The Feast of Satan) released compulsorily at Loew's "Metro" in B. Aires early this year.

There are also some 30 producers or production units and three cooperative production crews: Atlante Films, San Miguel and Gong. The producers are:

Araucania Films—Now rolling "Sabaleros" directed by Armando Bo.

Antartida—produces telefilms or shorts.

Aires—founded 1956 by ace director Fernando Ayala, actively mainly in telefilm or short production. Ayala and David Vinas are readying work on "El Jefe" (The Boss).

Cinematografica Cinco (The Big Five)—formed under the aegis of Raul Apold, Peron's Goebbels, in 1954, grouping Luis Cesar Amadori, Hugo del Carril, Lucas Demare, Julio Korn, Mario Soffici and Daniel Tinayre. Produced five pictures including "La Bestia Humana," "El Curandero," "El Barro Humano," "Barrio Gris" and "Tren Internacional." Is now in liquidation.

Leopoldo Torre Nilsson—planning a historical opus "The Last Retreat," a biography of General Lavalle (of the wars against dictator Rosas), which will be filmed in Salta and Jujuy provinces.

Cooperativa Gong—a cooperative production crew set up by unemployed workers from all the studios. Has purchased the rights to Renee Pereya Oyuela's novel "El Perjuro" (The Perjurer) for production in Salta Province.

Melipal—shooting near Bahia Blanca "Tierra del Diablo" (Devil's Land) directed by Oscar Carchano.

Sergio Motto & Mario Berrondo—now shooting a documentary of the route followed by San Martin in crossing the Andes.

Carlos Rinaldi — collaborated with Hugo del Carril in directing "Red River."

Julio Steinberg—founded 1954, has made three features, one of which "Cinco Gallinas y el Cielo" (Five Hens and Heaven) won an award at the last Karlovy Vary Festival.

(Among the above are producers who owe the Argentine State Bank around $2,500,000 for production loans made to them in the Peron era. They have been virtually inactive since Peron was ousted, alleging lack of capital, and under the new Film Law will be given new credits of 50% of production cost from the 10% box-office tax funds handled by the National Screen Institute.

There are 20 unreleased native features of the 1955/57 production. There was no production in the first quarter of the year.)

Scuttled by Peron, Kurt Lowe Is Back

His Studios for Commercial Films Attracted Cupidity of Dictator's 'Insiders'

Buenos Aires, April 8.

In the two years since the Peron dictatorship was overthrown, Lowe Publicity Inc. has rebuilt, entirely from scratch, the extensive film-advertising business, formerly operated under the Emelco studio seal. Lowe's is providing film advertising shorts to 500 of the country's 2,600 film-theatres, and providing color shorts to an independent subsidiary in Uruguay.

There are now Lowe outfits operating independently in Argentina, Uruguay and Chile, their only link being the common identity of the founder and guiding spirit, Kurt Gustav Lowe.

Lowe came to Argentina shortly after Hitler's advent in Germany, and became an Argentine citizen. By 1945 his advertising shorts were available in most of the Argentine and Uruguayan film-theatres. He flourished and in 1947 launched Emelco studios to make feature films, of which "El Retrato" (The Portrait) and "White Horse Inn" are the best-remembered of a total of 27 features. These were never as successful as the advertising shorts, and ran the company into financial trouble.

Emelco had the best studios in Argentina, at the river-side suburb of Martinez. But to have the "finest" anything was a mistake under Peron, as it aroused the cupidity of the dictator and his henchmen. These maneuvered Lowe into jail on trumped-up charges in 1948, the studios were forced into bankruptcy and Peron's late brother-in-law, Juan Duarte and his Press Minister, Raul Apold, planned to "buy" the studios cheaply at a forced sale. This plan fell through owing to Duarte's sudden death (whether self-inflicted or by murder is unclear to date).

Meanwhile, after months in jail, Lowe was allowed to leave the country. This second expulsion by a dictator was the worst, as the first was directed against many others, but this second one came to nerves already shattered and was of an individual, not collective nature. Notwithstanding, in Chile, Lowe founded his second company, and soon had it flourishing.

Has Staff of 210

After the September, 1955 Revolution freed Argentina of Peron, Lowe returned and set about reorganizing Lowe Publicity, which is now active as ever in the production and marketing of tv and film-advertising shorts. He now has a staff of 210 in B. Airies, between administration and studio personnel, with agencies all over the country, and contracts with 500 of the country's best film-theatres, in which he has playing-time concessions. The shorts are sold to sponsors on a package basis, including production, distribution and playing time.

Lowe produces shorts of three different lengths, at the rate of about 30 to 50 a month, or 1,800 in a year. The company now has a three-story studio building. There is little chance of recovering the Emelco studios at Martinez. Emelco stockholders are in suit to try and recover the property, which is leased to an electrical appliance factory, but the State Bank holds a great deal of paper on it and long years of neglect and pilfering reduced the once-famed equipment to zero value.

ALL OTHER LANDS PUT ON 'QUOTA'

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires, April 8.

Although Argentina's Provisional Government has only a month left before handing over to President-elect Arturo Frondizi, it is still anxious to do right by the native screen industry.

At least that's the only conclusion to be drawn from the Finance Ministry's maneuvers to restrict foreign film releases, cutting them from 701 in 1957 to around 500 for 1958.

The means used to achieve this was the $5,000 release tax theoretically applied in October, 1957, but which probably will never be collected. Threat of this tax forced the various nations into negotiation, giving the Argentine side the chance to suggest voluntary acceptance of release quotas, in lieu of the tax, plus a pledge from some European countries to distribute Argentine features in the best playing time. In fact, the tax served as a useful weapon.

A 1941 reciprocal trade treaty between the U. S. and Argentina precluded application of such tax to American material, and it wasn't possible to force American film interests to persuade America's exhibitors to release Argentine product. This possibly made for harder bargaining, as after protracted negotiations between Robert Corkery, of the Motion Picture Export Assn., with top Foreign Office and Finance Ministry officials in B. Aires, the Americans have agreed to a voluntary cut in releases from 387 in 1957 to 200 for 1958. They will also advise Argentine distributors on how to market their product in such American states as welcome Spanish-speaking films.

Corkery left for Brazil, without making any statements on the agreement, which awaits Eric Johnston's and the American companies' confirmation, but reliable Finance Ministry sources report that other countries have also agreed to quotas.

The Italians have accepted 35 compared to 58 features released last year. The German figure is put at 15 compared to 16 (and the Germans are talking co-production deals). Soviet Russia will be asked to cut to 10 or 15 instead of 23, and a 50% reduction from 50 last year to 25 this year has been suggested to Britain. Sweden may not be asked to take a large cut, as she only released 12 in 1957. The Mexicans will have to take a cut on their 28 and no mention has yet been made of Spain.

Some circles insist that the insistence on cutting down releases, and the statistics backing them, were inspired by native producers. Arguments in favor of co-production deals obviously emanate from them, and it's not difficult to trace the source of such ideas when repeated in the chaste stone halls of the Finance Ministry. Particularly when anti-exhibitor prejudice is also evident. The abundance of foreign material in the past two years, the officials think, only strengthened exhibitor resistance to renting native product. Even if the latter does involve heavy losses, exhibitors should welcome the sacrifice in the name of "patriotism."

It doesn't seem to occur to these bureaucrats that it's unjust to expect sacrifices of exhibitors, while producers are endowed with the $7,500,000 at which they estimate the annual take from the 10% Screen Institute tax on every ducat sold in a film-theatre. It must be admitted that the native producers have been much more skillful in gaining official ears and influencing officials in their favor.

National Screen Institute chief Antonio Aita is openly criticized by Finance Ministry officials for his neglect or misunderstanding of industry problems. They say all he achieved was to build up an adverse aura around the native product by too candid disclosure of the producers' links with Peron.

Uruguay Data: Admissions Down

Montevideo, April 8.

Democratic little Uruguay is in the throes of as severe an economic crisis as any South American country has even known. Exhibitors are disturbed over dwindling grosses and attendance. For instance in 1954 the first-run theatres in Montevideo had 7,806,288 spectators, which fell to 7,646,542 in 1955, 7,170,932 in 1956 and 6,762,880 in 1957. This was offset by an increase in the number of theatres from 13 in 1954 to 14 in 1955, 15 in 1956-57. In other words, the first-run houses have lost one spectator in every seven in the past three years.

Total attendance all over Uruguay dropped from 19,484,191 in 1953 to 18,477,636 in 1954, 17,361,202 in 1955 and 17,106,000 in 1956. In other words those who used to attend the movies 10 times a month in Uruguay, now go only nine times. Football (soccer) has always been a serious rival to film entertainment in Uruguay, and increased preoccupation with the sport may account for the decline in attendance at film-theatres.

Television is not to blame, as Montevideo has no outlet as yet. There are some 5,000 sets in Montevideo, which pick up the Argentine telecasts on Channel 7, but this is a drop in the bucket.

Uruguayan exhibitors are inclined to blame the drop on increased admissions due to heavy taxes.

OVERHEAD—O'SEAS VEXATION

U. S. Bishops & Censoring

(Following its meeting during November in Washington, the committee of Roman Catholic prelates which guides the National Legion of Decency and the National Office of Decent Literature, detailed its viewpoint on censorship. Here is an extensive excerpt:)

Censorship is today a provocative and sometimes misleading word. It generates controversy by provoking those who would deny in fact any restrictions, legal or moral, upon freedom of expression. It misleads, since few approach the problems of censorship without emotion.

Obviously the State does have some power of censorship. In times of war or great national danger, few will deny it a preventive power. In normal circumstances, however, the State exercises only a punitive function, placing restraint on those who misuse liberty to deny equal or greater rights to others. The State's power of censorship is not unlimited.

Morally, the Church can and does exercise what is called censorship. This right is hers from her office as teacher of morals and guardian of divine truth. Her decisions bind her people but her sanctions upon them are only spritual and moral. She does, nevertheless, express her judgments to all men of good will, soliciting their reasoned understanding and their freely given acceptance and support . . . . . As indispensable as is freedom of expression to us as citizens, it is no less indispensable to the Church in carrying out her mission to preach the gospel . . . Without an unfettered means of communication, the teaching office of the Church is sorely hampered. She counts among her special blessings in our own country the important and fruitful Catholic press.

Because freedom of the press is a basic right to be respected and safeguarded, it must be understood and defended not as license, but as true rational freedom. The kind of uncritical claims for and defense of liberty which so often have been made in our day actually places that liberty in jeopardy. For this reason we feel that light must be thrown not only on its meaning, but also on its limits.

Moral Dimension

To speak of limits is to indicate that freedom of expression is not an absolute freedom. Not infrequently it is so presented. It is alleged that this freedom can suffer no curtailment or limitation without being destroyed. The traditional and sounder understanding of freedom, and specifically freedom of the press, is more temperate. It recognizes that liberty has a moral dimension. Man is true to himself as a free being when he acts in accord with the laws of right reason. As a member of society his liberty is exercised within bounds fixed by the multiple demands of social living. In the concrete this means that the common good is to be served. It will entail, among other things, a respect for the rights of others, a regard for public order, and a positive deference to those human, moral and social values which are our common Christian heritage. It is within this context that freedom of expression is rightly understood . . .

Ideally, we could wish that no man-made legal restraints were ever necessary. Thus restraint on any human freedom would be imposed rather by one's own reason than by external authority. In any case, restraint's best justification is that it is imposed for the sake of a greater freedom. Since, however, individuals do act in an irresponsible way and do threaten social and moral harm, society must face its responsibility and exercise its authority. The exigencies of social living demand it.

In his recent Encyclical of September 8, 1957, Our Holy Father has spoken not only of the competence of public administrators, but also of their strict duty to exercise supervision over the more modern media of communication and entertainment—radio and television. He warns public officials that they must look on this matter not from a merely political standpoint — but also from that of public morals, the sure foundation of which rests on the natural law. What he has said applies with even greater force to the older media—the press and motion pictures—since they have been and continue to be subject to even greater abuse and supply so much of the material used in the programs presented through the more modern media. "Nor can it be asserted," Pope Pius XII writes, "that this watchful care of the State's officials is an unfair limitation on the liberty of individual citizens, for it is concerned not with the private citizens as such but rather with the human society with whom these arts are being shared."

Although civil authority has the right and duty to exercise such control over the various media of communication as is necessary to safeguard public morals, yet civil law, especially in those areas which are constitutionally protected, will define as narrowly as possible the limitations placed on freedom . . . In practice the exercise of any such curbs by the State calls for the highest discretion and prudence. This is particularly true in the area of the press. For here an unbridled power to curb and repress can make a tyrant of government, and can wrest from the people one by one their most cherished liberties . . . Between the legally punishable and the morally good there exists a wide gap. If we are content to accept as morally inoffensive all that is legally unpunishable, we have lowered greatly our moral standards. It must be recognized that civil legislation by itself does not constitute an adequate standard of morality.

An understanding of this truth together with the knowledge that offensive materials on the stage and screen and in publications have a harmful effect moved the Bishops of the United States to set up agencies to work in the field—for motion pictures, the National Legion of Decency; for printed publications, the National Office for Decent Literature.

The function of these agencies is related in character. Each evaluates and offers the evaluation to those interested. Each seeks to enlist in a proper and lawful manner the cooperation of those who can curb the evil. Each invites the help of all people in the support of its objectives. Each endeavors through positive action to form habits of artistic taste which will move people to seek out and patronize the good. In their work they reflect the moral teaching of the Church. Neither agency exercises censorship in any true sense of the word.

The competence of the Church in this field comes from her Divine Commission as teacher of morals. Moral values are here clearly involved. Her standards of evaluation are drawn from revelation, reason and Christian tradition and from the basic norms of the moral law . . .

Who can deny that in modern American life there are many grave moral problems? This is not the judgment solely of the Catholic Church. When the Select Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives calls pornography big business, a national disgrace and a menace to our civic welfare; when the National Council of Juvenile Court Judges attacks vicious and evil publications as a major cause of the change of juvenile delinquency from the thoughtless and mischievous acts of children into crimes of violence, armed robbery, rape, torture and even homicide; when the New York State Joint Legislative Committee at the end of its five-year survey assures us that by actual count trash and smut on the news stands have the advantage of numbers and that those same stands reflect an acceptance of and growing concentration on lewdness—in the face of all this we can only say that we are confronted with conditions which are fraught with peril . . .

U.S. DISTRIBS IN SAVINGS MOOD

Question of how to effect foreign market economies without imparing operating efficiency is bothering the major companies and is a topic of extended discussion among the distributors.

Some lean to the view that "combinations" aren't necessary and that the closing up of certain branches is sufficient for the moment. Others feel that, particularly in the smaller markets, it'd be wise to make reciprocal distribution deals under which one company handles the other's product. A third group takes the position that three or four companies must get together and operate jointly in the smaller territories.

There are negative and positive aspects to all of these ideas. The only fact none questions is that distribution costs abroad are high and still going up, and that the selling overhead overseas is too high to continue on present levels; particularly in the light of the fact that the companies are determined not to give ground in the vital foreign market.

Individual outfits are taking action. Virtually every company is reexamining its branch structure, and several have shuttered exchanges. Universal has done so in Europe. Paramount and Columbia both are shuttering branches in Britain, where Warner Bros. already has taken the lead, eliminating all exchanges and servicing exclusively out of London. Par also is considering pruning its setup in Italy, where the companies each have maintained about 13 branches. Some of these aren't more than 50 miles apart.

On a different tack, Par and Metro are understood to have made a deal under which Par will distribute Metro in Denmark and M-G will handles the Par films in Norway. Metro already has a similar deal with 20th-Fox in several countries.

Several of the other outfits don't see such a combination as a good thing. "If one company distributes very economically, and the other has a high overhead, who gains by combining the two operations," asked one foreign topper. "If the 'cheap' operation takes over the expensive one, the result simply will be that the overhead of the former will go up."

Some argue that, if a company finds that a market can't support a distribution organization, it's better to pull out. This isn't done, for the most part, because of the distribs' competitive spirit. "Instead of doing what's good for us individually, we keep watching the other fellow," was one comment: "Nobody wants to give an inch, even if the status quo costs us money."

One additional problem, particularly in Latin America and also in Europe, is the profusion of labor laws under which it's expensive to discontinue a setup.

With RKO shuttering its distribution organization and concentrating on selling alone (the Rank Organization will do the physical work), the other companies feel that some drastic revamp of the overseas setups is due, probably during the course of the year.

VAF, British Equity In Fight Over Actors

London, April 8.

The British Actors' Equity Assn. and the Variety Artistes Federation are at loggerheads. Comedian Jimmy Edwards, chairman of the VAF has accused Equity of trying to smother the VAF and to draw his members into its own, larger organization. It has 2,800 members and Edwards insists that Equity, with its 9,000 members, is preventing vaudeville performers from doing film work. If a member of the VAF wanted to do a film job he was told that he must join Equity, Edwards claims.

VAF has decided to seek a meeting with Equity at which it will inquire how it obtained members "outside union rules."

Showmanly Handling—Subscriptions, Jr. League and Other Tieups—Can Create Special B.O. for Pix Imports

By PAUL GIFFORD ANGLIM

In recent months there has been much written about the broader use of foreign motion pictures in American theatres. Various ideas have been proposed to provide greater playing time for foreign product, these range all the way from buying theatres as showcases for the product of a country—such as the recent proposals of the French Film Office—to greater persuasion with buyers bookers and circuit operators for more playing time.

For the first time recently someone acknowledged the theory that there is such a thing as a special type of audience for a special kind of motion picture and that a somewhat limited audience can be very profitable if the product is guided towards that special outlet.

There is no doubt that the audience for intelligent unusual films, now normally shown in our so-called "art houses," is growing and will be a solid fact in the future of film theatre operations. However, it cannot be abused as it is at present or it will turn away to other interests.

For the past year, covering much of the country and surveying cities for potential new art operations and inspecting theatres of all kinds, some glaring faults and some bright rays of encouragement in the overall picture have come to the fore.

One great mistake being made currently is the stress on films with strong s.a. (Bardot, et. al.). A little profit like this and all exhibitors rush to show any sort of sex film—including many of Miss Bardot's flops — with the result that community church and civic groups are up in arms and theatres may be restricted from showing this type of product.

A sound "art" operation will offer a well balanced program. It may present a "God Created Woman" now and then, but in between it will present such fare as "Richard III" or "Madame Butterfly" as well as "The Albert Schweitzer Story" to name a few. The sexy item can thus be offered as an example of a foreign point of view as part of an overall program of "Motion Pictures From All Over the World."

Fox-Intermountain's Success

A little over a year ago, the writer spent two years with Fox-Intermountain Theatres as director of a series of special film festivals and operator of a firstrun art house in Denver. The result was most favorable and strongly points out the most practical way to offer more playing time to overseas film product. Out of a total of 35 towns and cities in which Intermountain operates some 90-odd theatres, a "Film Festival" was presented in about 22 with results that ranged from tremendous success to failure-but the failures lost less money than the regular run-of-the-mill product in the same town.

Six programs were offered for an average price of $5 every other week, with some towns using two sets—or 12 pictures—a year. These were all towns that had not previously been available for any sort of an art film booking.

The result is that Fox now uses art films regularly in many of these towns and film earnings to the producers have been considerable augmented beyond the regular art house outlets for their product.

This plan was not unique with Fox, but it was the first time that a major circuit had invested in the time and talent to do a major job of organizing this audience and working out a plan for buying and booking the product into an area that covers seven Rocky Mountain states.

Walter Reade Jr. had previously been successful with his "Tonight at 8:30" showings of art films in his Jersey theatres. Others had tried it now and again but no one had previously given it a really thorough trial.

Results: in Butte, Montana, where the Tuesday average for the Montana Theatre was about $150 for previous years, the art series were a complete sellout (900 subscribers). The Tuesday average now runs from $450 to $600 (depending on how many series ticket holders turn up for the show). The local Junior League makes from $1,000 to $1,500 a year for its charity work, the community is completely happy about the whole thing, and a wide array of film fare is brought to town that otherwise would never see a screen.

The potentials of this plan nationally are such that film rentals can be multiplied many times. A solid, steady audience can be organized to support a series of films in cities and towns of all sizes. This will go on, once organized, year after year with continuing and growing success.

It will take cooperation of the foreign film distributor but further it should be financed by a joint fund from all foreign countries. After several years of basic organizing work, costs would drop to a minimum needed to administer the 1,000-odd festivals that are a conservative estimate of the national potential.

Paramount and Naify Also

In addition to the Fox operation in this field, the writer has also served as special consultant for AB - Paramount's Intermountain Theatres and aided in the organization of similar festivals in four situations in the Salt Lake City area. Later the same effort was tried out with Robert Naify Jr. and tested in several towns of the California Circuit.

These tests prove it is workable anywhere, if properly planned and administered. It must be consistent and given a thorough trial over a period of at least three years.

The Festivals are all organized with the aid and support in ticket-selling of one or more local organizations. Percentages of tickets sold are paid to the local sponsor and this can be on a year-to-year basis or a one-shot tieup. The film programs are carefully balanced and come from all sources. No one distributor is favored with a possible poor run of films between a few good ones. Only the best is bought and in some areas the print is taken over by the circuit and routed for a month or more from town to town until the tour is completed.

Typical of the type of balanced program would be a major Shakespearean film, an opera film, a bright gay English comedy, a heavy dramatic piece such as "Diabolique," and a special item such as "Gate of Hell." The taste and preference of the community is always respected and the local committee provides a film selection committee to work with the theatre manager and his home office in the overall planning for the season.

The principal secret of success in this operation is that it always remains completely flexible and adaptable to the needs and requirements of the community in question. Some of the Fox towns played the film series one day a week, others had it for two days every other week, a few even played and built it up to three playing days.

Distributor cooperation is of course essential and, for the most part, this was freely given to those working with Fox when this plan was first established.

FURIOUSLY CINEMATIC & LINGUAL MALAYA

Imports 874, Makes 13 Features—Dubbing Boom On

By TOM HODGE
(Cathay Film Services Ltd.)

Singapore, April 1.

For a small country with a population of about 7,000,000, Malaya must hold the record for film imports. The number and variety is astonishing considering that there are no more than 150 cinemas to serve. According to statistics from the local Board of Film Censors, in 1957, a good average year, 887 features were submitted. Only 13 of these were made in Malaya. (There were also 443 shorts, 355 newsreels and 421 advertising filmlets, all imported). These figures are for original prints only. They do not include the extra prints when more than one was brought in. Nor do they include 16m. films of which there were 13 features, 317 shorts and 124 advertising films.

English-speaking features, 393 of them, topped the list for numbers; 323 came from the States, 55 from Britain, 10 from Italy, two from France and one each from Africa, Australia and Germany.

Since half of the people in Malaya are Chinese and Indians, the large number of Chinese features (305) is not surprising. Of these 277 originated in Hong Kong. Others came from Japan (12), The Philippines (5) and Formosa (4). Red China sent six films. One West German film dubbed in Chinese. (The Chinese language has several different dialects and 170 of the films were spoken in Cantonese, 95 in Mandarin, 35 in Hokkien and five in Teochew).

About 1,000,000 Indians here represent one-eighth of the population.—Hence imports of films made in India were fairly substantial. Again local dialects or tongues are a factor: 77 were in Hindi, 45 in Tamil, two in Malayalam and one in Sindhi, 125 in all.

There were 16 films from Indonesia, five from Italy, four from France, and one each from Soviet Russia, Mexico, Sweden and The Philippines. All were in their own languages. Two Egyptian films arrived and were dubbed into Malay.

Local film production (by Keris-Cathay and Shaw Brothers) has remained about the same for several years and in 1957 only totalled 13 features, all with Malay dialog.

Last year witnessed an increase in the number of foreign films dubbed or sub-titled in local languages. Japanese and German films were dubbed into Mandarin, Philippine films were dubbed into Mandarin, Cantonese and Malay, Egyptian into Malay, and French and Italian into English. Chinese films had English sub-titles. Russian films had English sub-titles; German had English and Chinese; Japanese had English; The Philippines had Romanised Malay and the one Mexican film had English sub-titles.

America and Britain produced over 90% of the shorts and all but 3 of the 355 newsreels imported. Over half the Yankee newsreels were commentated in Chinese, whereas all the British newsreels were in English only.

Only six features, all American, were banned by the Censors and later by the Appeal Board. They were "Garden of Eden," "Five Boys and a Gun." "Crime in the Streets," "Untamed Mistress," "Delinquents" and "Crazy Stripped Mambo." Some 186 features were "cut" on Censors' instructions.

Puerto Rico Studio Pends

San Juan, April 8.

Lotsa talk, enthusiasm and interest, but final plans are not inked between Puerto Rico and Lester Cowan, who was here four days last week conferring with government officials, lawyers, etc. re proposed film studio. Producer conferred among others with his attorney Daniel Kelly Jr. and Gilbert Collingwood of Puerto Rico's Industrial Development Co. checking on tax exemption, labor matters and locations.

Cowan is expected to return this month. Some insiders hope studio construction will be rolling by June. Impression was left that several stateside writers are already working on scripts.

'Learning' Vs. 'Being Delighted'

Japanese Found New York Instructive But London Profitable Via Special 'Seasons'

Tokyo, April 8.

Japanese Film Season in London October through January seems to have been everything that the Japanese Film Week in New York was not. Results already tangible; (1) "The Throne of Blood" (Toho) and "Living" (Toho) have been contracted for British exhibition by Curzon Cinema with the first picture to open this month; (2) "The Harp of Burma" (Nikkatsu) and "The Lower Depths" (Toho) are in negotiation for distribution rights; (3) Season sponsors The British Film Institute bought a print of "Four Chimneys" (Shintoho) for non-commercial use; (4) High critical acclaim; (5) A repeat season to begin in Oct. and (6) Possibility of Japan opening an art house in London.

Back from Europe where she acted as liaison for the Season, Mrs. Kashiko Kawakita, Uni-Japan (overseas film booster) counciler, declined comment on the New York fest which she did not attend other than to remark, "I think they learned a lesson. They gave us good advice. Next time it will be better."

But she did not hesitate to point out how London was "right" for Japanese product while New York was "wrong."

Most importantly she considered selection of product which for the London Season was done by critics who had seen most of the Japanese pictures at various European festivals and was not selected by Japanese producers.

English By The English

Another plus, she related, was that she heard no complaints on sub-titles. Reason for this was simple, she let the English write English. "We made the preparatory sub-titles here," she explained and we sent them with scripts to Derek Prouse, programming director of the Institute. He corrected all the sub-titles, returned them and we printed them. In that point, we were very lucky."

Best of criticism compared significance of current Japanese product with that of post-war Italy. "The Tokyo Story" (Shochiku) was regarded by aisle-sitters as best entry because of universal tug of emotions by old couple in plot.

Screened at the National Film Theatre during period were 15 different Japanese features and seven shorts. Institute admits by membership only and Mrs. Kawakita revealed that cardholders hiked from 35,000 to 40,000 during Season.

It was not insignificant that four of the features, "Throne of Blood," "Living," "Seven Samurai" and "The Lower Depths" were directed by Akira Kurosawa of "Rashomon" fame. Kurosawa, who writes his own scripts, is Japan's most popular director abroad. Mrs. Kawakita, trying to explain his overseas appeal when his pictures do not always ring solidly at home, said, "His style is not Westernized, but his way of editing is more compact. His pictures haven't the slowness that is typically Japanese."

Mrs. Kawakita thinks Japanese film production, although reduced by 70 to 450 last year, should still be cut in half. She thinks they should be fewer and better and more in accordance with capacity of equipment, personal and audiences. Heavy production here is due to companies' ownership of theatrical chains which they feel obliged to fill with double-feature programming.

She said that Japanese producers have only recently awakened to the need for overseas appeal since domestic income used to bring sufficient income. If idea for London art house goes through, it will be a new theatre opening this fall based on the Studio d'Etoire in Paris which showcases Japanese product 30 weeks a year.

Mrs. Kawakita is also the wife of prez Nagamasa Kawakita of the Towa Film Corp., a distributing company, and she herself is v.p. of that company. Towa, which is celebrating its 30th anni, controls half of the non-American foreign film import licenses in Japan. Company handles 14 licenses of its own plus eight of the British Commonwealth Film Corp. giving a total of 22. Other 22 non-U. S. foreign film import licenses are divided among a number of smaller companies.

In adition to British, Towa imports include French, Italian, Spanish and German product which compete favorably with the U. S. product in urban areas of Japan, but Mrs. Kawakita admits American films do better in rural areas mostly because of greater star b.o. appeal.

BARDOT RESENTMENT VS. CANNES REVEALED

Paris, April 8.

Producer Raoul Levy and director Roger Vadim sent a formal letter to Cannes Film Fest (May 2-18) prexy Favre Le Bret from Hollywood declaring that they would not show their latest pic "Les Bijoutiers Du Clair Du Lune" (The Night the Sky Fell In) (Col) to the festival selection committee, and the pic would definitely not be screened at Cannes.

Reasons given were that too much electioneering between the polls had already been going on for other pix, and the general hostility against the film's star, Brigitte Bardot, by Cannes since her refusal to attend last year though she was nearby. She refused due to the cavalier treatment she supposedly received from the Cannes' authorities during her starlet days.

Brussels to Americans Via USIA Cooperation

Washington, April 8.

United States Information Agency is setting up special facilities to bring the Brussels Worlds Fair to the U.S. televiewers and film audiences. Agency is providing film, radio and press coverage of U.S. events to the 80 countries where it has posts, plus to radio, tv and theatre newsreels in this country.

Voice of America will beam broadcasts about American participation, which includes a number of show biz events, to people behind the Iron Curtain.

Fair opens April 17 and runs through October 16.

'Gone With Wind' Finally Set In Copenhagen

Copenhagen, April 8.

David O. Selznick's "Gone With the Wind" is finally going to be exhibited in Denmark. Since 1945 literally several hundreds of thousands of Danes crossed by ferry to Swedish towns to view the feature excluded from Denmark because of this country's policy of limiting film rentals to 30% of gross.

Carl Dreyer, former director of many art films and now operator of the 800-seat Dagmar Bio in City Hall Square, is the showman who will break the long impasse. He's made the booking as of next September. Dreyer is one of the 14 Danish exhibitors who some months ago broke ranks to negotiate with American distributors, the Danes being starved for Hollywood product.

His Dagmar Bio has since had several long-runs with Hollywood product. "Carmen Jones" (20th) rated four months and "East of Eden" (WB) is now in its 23rd week.

Dreyer has "Rose Tattoo" (Par), "Solid Gold Cadillac" (Col) and "Seven Years Itch" (20th), lined up before the "GWTW." Booking was made by Olaf Borgesen as one of his last jobs as MGM manager before taking a new job at Nordisk Films Kompagni.

2 Bismarck Pix in Germany

Frankfurt, April 1.

Just as complications beset the film world in 1956 when an American and a Germany company both made pictures based on the life of Anastasia, it looks as if a new row is brewing since two companies have announced films concerning the sinking of the Bismarck.

Kurt Ulrich is going to make the film in Germany for Gloria release under the title "Der letzte Fahrt" (The Last Trip) while 20th-Fox has announced a pic, "Sink the Bismarck." Company has assigned author C. S. Forester to do the script. Both companies plan to make the film as soon as possible.

Yanks File for 18 Spanish Permits

First Steps Taken Following End of Long 'Boycott' By U.S. Distribs

Madrid, April 8.

On the heels of decision taken by the Motion Picture Export Assn. to lift the film embargo on Spain, the U. S. companies have submitted 18 applications for film import licenses to Spain's Ministry of Commerce.

Applications were presented by each of the seven U. S. branches for two pix per company pending final word from MPEA in New York on allocation of remaining four. It is thought here Allied Artists will get one of the four and three of the seven companies will be allotted an additional pic under the Gotham formula that will compensate the underprivileged in the future and establish film import parity for the seven U. S. distrib majors when a pact with Spain is eventually signed.

While no agreement has yet been signed between Spain and MPEA, insiders here say Mediterranean MPEA rep Frank Gervasi reached a handshake deal with government officials for the immediate entry of 18 Yank pix, with pact negotiations to be resumed in Rome after the holidays.

MPEA bargainer Gervasi left the clear impression in official circles and along Film Row that he will pursue a dual policy of making considerable goodwill concessions to Spanish film authorities and the local industry while limiting U. S. branch managers to their essential function of exploiting Hollywood films imported.

Radiant MPEA action in eliminating embargo prior to pact-signing contains several offshoots. It means MPEA has finally accepted the Spanish government's Aug. '55 dictum that U. S. companies will distribute a local film feature for every four imported. Also implied, is that Yank companies will temporarily unbloc and deal with film ministries individually on par with Spain distribs.

Of particular significance were Gervasi parleys with some of the leading Spanish distribs. MPEA rep accepted principle of splitting annual U. S. film import quota in an eventual accord with local colleagues and then went on to offer them MPEA product on percentage terms U. S. companies enjoy in Spain. Aware that MPEA has a three-year reserve of top quality pix withheld from Spain during the embargo years, reports here say prestige local companies such as Dipenfa-Filmayer, Charmartin, Cepicsa, Mercurio and others were very receptive to the Gervasi approach.

Worthy of note is reliable info here bracketing Dipenfa-Filmayer, formerly a bulwark of resistance to any pact with MPEA, with other banners generally regarded friendly to Yanks or neutral during long conflict.

Gervasi's trump card acceptance of MPEA participation in Spain's San Sebastian Int'l Film Festival this coming July, rounds a series of steps manifesting a new, positive MPEA attitude to Spain-U. S. film friendship and cooperation.

Dramatic news that U. S. distrib wheels were about to turn again in Spain was relayed by Gervasi in Madrid to U. S. branch managers in Barcelona via a phone-mike hook-up last Tues. (April 1). Gervasi told Barcelonites to submit their import applications, refrain from all comment or intervention, curtail individual trade jockeying and pull together from here in.

Only chill note came from Spanish distributor's prexy Montero who protested to Sindicato and commerce toppers his organization had been bypassed in decision to yield 18 import licenses to American companies. Montero also heads big-time distrib CIFESA which very recently entered an agreement with J. Arthur Rank to release nine Rank pix yearly. Offsetting the chill were statements from important industry personalities endorsing current Spain-MPEA rapprochement.

Gervasi will initiate next round of negotiations in Rome next week, when Spain officials wing in for final and less friendly Spain-Italy film pact talks. Observers here see end of April as date stage will be fully set in Madrid for Spain-MPEA pact-signing ceremonials.

Interim Permits To U.S. in Spain

Spain has issued a small number of permits (2 per co.) to carry U. S. companies to the beginning of the new year, which starts in September. Issuance of the licenses came as part of the agreement under which the Motion Picture Export Assn. lifted its embargo on shipments to Spain.

It's understood that a new Spanish deal remains to be worked out, though the companies appear to have received certain assurances in that connection.

The interim licenses are few because the summer months mean very little business in Spain and the season really only starts in September.

"Hatful of Rain" (20th), a critical hit but a b.o. disappointment in the States, also is having tough sledding abroad, but for different reasons—no dope problem overseas!

...WHILE AT NBC BOBBY RESTED

CBS-TV's Nine Lives

CBS-TV is undergoing a case of acute executivitus, with no less than nine—count 'em—nine changes taking place on the vicepresidential-and-up level at the web within the period of a month. It all started with the surprise appointment of Lou Cowan to the presidency and the shifting of Merle Jones into the new CBS Television Stations division, followed by some rapid-fire changes at the programming level.

Rundown on the changes looks like this:

Lou Cowan tapped to become president of the CBS Television Division, replacing Merle Jones.

Merle Jones moved from prexy of CBS-TV to presidency of the new CBS Television Stations Division.

Jim Aubrey quit ABC-TV to replace Cowan at CBS Inc. as v.p., creative services.

Harry Ommerle upped from v.p., network programs, N.Y., to v.p., network programs, supervising both coasts under exec v.p. Hubbell Robinson Jr.

Mike Dann resigned presidency of Henry Jaffe Enterprises to become CBS-TV v.p., network programs, N.Y., succeeding Ommerle.

Howard Meighan quit as v.p. in charge of Coast operations for CBS-TV to form his own tape production companies.

Al Scalpone quit as v.p., network programs, Hollywood, to become an indie producer under contract to CBS-TV.

William Dozier upped from general program exec on the Coast to v.p., network programs, reporting to Ommerle on the program front but absorbing Meighan's other Television City duties.

Guy della Cioppa upped from director of programs, Hollywood, to v.p. and director of programs, Hollywood.

'We've Sunk So Low There's No Place to Go But Up': Schaffner

By BOB CHANDLER

"To offend no one is to stimulate no one." That's the view taken of the estate of television dramatics by Franklin Schaffner, one of the medium's pioneer and prolific directors. To Schaffner, television's a medium of ideas, and he feels the networks and sponsors, in underestimating what their so-called mass audience will watch at home, has eliminated the stimulation of ideas from their programming product.

"Remember the Army-McCarthy hearings? The public ate them up, and the networks and sponsors were all pop-eyed at its impact. But this was serious stuff, a vital issue, and the public watched it avidly and learned from it. This is what television was supposed to do in the first place, it was supposed to be the medium that would capture human drama and give mass-scale exposure to human idea. Just look at it now. If there's any cause for optimism, it's just that we've sunk so low there's no place to go but up."

Too many well-placed executives still evaluate the medium in terms of motion pictures and the theatre, Schaffner believes, instead of as a medium unto itself. That's why, for example, sponsors and networks have tended to "undervalue the intelligence and recep-

CBS Pay Scales Are Readjusted

CBS Inc. has instituted a cross-the-board 5% increase for its salary-grade employees in New York, effective last week (31), and has established maximum salary rates in each job classification. Employes has asked for a 7% hike.

The vast majority will get the 5% increases, but those over or near the newly established maximums will get a 3.7% cost-of-living increase instead. Hereafter, any employees at maximum will be eligible only for cost-of-living increases. However, CBS will give prime consideration to those at maximum salaries for promotion to higher classifications.

New maximum rates (CBS never had 'em before) represent a 50% "spread" over the minimums, compared to the normal spread from minimum to maximum of about 35%. Web will also give merit raises above and beyond the general increases, with employees rated in the upper third of their departments eligible. Minimum merit raise is $2 weekly, but eligibility has been widened from the upper one-fourth of each department last year.

Benny's Special Emmy

Hollywood, April 8.

For his valiant efforts and contribution to the broadcasting industry through the years, Jack Benny will be presented with a special "trustee award" by Academy of Television Arts and Sciences on Emmy Awards program April 15.

Jane Wyatt will make presentation.

Ballcast Sponsor Picture Brightens For N.Y. Market

With the batter-up season imminent, WPIX, N. Y., has completed negotiations for full sponsorship of its entire pre and post-game shows around its hypoed schedule of 141 New York Yankee baseball games, at home and on the road.

WOR-TV, which will be telecasting the only national league baseball to be seen in the New York area, via its hookup with the Philadelphia Phillies, says it has three orders in the house for its 78-game schedule. Station still is sitting on identity of sponsors, maintaining that the Phillies want to clear up the local Philadelphia sponsor picture prior to release

Ohio Bell Telephone Cries 'Help' as WHKK Shows Overload Lines

Cleveland, April 8.

The Ohio Bell Telephone Co. has threatened to discontinue service to WHKK because of overloaded lines stemming from listener participation programs.

The station, however, has been granted a restraining order by Judge Frank Harvey pending a final hearing. Ohio Bell charged the station's "Sound Off," "Answer Man" and "Tel-a-tune," in which listeners are asked to call the station, resulted in engineering problems, and that eight of the station's 12 lines should be cut off. Ohio Bell officials said the station refuses to change its procedure of conducting the "call back" program.

WHKK officials maintained the programs are in the public interest, informative and educational, and consequently should be continued in their present manner.

BOTH CBS, ABC IN REORG TURMOILS

By GEORGE ROSEN

The tv network top echelon reorganizations, notably at CBS and ABC (NBC is sitting 'em out this time around), reflect the troublesome state of affairs in the attempts to upgrade the programming, ratings and financial plight of the webs.

The week-after-week checkerboard maneuvering is obviously inspired by a more solid three-network competition in a recessive climate and at a time when it's still conjectural as to whether, costs for time and programming being what they are, television can support a three-network economy.

Particularly at ABC and CBS, Leonard Goldenson & Co. and the Frank Stanton-Bill Paley top command, respectively, are confronted with the cold hard facts that the '57-'58 semester was hardly an occasion for rejoicing. There's little attempt to conceal furrowed brows, with a wholesale realignment of program schedules on tap in the wake of an unprecedented list of casualties. (Outside of the westerns, there weren't perhaps more than two or three hits all season, and it's an interesting commentary that CBS' standout attraction was inherited from ABC—the Danny Thomas show.)

On the premise that a network is only as good as the people who run it, here's the blow-by-blow on the administrative reshuffle of recent weeks:

CBS

Upping of Lou Cowan to the prexyship of CBS-TV (with Merle Jones shifted over to the presidency of CBS Stations in the creation of a separate division) accents the Columbia "era of the programming braintrusters." Subsequent developments found Mike Dann coming in as veepee in charge of programming in the east as successor to Harry Ommerle, with the latter elevated to head of national programming, thus ostensibly freeing exec veepee Hubbell Robinson Jr. from day-to-day problems in order to "mind the creative store." On top of that, Jim Aubrey (ex-CBS on the Coast) was brought over from ABC to take over Cowan's former 20th floor corporate veepeeship in creative services.

Almost day-and-date Howard Meighan announced his resignation as head of west coast operations for CBS to stake his future in videotape. From then on in some one apparently got his signals mixed. Out of 485 Madison Ave. hq. came the leak that Al Scalpone, program chieftain on the Coast, would succeed Meighan, with Bill Dozier stepping into Scalpone's shoes. But two days later came the official announcement from the Coast that Dozier would not only head up Coast programming but would coordinate all Hollywood departments. As for Scalpone, he went the "Harry Ackerman way"—a two-year contract to operate as an indie producer to deliver two CBS-financed pilots a year. Guy

BRITISH COM'L TV'S 18,500,000 VIEWERS

London, April 8.

The steady and continued growth of the commercial tv audience in Britain is pointed up in a new report prepared by Television Audience Measurement. The company reckons that the indie tv programs can now be seen by more than 18,500,000 viewers.

The survey shows that more than 71% of homes equipped for tv in the commercial areas are now able to select both channels. The number has grown form 4,185,000 six months ago to 5,405,000.

TAM also reports a steady expansion in Scotland, where the number of homes equipped to receive commercial tv has grown from 187,000, when transmission started last summer, to 396,000.

No Immediate Hope of Settlement Seen As Technicians Strike CBS

Kup's Capers

Chicago, April 8.

Irv Kupcinet, Sun-Times columnist and a WBBM-TV contractee, performed the unprecedented last Friday (28) when he reviewed his station's newest show on its own airwaves. On his regular late-night gabfest, Kup gave frank criticism of "In the Bag," which preemed earlier that evening and on which he is a regular panelist:

"The show has fine potential, which it will realize after the panel improves its questioning and learns not to talk over each other. The panel's questioning wasn't sharp enough . . . I felt we didn't ask direct, penetrating questions . . . Asking such questions is a real art."

Only local of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers which did not go out on strike against CBS and its owned & operated stations was the one in St. Louis, where both the radio and television engineers are seeking a referendum. But on Monday (7), at 1 p.m. approximately 1,300 other rank-and-filers left their cameras and switches and walked out of CBS shops in six cities. Union doesn't see any immediate hope of settlement.

Strike is in effect in New York, where the militant Local 1212 was pushing for a strike as early as last Friday, and in Chicago, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Hartford and Boston.

On Friday afternoon, officers in the national headquarters of IBEW in Washington were accused of "dragging their feet" rather than okaying a strike. A member of the New York local swore at the time the group wanting a strike "would sit there all night if necessary" to get the national officials to go along. Later, it was explained, the national officials were "browbeaten" into sanctioning the strike.

Employees of IBEW at CBS' St. Louis' operations remained uncertain about joining in the strike during the union session in Washington. The uncertainty and the failure to follow the other locals out is the cause of the planned referendum.

The results on CBS are clearly evident in the fouled-up progamming. Moreover, the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians, which has been bargaining concurrently at NBC and ABC, almost certainly will suspend all further dickers with those webs until the outcome of the IBEW strike is determined.

CBS, in a statement following the walkout, said "striking technicians have been offered the most generous contract"—a $185 base pay after three years service and an average annual pay and overtime for a majority of IBEWians would "exceed $10,000 a year." Plus that, CBS disclosed, union in the network's "final offer" was given four weeks of vacation for technicians with the web 15 years. CBS said the contract increases it was willing to make would cost it an additional $1,600,000 a year or over $1,200 a man.

One of basic reasons for the walkout, according to authoritative unionites, is that clear lines of video tape jurisdiction were not drawn up in the dickers. Another factor is that the union has been seeking a shorter work week.

"The strike doesn't look as

GM's Hour Canada Drama Series May Also Ride ABC-TV

Toronto, April 8.

Negotiations are under way whereby the American Broadcasting Corp. will also carry the all-Canadian tv weekly drama show tagged "General Motors (Canada) Theatre," the 26-week series to be carried this fall over the trans-U. S. ABC network as well as the continued coast-to-coast setup of the State-operated Canadian Broadcasting Corp. Should negotiations be completed, this will be the first time a live Canadian tv show will be simultaneously seen in the U. S.

General Motors executives of both countries are currently meeting here to plan this fall's program schedule but neither they nor their Toronto advertising agency (MacLaren's of Canada) will comment. "GM Theatre" would be carried by the ABC network every Tuesday this fall as presented live from Toronto that night over 39 stations of the CBC setup, with the 60-min. segment currently in the 9-10 p.m. slot.

Cleve. Rhubarb: Are Adv. Abuses on TV Worse Than Dailies?

Cleveland, April 8.

Another rhubarb between radio and newspaper personnel popped with Bud Wendell of KYW's "Program PM" taking issue with Cleveland News columnist Sidney Andorn.

Writing that tv commercials "are making us flee tv, commercials in number and inelegance, double spotting, tv with no scruple permits spots in quadruble," etc. Andorn said that "advertising agencies are running the tv business, and the result is a bombardment of offensiveness which triggers an abrupt departure from the screen the moment a commercial begins." Andorn, onetime executive at both WERE and WJW-TV, also noted wide violations of the NAB code.

Wendell, taking issue with Andorn comments, particularly with his unfavorable remarks, said that the Cleveland News, the day of Andorn's column "had a total of 36 pages, only three were completely without ads; 18% of the paper's pages were full-page ads; 59% of the paper was made up of advertisements, leaving 41% for news, features, etc. Concluded Wendell, 22% of our schedule is devoted to advertisements; 78% to entertainment, news, etc. Our schedule had no code violations.

Dozier's Bid For Schary, DeMille

Hollywood, April 8.

Newly-appointed CBS program v.p. William Dozier has launched a drive to sign top film and stage producers for one-shot assignments on "Playhouse 90" next season. Thus far those overtured by Dozier include Dore Schary, Cecil B. DeMille and Kermit Bloomgarten.

However, Dozier is meeting resistance from a number of w.k. producer-directors and producer-writers who feel the risk of a one-shot on tv is great, particularly in view of the coin involved—comparatively small for the type of talent Dozier seeks.

Schary and Dozier conferred Friday, and Schary said later that he was "thinking it over." "Consideration wouldn't be the money. It would be whether to try a particular show," said the producer-writer.

Martin Manulis, producer of the series this season, moves to 20th-Fox with a producer ticket next fall.

D.C. PROBERS IN STINGING REBUKE OF INDUSTRY, FCC; URGE CODE OF ETHICS

Washington, April 8.

Fraternization between the broadcasting industry and the Federal Communications Commission came in for strong censure in a stinging interim report last week by the House Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight. Elements of the industry were attacked for "excessive entertainment" of commissioners and the latter were critilized for spending so much time at industry meetings.

Conduct of some of the commissioners, as disclosed at hearings, "has seriously undermined public confidence" in the Commission, said the report. And practices of the industry in connection with entertainment of commissioners, it asserted, are "unsavory" and "utterly indefensible."

Report recommends legislation providing (1) a code of ethics for the FCC; (2) a ban on acceptance of honorariums; (3) prohibition of ex parte contacts with respect to pending cases; and (4) specific power to enable the President to remove a commissioner for "neglect of duty or malfeasance in office."

On the subject of Commission relationships with industry, the report expresses doubt of the value of "wholesale attendance" by agency members at certain functions while various problems, including network regulation, remain unsolved.

With respect to acceptance of per diem in connection with attendance at meeting in which the industry pays hotel bills, the report finds "an urgent need" for clarification of the regulations of the Comptroller General.

With regard to the channel 10 Miami case, the report declares that pressures revealed to have been brought on "some members" of the Commission "cannot be tolerated." It points out, in this connection that delays in reaching decisions contribute to such pressures.

Those Cuffo Sets

As to the furnishing of color sets and other equipment to commissioners, the report asserts that such practices are "undesirable" and expresses "serious doubt" whether some of the equipment is needed to enable the agency to keep up with developments. The Commission itself, the report suggests, should examine this subject, "applying the most stringent standards of propriety, and take such action as will remedy a situation which has brought on much public

Quinlan's Blast At ARB; Cancels Out

Chicago, April 8.

WBKB has dropped its subscription to American Research Bureau service for reasons, in the words of Sterling (Red) Quinlan, "that it is short-changing television in its measurement of daytime sets in use." Quinlan ABC veep in charge of the station, said that radio salesmen are using ARB gleefully to demonstrate that almost no one watches tv by day. "Nielsen proves this isn't so, says Quinlan, "and it only points up a basic fault in ARB's diary system—a fault that is costing the industry millions of dollars. Women tend to be careless in filling out the daytime part of their diaries. They don't always pay attention to what the children are watching, and often they make deliberate omissions from guilty consciences."

For the nonce, WBKB is going with Nielsen only and will take its chances on losing business from agencies that buy by ARB. Quinlan is in New York this week visiting media buyers to try to raise Nielsen acceptance on Madison Ave. As representative for his network in Television Bureau of Advertising, Quinlan said he is going to take up the ARB matter at the next TvB board meeting on April 24.

Quinlan said he would be willing to renew business with ARB when the alleged deficiencies are corrected.

'Disneyland' for Britain

London, April 8.

The Walt Disney organization has made a deal with ABC-TV to present a once-a-month "Disneyland" show, starting on June 15. A Mickey Mouse Club program will be presented on the other three weeks each month and ABC claim that other programs will enter the homes of 5,000,000 viewers.

"Disneyland" will be a 60-minute show. "Mickey Mouse Club" offering will run for 30 minutes and will be programmed sometime between 4 and 5 p.m. on Sundays.

Frieda's 'On Last' Zinger; A Tough Act to Follow

Washington, April 8.

Former Federal Communications Comr. Frieda Hennock brought some life—as of yore—into the final hearings last week of the current phase of the inquiry by the House Subcommittee on Legislative Oversight.

Never one to shrink from expressing herself, the blond attorney (now Mrs. Simons) made no bones about her feelings at not being reappointed to office when her seven-year term expired in 1955. Nor did she fail to remind the Subcommittee (which includes six Republicans) that the Administration replaced her with Richard Mack, recently resigned. Miss Hennock, a Democrat who has been active in the party, was appointed by President Truman. Mack has been generally regarded as "an Eisenhower Democrat" but denied this before the Subcommittee.

Monopoly forces, meaning the networks and A.T.&T., she said, kept her from staying on the Commission. "Having fought the interests in control of the entire field," she testified, "I didn't stand the least chance of reappointment. And I was not in the least surprised."

Asked who are these interests, she replied:

"The monopolistic forces that control the entire field of tv and radio—the three tv networks, A.T.&T., and all the other monopolistic interests in this field. My feeling is that they control this entire industry."

How could the networks control White House appointments to the FCC?, Chairman Oren Harris (D.-Ark.) asked.

"You can draw your own conclusions," Miss Hennock responded. "The fact is I was not reappointed—and I fought those interests. All I know is that I was kicked off unceremoniously because Commissioner Mack was so badly needed."

The networks, she said, fought UHF and are responsible for there

DE GRAY'S ABC-AM HELMING OFFICIAL

Leonard H. Goldenson, president of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, has made Edward J. DeGray's appointment as new chief of ABC Radio official. After Robert Eastman's formal resignation as president of the radio network, DeGray was simply described as "head" of ABC Radio.

DeGray came to ABC in 1955 as director of radio station relations, and was tagged as a veepee last year.

Eastman finalized his settlement with Goldenson on the five-year contract given him last May. Nature of the payoff was not disclosed, but Eastman is believed to have had a pact from AB-PT to run the radio web at $85,000 annually (plus a percentage of whatever profits his regime showed). The former head of John Blair radio reppery is expected to set up his own station rep biz.

CBS Stations in Chi Make Like Newspaper With 34-Man Staff

Chicago, April 8.

Probably the first attempt on any level to departmentalize a radio-tv newsroom like a newspaper organization was made last week by Bill Garry, head of the 34-man news shop of the two CBS stations in Chicago. Garry has drawn up a plan that would eventually make experts of ordinary reporters, enabling them to analyze as well as to report the news.

First two specialists to be appointed were Dick Etter as science editor and Irvin Lewis as business editor. These two fields Garry classifies as "major spheres of public interest, outside of straight news." Both men have considerable preparation for the assignment, having previously worked in or studied their respective fields. Other headings in Garry's new table of organization are Labor, Education, Human (or Race) Relations, Medical (as divorced from Science), and possibly State Politics.

The newsmen will be working on one general news show per day for either WBBM or WBBM-TV and will spend the remainder of each workday researching, making contacts and in general learning more about his specialty. In creating experts Garry expects to develop a number of sidebar stories for the regular news shows but moreover figures to be amply prepared for thorough analytical coverage should there be a crisis or major news break in any of the fields.

John Daly's SRO As ABC Incepts Late News Strip

ABC-TV has been successful in pushing a precedental late night network news strip. Slated for next fall, John Daly will do a nightly 10:30 to 10:45 p.m. news show, and already the stanza is SRO.

P. Lorillard bought three nights with Daly, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday. The Wednesday night newscast will appear after the Miles-Mennen-sponsored fisticuffs and before 11 p.m., depending for its length on how close to 11 the fights run.

Whitehall Pharmacal inked for Monday and Thursday. The Lorillard deal for Daly was arranged at the same time it inked for half of the new "Rough Riders" series on Wednesdays at 9:30 on ABC.

There is some doubt about the return of Daly's 7:15 p.m. news strip next season, in light of this new development. The decision about its return has not been made, although Daly, veepee in charge of news as well as being an on-the-air personality, is all in favor of keeping both programs going.

An ABC exec said that the problem of station clearances on the 10:30 news package have not been taken up with affils as yet, but he believed that it won't prove very difficult clearing the required minimum asked by Lorillard and Whitehall. He said that since the sponsors asked such a minimal percentage of national coverage, the necessary clearances will be easy to come by.

ABC figures that stations will be able to begin local feature film shows at 10:45, after Daly's newscast, thereby getting a jump on the local film competition.

Historical twist to this situation comes when it is recalled that it was ABC (first with "Disneyland" on Wednesdays) which put into operation the pre-8 p.m. half and full-hour program concept, forcing news back into a pre-7:30 time slot.

'The Bellringers Are Coming'

Minneapolis, April 8.

In his company's three television and two radio stations in this territory, including WLOL here, President Larry Bentson, as a public service has launched a "Bellringers" campaigns for the purpose of "counteracting all of the gloomy business talk being heard currently."

On all of the stations' newscasts bell ringing is followed by a recital of favorable trade developments designed to show that "economic conditions still are pretty good."

Chamber of Commerce bodies and businessmen themselves have been asked to furnish the stations with information anent encouraging economic factors and these are used on the newscasts accompanied by the bell ringing.

Campaigns' theme, chosen by Bentson, is "business is good in WLOLand" or the particular station's area. Newscasters' recitals have to do with increased sales, production and employment when it occurs as well as expansion of facilities, opening of new buildings and other business items "that reflect the economic news' bright and optimistic side."

And, asserts Bentson, there is plenty of this good news.

"Although it may be true that some sections of the country are experiencing economic difficulties, there are many signs that in this area conditions are still favorable," he says.

"Our 'bellringer' campaigns represent an effort to point out this basically happy picture hereabouts, build confidence that will loosen pursestrings and thus stimulate buying and dispel some of the gloomy talk which generates gloom even when it might not have any basis in fact."

In addition to WLOL here, Bentson's BFR Broadcasting Corp. operates KELO-TV and KELO Radio, Sioux Falls, S. D.; KDLO-TV in the Huron-Watertown-Aberdeen, S. D., area, and KPLO-TV in the Pierre-Chamberlain-Mitchell, S. D., area. Theatre circuit owners Eddie Ruben and Joe Floyd along with Bentson are principal owners.

Subsequently the advertising council has decided to incorporate the Bellringer Crusade into its own anti-recession campaign.

'Music 'Til Dawn's' Unique Status In Achieving a 5-Year Milestone

Considering that it was established in the blackest days of radio, American Airlines' unique "Music 'Til Dawn" network-spot pattern is taking on something of a milestone status in celebrating its fifth year on the air next week (14). That five-year standing should mark something of a record in terms of modern-day radio.

The "Music 'Til Dawn" pattern consists of sponsorship of separate all-night good-music shows on five CBS Radio o&o stations, along with four independents purchased by American and its Lennen & Newell agency on a spot basis. Show runs six hours a night (eight on Saturdays), six nights a week, and because of the clear-channel locationing, can reach about 90% of the U. S. population in mid-morning. That's a lot of radio, particularly over a five-year stretch.

Cumulatively, it's a lot of money too, but not on a cost-per-thousand basis. The CBS group is bought on a package basis (stations never had a rate card for the middle of the night, since they used to shut down at 1 or 2 a. m.), and the four

'PLAY YOUR HUNCH' NEWEST TV GAME

Still another game show, "Play Your Hunch," has been tapped for daytime duty on CBS-TV starting June 30. "Hunch," a Goodson-Todman package, will replace the Garry Moore show at 10 to 10:30 a.m. on that date.

Stanza involves couples competing against each other for prizes, the competition taking the form of guessing which of three objects is the correct one for the question involved. Emcee hasn't been set yet.

NABET's Rallying Point: A Shorter Wk. at NBC, ABC

Though the feelings of the national membership will not have been completely polled until tomorrow (Thurs.), there are definite indications that the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians will use a shorter work week demand as the "rallying point" in future contract negotiations with NBC and ABC.

Union has been assessing the attitudes which caused rank-and-file engineers to reject the latest NBC-ABC offers. Without a strong bargaining point to unify the membership, NABET negotiators face a difficult situation vis-a-vis NBC and ABC, since the engineering contracts with the networks were only "marginally rejected." NBC engineers, on a national scale, managed to defeat the contract by only 50 votes. At ABC, the national margin was 85.

After the objections are tallied, the unions' local boards will review the reasons why offers were rejected by such a small majority, thereafter the contract demands will be adjusted accordingly. Shorter work week, so far, seems to be a substantial problem and probably will take precedence in the dickers over most of the other gripes.

Talks with the networks should be reconvened after the review. But this much is held certain by union sources: Since International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers struck CBS, the NABET dickers will not begin again until CBS and IBEW settle their strike; NABET seeks to be in a position to assess IBEW's gains before making its own final offers.

Fleischl Ankles WMCA In Tiff

M. M. (Mort) Fleischl, executive vicepresident and general manager of WMCA, quit after differences with Nathan Straus, the president and owner of the N.Y. radio indie. Fleischl, who had been with the indie for 17 years, seven of them as administrative topper, told station employees before resigning that he was "in disagreement with the basic policies set by Mr. Straus.

Fleischl refused to comment further on his reasons for ankling, but it was generally held that the tiff concerned future programming Station is essentially a music and news operation with about 10% of the programming going to public service shows, a field which Straus reportedly holds dear.

Recently, top management at the outlet has held a series of program conferences on how to further upbeat audience interest, but it wasn't until Wednesday (2), the day before Fleischl made his resignation formally to Straus, that any one seemed aware of any sharp differences. Fleischl did say that he made up his mind to leave WMCA "reasonably quickly."

So far, station has not chosen Fleischl's successor as general manager. Sales manager John McSweeney and new program chief Peter Straus reportedly will operate as a joint command, under the senior Straus' general aegis, for the time being.

MADISON AVE. RUNS SCARED

The Helffrich Merry-Go-Round

For somebody who's not a performer, one of NBC's most prolific space-grabbers in the consumer press is Stockton Helffrich, web's continuity & acceptance director. What with tv censoring a major issue for newspapers and magazines, Helffrich has been on a literal merry-go-round of writing and being written about and stands a fair chance of becoming one of the best-known gents in broadcasting.

A compilation of interviews and published pieces on or by Helffrich since the first of the year shows no less than 17 pieces on him, along with a radio and a tv guest shot (on NBC, natch). That lineup includes trade stories and his own actual VARIETY piece, but also such breaks as Parents mag, Cosmopolitan, Herald Tribune TV Mag (in the works),N.Y. Journal-American, San Francisco Examiner, Nashville Banner, Louisville Times & Courier-Journal.

Helffrich, natch, doesn't go out of his way to get the news breaks, nor does the NBC Press Dept. pitch him for interviews. But Helffrich's candidness, along with his both-sides-to-every-story approach to censorship, has made him the irresistible object of every newsman with a bone to pick or praise on network program content.

Broadcasting Foundation's 29-Nation Program Exchange Via Tape & Film

Judith Waller, retired NBC mid-west public service director, has been engaged as program consultant of the Broadcasting Foundation of America, the organization designed to bring about an exchange of recordings on tape and film between the U.S., Europe and the Far East via radio-tv outlets of some 29 countries.

Trustees of the BFA met yesterday (8) at NYU's Town Hall Club and had on the agenda the hiring of Basil Thornton, former BBC director in N.Y., as executive director of the non-profit, tax-exempt organization. Thornton is currently advertising manager of BBC publications.

The BFA also announced the appointment of several new members to its board of trustees, among them Dr. George Schuster, president of Hunter College; Henry Morganthau, III, WGBH-TV Boston, and Mrs. Scott Bullit, owner of KING-TV, Seattle, and other stations. Other trustees are Frank N. Freeman, U. of California; Lewis Hill, KPFA; Richard Pack, veepee, Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., Robert Redfield, U. of Chicago; Seymour N. Siegel, director of communications, Municipal Broadcasting System, N.Y. and George E. Probst, Thomas Alva Edison Foundation.

It is expected that the interchange "of expressive utterance

'Wonderful Town' Set For CBS-TV

CBS-TV has tied up television rights to "Wonderful Town" and will present the musical as a two-hour spec next fall with Rosalind Russell recreating her Broadway starring role. Web has already sold off half-sponsorship in the show, to General Time and expects to sell the other half in a matter of a couple of weeks with Pepsi-Cola as the hottest current prospect.

The "Wonderful Town" tv situation has been a compound of some confusion in past weeks, what with three separate parties offering rights to the show. One was Herbert Ross, who staged the recent revival at N. Y. City Center and sold tv rights to that (with Nancy Walker starring) to the Mills-Park-Milford packaging firm, which in turn was in negotiation with NBC. Another deal was made by Talent Associates earlier.

However, CBS' deal is with Joseph Fields, who coauthored the book with Jerome Chodorow and who is said to have priority on the rights. Since rights in another medium customarily reside with the author, Fields felt safe in making the deal. What complicated the situation was the presence of so many collaborators (three producers, composer, librettist, two book authors and the original novel on which the musical was based). While CBS sewed up the Fields deal, it also negotiated a deal with Miss Russell to play the lead.

Toni, Lever To Share Tab on Groucho Marx

Toni Co. will share sponsorship of Groucho Marx with Lever Bros. when the show shifts to Thursdays at 10 next fall. Impression had been given that Lever had taken over the show on a solo basis, but actually Toni was in there with a renewal of the alternate week it has held down for the past three years with DeSoto.

Tatham-Laird repped Toni on the deal.

Buick's 'Pursuit' May Substitute Chrysler 'Climax'

Hollywood, April 8.

Hollywood tv stands to lose two live hour shows and gain one if current jockeying by agencies with CBS reaches the firming stage. Buick is reported interested in buying CBS-TV's hour show, "Pursuit," to be slotted on Thursday night in the "Climax" time. If "Studio One" loses its Westinghouse sponsorship, the web may replace it with a live hour Garry Moore show from N.Y.

McCann-Erickson, which acquired the Buick account after dropping Chrysler, is said to be in hot pursuit of "Pursuit" but on condition that it is given the "Climax" time. It is still indefinite that the new agency for Chrysler, Young & Rubicam, or the corporate agency, Leo Burnett, will recommend renewal of "Climax" for next season.

Two pilots have been made of "Pursuit," a detective series, which are now being marketed. "Pursuit" would have a Hollywood origination.

Bob Hope 'Overset' Footage for Allen

Hollywood, April 8.

Because he decided to have his show last Saturday consist entirely of footage shot during his recent trek to Moscow, Bob Hope has sold a sketch originally planned for his seasonal closer to Steve Allen, who will use it April 20.

It was a baseball skit, in which Hope banters with diamond stars, and runs around 12 minutes.

Maine's Big Stick

Portland, Me., April 8.

The tallest tower in Maine is planned for WGAN-TV.

Gen. Mgr. Creighton E. Gatchell said the proposed tower would be at Gray and 1,107 ft. high, 791 feet higher than the present tower at West Falmouth.

EXEC SALARIES DOWNGRADED

Pinch of rising costs and the recessive outlook is causing a mild form of executive panic along Madison Ave., with a number of agencies and public relation firms last week instituting salary slashes among $10,000-a-year-and-up executives. At other agencies, it's being reflected in outright firings in all salary grades.

One agency, Kenyon & Eckhardt, instituted a cross-the-board 10% slash for all execs making more than $10,000 a year, with a graduated slash for those in the $30,000 and up classification. Other agencies and some p.r. houses have instituted similar slashes. Salary cuts in these cases are being made to avoid firings, since none of the agencies want to let people out at present, and also feel they might have problems rehiring once the economy begins to expand again.

What's got Madison Ave.'s middle-range executive worried is the fact that this is the first general agency cutback since the war. What with television expanding, the mild economic recessions of 1949 and 1954 didn't touch the agencies, which then were hard-put to find bigger & better execs to handle the burgeoning business. But with television no longer the exciting new medium it was and no longer a must on any large advertiser's budget, it hasn't acted as the cushion it once did.

Fact is that between rising costs, declining ad budgets and that old 15% commission bogey, the agencies aren't showing the nice fat profits they've turned out since the end of the war. And, as in any other business during the recession period, they've decided to cut fat, either in excess personnel or in the bigger salary brackets.

'20th Century' Safe As a Rock on '58-'59 Prudential Bankroll

Prudential Insurance has renewed CBS-TV's "The Twentieth Century" for another go-round next season, and the network's public affairs dept. is afready putting another 26 shows in the series on the drawingboards. Prudential pattern will copy this season's in that besides the 26 "Century" shows, it will also buy around five or more news-public affairs specials on the order of this year's "Where We Stand" and "Ceiling Unlimited." Time slot is the same, 6:30 Sundays.

New series of 26 will operate on same general format, but will use more foreign-made footage, giving greater emphasis to other countries and less on the U. S. Moreover, CBS will send more crews overseas to shoot new footage for the series. Production setup will remain the same, with Burton Benjamin as producer and Ike Kleinerman associate producer on the historical-old footage shows and Al Wasserman and Stephen Fleischman handling those shows done live or requiring new shooting. Walter Cronkite returns

ABC-TV Mulls Byron Half-Hour Live Series

ABC-TV is mulling use of a half-hour live series next season produced by Ed Byron and called "Diagnosis: Murder." Initially, Byron, who produced "Mr. District Attorney" on radio, planned the "Diagnosis" series for telefilm but it seems the web is more interested in a live half-hour drama.

Network has not committed itself to Byron yet, but if ABC goes through with its plans, "Diagnosis," revolving around the work of a big city medical examiner, will be the net's first live drama in some years. Marc Brandel penned the initial script.

WGA Squabble May Cut Off U.S. Shows for Armed Forces O'seas; Retaining of Com'ls Held Violation

As the result of a squabble between Writers Guild of America and the three television networks, U. S. armed forces personnel abroad will probably be deprived of kinescopes and films of American web shows. WGA last December discovered that the commercial messages were being left in the programs delivered to military posts overseas, a tactic which the union said was in direct violation of its basic network agreements.

WGA contract allows the networks to deliver the shows without demanding any extra payment for the additional exposure provided the blurbs are deleted. Right after discovering the webs were sending the stanzas abroad without complying with the editing procedure, the guild called a meeting with the webs and members of the Department of Defense to iron matters out. WGA gave the nets until the end of the contract on March 31 to make the necessary changes, but three days earlier on March 28, CBS sent a letter to the Department of Defense saying, "If the Defense Department or the advertisers of the programs are willing to pay editing charges, the prints could be decommercialized and you could continue to receive these programs. However, our past experience has led us to believe that relatively few advertisers would be interested in making a financial contribution to this project if their commercial messages are to be deleted."

A copy of the letter fell into the hands of WGA and Erik Barnouw, guild's national chairman, informed the press that the union "cannot believe advertisers consider only the gain to be derived from commercial messages in opposition to benefiting servicemen and women stationed with the armed forces abroad."

Westinghouse Bides Time on 'Studio 1'

"Studio One" has gotten a month's lease on life, with a decision on its future not due from Westinghouse Until May 1. If Westinghouse decides not to continue the dramatic show, it will probably purchase an alternate-week hour plus two alternate-week half-hours on CBS-TV to keep its 60 minutes weekly total exposure intact.

Westinghouse is tied to a firm time contract till next September, but its program option was up April 1. It requested and received a month's extension prior to the deadline.

ABC-TV Accents Fri. Nite Shuffle; 'ESP' Show Set

In the new program spot for only a week, ABC-TV veepee Thomas Moore already has a fairly good idea of the network's fall program plans, and he's leading off, in an obvious area, with a major Friday night shuffle.

ABC-TV just sold Chesebrough-Ponds on a July 11 start of "ESP," a live paneler to take the Friday 9 to 9:30 slot. C-P bought a 52-week pact, with the usual 13 week options, so that if the stanza (which is also jumping on the home viewer giveaway train with a $100,000 gimmick of its own) doesn't click, they can back out by fall. In any event, ABC wants to hold 9-9:30 open for a paneler or something else in the lighter vein such as a situation comedy.

Moore's plans, worked up with ABC-TV prexy Oliver Treyz, also call for dropping "Jim Bowie" at 8 and substituting another telefilm package. The most likely 8 p.m. prospect at this juncture is Screen Gems' situation comedy series to star Donna Reed, although ABC did consider moving "Colt 45" into the 8 slot for a brief time.

From 9:30 to 10:30, Moore is prepping Warners' "Public Enemy."

Treyz and Moore have decided to concentrate on Friday rather than Monday, which apart from Lawrence Welk (9:30 to 10:30) is another weak night. Plans to jazz up all of Monday have been delayed for at least another season, on the principle that it doesn't make sense disturbing Ralston-Purina's "Bold Journey" and Firestone's musicaler, which come before Welk, just to push for big ratings. Web feels both sponsors will be back next season, even though the shows are not ratingstrong.

Between 7:30 and 8:30, Moore hopes to plant two half-hours,

All-Star Lineup For Tony Awards on TV

American Theatre Wing and WCBS-TV, N. Y., have corraled a group of top name stars for the station's telecast of the Wing's Tony Awards ceremonies Sunday (13) at the Waldorf-Astoria. Lineup includes Mary Martin, Tyrone Power, Judy Holliday, Phil Silvers, Greer Garson and Walter Slezak.

Show will again be sponsored by Pepsi-Cola Metropolitan Bottling Co., with Bud Collyer emceeing, Mindy Carson and Bill Hayes handling the singing

'Lucy' Returns To Mon. at 9 Stand

Those "I Love Lucy" reruns will have been all over the CBS-TV map by fall. "Lucy" will shift from its current Wednesday night perch in June over to Mondays to serve as the summer replacement for the Danny Thomas show, then in the fall will probably move to Fridays at 7:30. That makes a total of five days of the week that have seen "Lucy" in their schedules over the years.

Series started in its now-historic Monday at 9 spot. First of the "Lucy Reruns" series ran on Sundays, then on Saturdays the following year. Now they're going Wednesdays, with the Gold Seal sponsorship lapsing at the end of the month. General Foods has bought them to replace Thomas for the summer, and after that, CBS is planning to install them Friday nights. Web is pitching several sponsors on the Friday proposition, on the basis that since they've done well Wednesdays, they ought to walk off with the Friday 7:30 honors, where the competition isn't so rough. Also, since CBS now owns the negatives, they can be priced out reasonably for a good cost-per-thousand.

The summer stint for the Thomas show comes as something of a belated twist. While it was in first-run in its old Monday at 9 slot (now occupied by Thomas), the "Lucy" show never ran during the summer, saving its repeats for a second network run in another time. So now that it's a rerun series, it's doing summer duty in its old time slot after all.

Sy Weintraub's Major Expansion; $3,000,000 Sol Lesser Takeover

Sy Weintraub, who recently bought controlling interest in Sol Lesser Productions, is in the market for major properties and talent for telefilm and feature production, as part of his overall plans of expansion.

Weintraub in investing more than $3,000,000 for controlling interest, the deal including theatrical and tv rights to the "Tarzan" character, as well as other properties owned and controlled by Sol Lesser Productions. Weintraub, a vet film distribution and station operator, became prez of the firm, stjll bearing the same name, with Lesser becoming board chairman.

Lesser Productions, according to Weintraub, will aim at a national sale operation in tv. The "Tarzan" pilot film, starring Gordon Scott, has been completed and will be pitched shortly. Other major properties coming with the takeover are tv rights to Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" and tv and motion picture rights to C. S. Forester's "Captain Horatio Hornblower" stories. Weintraub said the latter would be filmed in England.

Weintraub sees the company also expanding in the merchandising and music publishing field. He said that Lesser Productions will either buy up an existing music publishing firm, or get in the biz itself. Incidentally, outfit also owns a substantial interest in "Bold Journey" and "I Search for Adventure."

In the feature field, company will stick to either the big A's or the exploitation, quick low-budgeters. Weintraub says he's looking into James Jones latest entry "The Pistol" for a possible feature entry, as well as a Broadway play.

Deal also includes negative rights to 45 features, including 14 "Tarzan" pix produced by Lesser in the past 15 years. The "Tarzan" films include "Tarzan and the Lost Safari," presently in release by Metro, and the recently completed "Tarzan's Fight for Life," which is scheduled for release by Metro in August. Additionally, the deal also takes in real estate holdings in Encino, Buena Park and Van Nuys, Calif.

Weintraub was most recently prez of Telestar Films, selling out to Bernard Schubert. Previously, he was exec v.p. of Flamingo Films and prez of KMGM-TV, Minneapolis. He's presently prez of radio station WKIT, Long Island.

'Bickersons' As A Telepic Series

Phil Rapp is reviving "The Bickersons" as a telefilmed comedy series next season and starts shooting the pilot at California studio April 19. Bernard Shubert is financing the trial film and will handle its sale. Set for the leads as the "battling Bix" are Lew Parker, who formerly sparred with Frances Lanford in the radio version, and his wife, Betty Kean. Rapp created, wrote and produced the comedy series for radio 12 years ago.

"Bickersons" has been in litigation for the past three years when Rapp filed suit for $2,000,000 against CBS and Jackie Gleason, who was charged with burlesquing his characters in "The Honeymooners." Pre-trial examination is set for next month.

Rapp will have another comedy entry for next season in "Deputy Seraph," a fantasy being scripted for piloting by George Beck.

3 NETWORK TV'ERS INTO SYNDICATION

A new group of off-network skeins are due to be turned over for a syndication ride.

Series include 78 episodes of "Jim Bowie," coming off the ABC-TV net, which will be open for syndication via ABC Film Syndication in the fall.

Others will be the "Eve Arden Show," 26 episodes, and "Adams & Eve," 78 episodes, to be handled by CBS Film Sales.

Shainmark Exits Guild

Lou Shainmark has ankled as vicepresident in charge of advertising and public relations for Guild Films. A longtime associate and friend of Reub Kaufman, the telefilm company's former president, Shainmark resigned only two weeks after John Cole was named new prexy of Guild.

Shainmark joined the production-distribution outfit in the summer of 1953, shortly after Kaufman formed it. Before that, he was managing editor of the Chicago American and the Hearst Washington Bureau. The former Guild flackchief didn't announce his immediate plans.

'Robin Hood' Into Syndication; 600G RKO O&O Deal

A $600,000 order by RKO Teleradio o&o's will kickoff "Robin Hood" in syndication next fall.

The order take in RKO o&o's in N.Y., Los Angeles, Detroit-Windsor and Boston. Official Films will definitely release the Sapphire production for a rerun ride in syndication, no matter what the network decision may be.

Wildroot, one of the alternate network sponsors, has bowed out on the series, telecast Monday nights on CBS-TV at 7:30 p.m. The other sponsor Johnson & Johnson hasn't made a definite decision on the show, now finishing up its third year, although chances of network continuance are slim.

If it remains on the network, there will be 94 episodes available for syndication, the overall series being retitled "The Merry Men of Sherwood Forest" so as not to have a title conflict.

GALLO WINE EYEING 'N.Y. CONFIDENTIAL'

Gallo Wine, now riding with "The Millionaire" on WCBS-TV, N. Y., looks likely to be the alternate week sponsor of "N. Y. Confidential."

Television Programs of America show, bought by the CBS-TV, N. Y. flagship, will be slotted Saturday nights at 7 p.m., beginning at the end of September. It will replace "Millionaire" in the slot, now partially sponsored by Gallo Wine. Station is in the midst of negotiating with the wine company to ride "N. Y. Confidential," starring Lee Tracy, which will be shot in N. Y., beginning next month.

Station currently is telecasting two first-run syndicated properties, Ziv's "Sea Hunt," and MCA TV's "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer."

CBS-IA in Huddles On Newsfilm Cameramen

In the midst of its larger negotiations, CBS met again last week with the newsfilm cameramen of International Alliance of Theatrical & Stage Employees. It is reported that a general pay increase of about 9% was asked, but no agreement was reached by the network and the union.

CBS and IA expect to meet again sometime this week to negotiate further. Date was left open, it's reported, because CBS was still facing major dickers as of last week with International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Hollywood, April 8.

"The Last Notch," which appeared in 1954 on "U. S. Steel Hour" and last year found its way to theatrical screen as "The Fastest Gun Alive," will return to tv as a series.

MGM-TV is now prepping new series, based on the Glenn Ford feature production, to be produced by Jack Dunning, film editor on "The Brothers Karamazov," as his initial production stint. George Cukor will do tests on series, for which Louis L'Amour has completed first draft of pilot teleplay.

So Who's Right?

About 80% of all the actors in Screen Actors Guild and American Federation of Television & Radio Artists hold cards in both unions, an unofficial AFTRA count indicated recently.

But SAG says "the actual figure is nowhere near as high as 50%."

Essential value of knowing the count on card interchangeability would be for purposes of affecting a merger of SAG and AFTRA.

Poll Bullish On Filming in N.Y.; City Eases Way

There has been a complete change in the degree of cooperation from N. Y. officials to telefilm and motion picture producers filming in the metropolitan area, according to Martin Poll, prez of Gold Medal Studios in the Bronx.

Currently, N. Y. officials are eager to court such production, cutting red tape and making on location shooting feasible for the first time. Poll, comparing the telefilm and feature shooting now going on and planned shortly with that of previous years, predicts a renaissance of film production here.

His studios, which were the old Biograph Studios taken over in '56 by Gold Medal, now is working at 85% of capacity.

Poll is associated with scripter Jim Cavanagh in the production of "Johnny Cordes," via Television Programs of America. TPA will be utilizing the studio for "N. Y. Confidential." Other telefilms being produced in N. Y. include "Decoy," "Phil Silvers Show," "Rendezvous," "The Great Montague," and pilots by Official Films Screen Gems, and Pyramid Productions.

Most of the Gold Medal biz currently are cinematics, with 20 devoted to commercial film production. The studios' crews now have a flexibility ranging from operating on a $1,700,000 budgeted feature to a half-hour telefilm series.

SWEETS RENEWS ON 'TEXAS RANGERS'

Sweets Co. of America (Tootsie Roll) has renewed Screen Gems' "Tales of the Texas Rangers" with next season marking its third year of sponsorship on the western (General Mills was the initial sponsor). Series is current on ABC-TV, but Sweets and its agency, the Harry Eisen Co., have not decided yet which web to place it on for fall.

Production on 13 new segments gets underway in late spring or early summer for the fall start.

TPA Names Ward For Program Slot

Albert Ward, until recently with BBD&O as tv account exec and producer, has joined Television Programs of America, in the newly-created post of eastern program drector.

Ward was with BBD&O from 1947 until a few months ago, where he also handled Revlon as an account exec. In his new post, Ward will be responsible for developing new shows, working with clients and ad agencies in developing new formats, and coordinating production activities with the sales department.

Troyer's Com'l Film Slot

Colorado Springs, April 8.

Alexander Film Co., whose National Division headquarters here, has appointed William L. Troyer veepee repping the tv commercial film company in the Pacific Northwest, with Seattle as a base. Troyer's appointment is part of the firm's expansion of its National Division.

MPO Productions, the telefilm commercial - industrial production company based in New York, is opening a fullscale Coast operation. MPO prexy Judd L. Pollock made a deal with Republic Pictures for use of the Republic lot and facilities there and hired Mel Dellar as executive producer in charge of the new west coast operation.

Move pinpoints a recent concept among teleblurberies. Many of them produce for ad agencies on both coasts at present and a few of them have spoken of setting up permanent bases in Hollywood. Some time back Robert Lawrence Productions organized a Hollywood tieup, but this step by MPO marks the first company in some time to establish a permanent Coast operation. (Most recent similar setup was by Filmways, wich dropped its McCadden Productions affiliation and set up shop for itself.)

Fact that MPO committed for a Coast setup only highlights the new importance of maintaining a two-Coast teleblurb operation. It was only a few months back that MPO opened its new production centre in New York's Lincoln Square area and not too long after it acquired the ATV production centre in Long Island.

As it stood, before the Republic deal, MPO found that agencies, wanting to capitalize on the better weather on the Coast and the variety of new locations for outdoor filming, were asking members of its N. Y. production crew to wing coastward to do additional filming. With the new permanent operation, MPO figures it can obviate some of the coast-to-coast shuttling, although it expects that some of it will still have to be done to satisfy advertiser demands. Two-coast arrangement further gives MPO easier access to lab facilities on both coasts, thereby quickening final processing.

Importance of the measure also keynotes the first stages in the disappearance of the hot-and-heavy competition between Coast teleblurberies and their counterparts in New York. The bigger companies, who are getting the lion's share of the new commercial biz, are all expected to establish two-coast arrangements before too long a time has elapsed.

MPO has already taken office space at Republic, and prexy Pollock says that the deal with the major permits MPO to take as much of the space at the 24-studio lot as it needs. It is a sliding arrangement. Incidentally, Revue Productions, the MCA telefilm program subsidiary, rents space at Republic too as does Jack Webb's Mark VII Productions.

'Underground' As Sapphire Series

London, April 8.

Sapphire Films is to produce a new tv series based on the exploits of the Maquis in occupied France during the last war. Mrs. Hannah Weinstein, executive producer of the telefilmery, is currently in Paris finalizing scripts for the new skein.

The series, to be titled "Underground," will be filmed on location in France, but studio work will be completed in Britain. It will be a British quota series for British and American distribution. A starting date has not yet been determined.

Greggory and Donovan have been assigned to write the pilot script.

VIDFILM 'SUPER-MARKET' ERA

Chi 'Academy Award Festival'

Chicago, April 8.

However it may serve to promote the motion picture industry, Hollywood's Academy Award presentation probably will be no bane to television. One Chicago station, in fact, is making capital of the awards in a way that no local filmery is able to do.

In the wake of the recent televised giveout of the statuettes, WBBM-TV has instituted the "CBS Academy Award Festival," a nightly showing of features from its own stockpile of oldies that were honored in one category or another. Series is running 15 consecutive weeknights, with such titles as "Gentleman's Agreement," "All Quiet on Western Front," and "Big House." Though some of the features are firstrun on the station, series gives WBBM-TV an excellent excuse for showing reruns.

'Rebel Slate' Portends a Hot Election for SAG Council Seats

Election for council seats, which is usually a placid affair in the New York local of Screen Actors Guild, promises to be a hotly contested matter. Hostilities started yesterday (Tues.) and are expected to carry on until election day next November.

Caucus of Performers in Filmed Television Commercials, a group organized a few months ago to assert a "pay-for-play" principle on wild spots, plans to present a rebel slate for council seats. Caucus, which began with less than 80 dissident SAG members, now claims to represent "over 1,000" members of the Gotham local. And yesterday (Tues.) it was finishing up a letter to be sent to the some 3,000 members who comprise the local's total cardholder list.

"The plain truth," the blueprinted letter read, "is that the new agreement (with ad agencies and the Film Producers Assn. of New York) has painted the performer into a corner, for it permits his earnings to go down the same old drain of 'no pay for wild spot replay,' and it gives management the same old free ride at the performer's expense." Paranthetically, the original Caucus members stated that spot tv rates are far too low to be realistic and in keeping with the big increases in national spot biz and the slow decline of network tv program work.

"Unhappily," the letter continues, "our SAG leadership has proven itself to be faltering and tired, remote from us, blind to the deep changes which have occurred, and unresponsive to the views and needs of the members who are directly and vitally affected." Caucus, in effect hopes to boot out current leadership, first in New York and then nationally. Group said a "vitalized leadership" would only come by giving the New York

WPIX Payoff On Russ Revolution

WPIX, N. Y., in its telecast of "The Russian Revolution" pulled one of the neatest audience catching stunts of the season in the seven-station N. Y. market.

The hour program, well publicized in all media in advance, drew a 25.8 rating, beating network fare from 9 to 10 p. m. such as "Red Skelton Show," "To Tell the Truth" and "Meet McGraw." According to special American Research Bureau report, it's closest competitor was WCBS-TV, which drew a 15.7 with Skelton.

The Tuesday (1) telecast was sandwiched in between a telefilm of Bishop Fulton Sheen on Communism and a rerun of "Schools, Satellites and Survival." Essentially footage drawn from the "Tsar to Lenin" theatrical documentary, plus a new sound track and commentary, the telecast upset at least one tradition—a public service show, a documentary at that, outdrawing all "entertainment" fare.

The WPIX experience has made "Tsar to Lenin" a hot property and station is understood to be negotiating for another run.

Revue's 'Way of The West'

Hollywood, April 8.

Latest pilot to get under way at Revue is "Way of the West," formerly tagged "Belle Starr."

With Abby Dalton starring, vidfilm is now shooting, with David Butler as director. Plans are to showcase the pilot in Revue's Schlitz Playhouse series.

Nix 'Purple Heart' On Vancouver TV As 'Propaganda'

Vancouver, April 8.

CBUT-TV has scratched "Purple Heart," a 20th-Fox wartime release about Japanese trials of GI personnel, from station's feature film roster, on the grounds it is "outright propaganda."

Film, as part of an NTA package bought by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., was slated for late-night showing this month. Film is not one of those proscribed by Japanese American Citizens' League last year.

CBUT-TV policy, regards wartime pix with race-bias aspects, is to pre-screen and judge the flickers "on their entertainment value only," said a station official.

"Lifeboat" another 20th production of war years, objected to by local German embassy, is slated for airing this month or early May. With such films, CBC tries to delete any possibly offensive lines of dialog. Dr. Liebrecht, German consul, says. "I know they intend to show this picture. But you see, I can't say anything about it until it has been shown."

Diplomat means he is limited by embassy's protocol procedures.

KOENIG TO PREXY NEW EMPIRE SETUP

Hollywood, April 8.

Edward L. "Ned" Koenig has resigned as veepee in charge of sales for Hal Roach studio to become prexy of Empire Productions, which will sell off 100 Roy Rogers half-hour westerns made originally for General Foods and aired over NBC-TV. W. Arthur Rush, manager of Rogers, will be board chairman of Empire and Rogers will also be an officer of the company.

Assets of Empire are quoted at $5,000,000 in films and story properties. Next season the company will produce six specs, reportedly for Chevrolet, and a new filmed series with Rogers. Devision to market its own product was made, according to Koenig, "in the interest of reducing high distribution charges with which advertisers, agencies, stations and producers have been unnecessarily burdened." Films will go into immediate syndication.

Rush disclosed that a flat offer of $2,000,000 for the 100 Rogers vidpix had been rejected.

Y'GOTTA HAVE A BRAND NAME

What has emerged importantly as the fall buying season approaches for a national telefilm sale, as well as key regional and local syndication deals, is the concept of a brand name.

On the national level, because of tightened budgetary tx expenditures, the time has gone when an ad agency, pleased with a pilot, will give the go-ahead signal for full scale production — without knowing who the producer is, what is his past performance, and who are his associates.

It's no longer the time for buying a "pig in the poke" in the form of a pilot from a comparative unknown and taking chances on a national sale. Ad agency execs are now tuned to buying the "brand name" of telefilm outfits, as well as seeking story outlines of postpilot episodes, and giving a good look-see at the track record of the telefilm outfit.

The development is another reason why so many indies no longer are on their own, producing a pilot bringing it in a can for Madison Ave. screenings. Now, for their own protection, most of them have affiliated with a major distribution organization in order to gain the "name" benefits from such an association, as well as other reasons.

The chances of a comparative unknown, no matter how "hot" the particular property may have been, has never been as good as the established producer. But now, with the advertiser seeking the greatest circulation mileage for his tv dollar, he has set up all sorts of hedges against risk-taking, a primary one buying from an established house.

The situation in terms of fresh approaches, new initiative in story development and material, may not be all to the good. Unknowns have been known to take chances and to hue a path rejected as unsafe for the market by the majors. But in today's instability, the shopping is for the known brand on the shelf, and there's more chance of selling via the "super-market" majors than via the corner-store indies.

A similar situation, but as yet not nearly as pronounced, holds true of syndication. There, too, stations and regional and local advertisers are buying brand names. But in syndication, once production is underway on a series, the smaller outfit can show samples of more than one episode.

RKO Teleradio's 85 Post-'48 Pix

The RKO Teleradio Pictures o&o's, including WOR-TV, N. Y., and KHJ-TV, Los Angeles, now have 85 post-'48 features available to them.

These are the pix which came with the RKO backlog when Howard Hughes sold out, and which have been cleared by the various talent guilds. The talent guilds payment formula was worked out by Matty Fox, of C & C Television, which bought the backlog from RKO Teleradio. In turn, RKO reimbursed Fox for the proportionate share covering o&o markets for which RKO held on to the backlog.

Titles of the cinematics include "Underwater," "Dangerous Mission," "Double Dynamite," "Macao," "The Racket," "Where Danger Lives," "Born to Be Bad," "Wagonmaster," "Dangerous Profession" and "Woman on Pier 13."

The above pix are separate and apart from the 18 post-'48 pix being readied for tv distribution by RKO Teleradio. Latter group is composed of indie cinematics initially released theatrically by RKO, Radio Pictures.

MCA's Pattern on Par Features; For Sale Singly or in Bundles

Music Corp. of America has formalized its sales plan for its pre-'48 Paramount backlog, it's been learned, and will make the pictures available on a completely flexible basis. Under the plan, stations can buy anywhere from a single feature all the way up to the complete library.

Naturally the library will be priced out so that the more valuable films, which would ordinarily constitute single-pic acquisitions, would carry a considerably higher pricetag than the run-of-the-mill features. Consequently, based on the individual pricing of each film, the full-library deals will average out to better price-per-pic status than any single-film arrangements. It's understood MCA is planning to issue a published pricelist for each film in every market, first time this has been done by any distrib.

Naturally, the Dept. of Justice figures heavily in MCA's decision to make the backlog available on a single-film-purchase basis. For one thing, D of J already has an antitrust suit in the hopper against the top features-for-tv distributors (MCA is not a defendant, since the only features it had were the old Gene Autry and Roy Rogers pix), accusing them of block-booking techniques in their package sales. Subsequent to the D of J accusations, Metro-TV made its backlog available on a per-picture basis. For another, MCA itself is under D of J and FBI scrutiny for possible antitrust violations in the talent field, and MCA is treading carefully in all of its moves in every area of its operations.

No negotiations on sales of the backlog have begun, though MCA has already held informal talks with both CBS and NBC officials, the webs in each case interested in buying up the backlogs for their o&o stations. It's anticipated that MCA will begin serious negotiating sessions with CBS and NBC within the next 10 days, buckling down to matters of price, term of contract, number of runs, etc. A deal for all seven CPS-TV o&o's, if consummated, is expected to run about $10,000,000, a fifth of MCA's overall purchase price of the films. This, however, could not be used by MCA to make its down payment to Paramount, since the usual pattern is for the purchaser (CBS in this case) to make a small down payment (no more than 25% of the total contract) and pay out the rest in monthly installments over he entire term of the contract.

Chi Loves Bette Davis

Chicago, April 8.

Ten of the feature films made by Bette Davis for Warner Bros. have played on WGN-TV here in the past few months and each, in turn, gave an unladylike working over to the competition on the three network stations.

WGN, an indie with an extensive feature film policy, skedded the shows at 10 p.m. where they collectively amassed a respectable 44% share-of-audience against all competing programming, according to ARB figures. Average cumulative rating for the Bette Davis flicks distribbed by Associated Artists) was 14.9, nearly twice the 7.8 of the nearest competition at the time. Other two channels garnered 6.7 and 4.5 averages.

WBC Buys Zulli First Semester For 5 O&O's

Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. has made a deal for Dr. Floyd Zulli's "Sunrise Semester," covering Westinghouse o&o's and kines encompassing the first semester consisting of 16 weeks.

Because of the print problem, the early morning literature course on WCBS-TV, N. Y., still is not available for general syndication. CBS Film Sales feels that it would need at least a 20-station lineup before it could make the stripped program available for the syndication market. It would cost a station about $250 a week for print servicing and the only way to beat this rap would be to set up an effective bicycling method of distribution.

Westinghouse is utilizing two master prints, one furnished by WCBS-TV, for bicycling among its five stations.

The deal marks another milestone in the saga of the New York U. professor. The Heritage Club recently made him commercial, by inking for a half-hour stint, four Sunday afternoons, on WCBS-TV, beginning Mal 11. Each half-hour will be devoted to a single classic novel, and the entire series will be used by the Heritage Club to kick off a new series of classics.

PYRAMID ACQUIRES CRIME CLUB TITLES

Pyramid Productions has acquired the tv rights to Crime Club from Derel Producing Associates.

Established in 1928 by Doubleday & Co., the Crime Club series includes more than 1,600 titles. Everett Rosenthal, Pyramid's exec producer, will supervise the Crime Club pilot film when it's made in N. Y. at the end of April. Gene Feldman of Derel will serve as associate producer.

NTA 'Double Impact' Buy for Carter Products

Carter Products has lined up for a $350,000 buy on the NTA Film Network's "double impact" rerun ride of the "20th-Fox Hour."

Deal was close to signing yesterday (Tues.), via SSC&B. The double exposure plan encompasses 63 markets for 13 weeks.

Under the deal, Carter is alternating one and two spots per week for the 13-week ride, for a total of 18 spots.

AAP Stockholders To Vote on Buyout

A special stockholders meeting of Associated Artists Productions to act on the offered buyout of AAP stock, assets and debentures, by the recently organized United Artists Associated, Inc., is expected to be held next month.

United Artists Associated is an indie UA affiliate company, which is due to enter into an agreement with United Artists Corp. under which United Artists Corp. will furnish services and funds. United Artists Corp. also would have an option to buy United Artists Associated stock.

The complications involved in the acquisition of AAP apparently grow out of peculiar problems of UA which prohibit a straight acquisition by UA, or by an outright UA subsid corporation.

The move for the takeover of AAP stems from the 700,000 shares of the Louis Chesler group sold last December to Gotham Corp. According to a statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Gotham would sell its shares to United Artists Associated. The Gotham-Chesler deal still is being challenged in the courts by National Telefilm Associates, which is suing

Agencies Now Demanding More Than A Single Pilot in Firming Up '58-'59—On Other Ad Fronts

By JACK BERNSTEIN

With the economic screws tightening around the ad agencies and the clients demanding a "guaranteed network hit," the agency tv program executives are demanding more from the packagers of tv shows and the days of buying fare based on one pilot are gone.

Some of the agencies have gone on record as saying that they want to see subsequent episodes of a projected series but the majority of ad executives feel that at $50,000 a crack, this is unreasonable. But, in no instance will the agencies settle for the pilot alone. The most common demands by the agencies are for scripts of the series and if the scripts aren't available the minimum demand is for a continuous storyline.

Nick Keesely, Lennen & Newell's tv topper, said: "We don't ask to see more than one pilot but we insist on scripts and storylines, especially, if I am dealing with a projected comedy series where you have to allow at least six months for writing and re-editing before the program is ready to be aired. That's partly why we buttoned up the 'Magnificent Montague' so early."

Keesely also stressed that it is particularly important to know where the producer is going in the development of a story. "Too often a projected series will have a hit pilot and after the sale to the agency, the remaining scripts are not properly planned. That's why many tv shows have floundered and failed.

"After a property has been bought it's necessary to have continuous meetings with the producer and others for presenting constructive criticism and to settle matters of policy before the shooting starts. In most instances, the latter avoids fault finding in the third, fourth or fifth show.

Phil Cohen, Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell and Bayles tv prexy, feels that one of the most important guarantees that the agency should secure is that the production staff, the writers and directors who have made the pilot, will continue on in the series. Cohen says that too often the makers of the original film will turn out a fine pilot and then move on leaving the agency stuck with second and third grade writers and the whole flavor of the pilot and the projected series will have changed. Cohen says that his agency doesn't ask for more than one film in a series but he does demand to read all scripts and they request storylines.

Lloyd Whitebrook, tv head of Kastor, Farrell, Chesley & Clifford, says that he likes to see two films of a projected series. "This way we avoid getting a lot of rehash. We also read scripts. Many times we find out that a packager will throw everything into the original pilot and for the remaining weeks you're hard pressed for something different."

Seymour Frolick, who is in charge of Fletcher D. Richards tv dept., claims that the agency doesn't demand a second film unless the agency is on the verge of buying a show or in some instances where the pilot is not a typical story.

The demanding of storylines and scripts by the agencies and in rare instances, the second film in a projected series, is the latest step in the tightening process by the ad men and acts as another precaution against possible tv disasters. While the ad men are the first to agree that the system isn't foolproof, they feel that it minimizes the risks that the agency and clients have to take.

Slicing Up the Pie

Agency observers feel there is a growing trend on the part of national advertisers with more than one brand to refrain from putting all of their eggs in one basket with more and more agencies getting a slice of the pie especially when new products are introduced into the market.

The selection of more than one agency by a national advertiser, say the ad executives, has acted as a stimulant to middle sized and small agencies who for the first time are getting a crack at billings formerly handled in the larger shops. Instead of the "giants" handling the three or four brands of a national advertiser, the medium-sized agencies in recent years are being named to handle at least one of the brands.

Sponsors, with competitive brands within their own firm, claim to get better service in addition to creative work and ideas in marketing and merchandising, when various accounts are placed within different agency houses. Not only do they claim to get freshness and originality, but the sponsors say that it serves to keep the agencies on their toes if more than one agency is representing them.

Armour and Colgate employ nine agencies to handle their various products. In the tobacco field, Brown & Williamson, American Tobacco Co. and Philip Morris all employ three separate agencies to handle their brands. In the toiletries field, Bristol-Myers has three agencies representing various products as does B. T. Babbitt, makers of soap detergents.

Selection of more than one agency, according to the ad executives, has been a break for the medium-sized agencies who in addition to getting important billings and brand names to handle, are getting the opportunity to show their creative ability to other national advertisers.

Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, representative of a medium-sized agency, handles Ipana Tooth Paste, Minit Rub and Vitalis as well as other products for Bristol-Myers with Young & Rubicam and BBD&O handling other goods of the Co. Maxon Agency is the advertising organ for Cameo Copper Cleaner for B. T. Babbitt while other larger agencies have a slice of the Babbitt business. Still another example is the Gumbinner agency which does the advertising for American Tobacco's Herbert Tareyton cigarets.

While many national advertisers are naming new agencies when coming out with a new product, the promotion of new products itself say the ad men is undergoing significant changes. With television, via visual perception, new wares on the market have almost instantaneous identification. The field of packaging has taken on added sgnificance also with brands now easily able to change color or size and still maintain product identification. Advertisers, who were previously leery of coming out with a new colorful wrapper, now find it a hypo to sales if properly supported marketing wise.

IT'S IN THE NAME
With Art Hellyer, James K. Robinson, Carmelita Pope, Claudian Curtis, Bob Trendler orch, others Producer: Harvey Jerome
Director: LeRoy Olliger
30 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
NATIONAL TEA CO.
WGN-TV, Chicago
(Rutledge & Lilienfeld)

The question "What about local live programming?" is being answered in Chicago currently by a rash of carbon copies of inexpensive network shows. Revised, the question is now "Well, what about fresh ideas?"

There is nothing offensive about "It's In the Name." Even the commercials are all right. The Bert Claster package is suspenseful and well executed, and it even ought to stack up okay against such network competition as "Climax," "Pat Boone," and "People's Choice." But there's nothing different about it either.

Two contestants, each at a blackboard, have to race each other in limited time to see how many words they can make from the letters contained in a familiar name. On the outing caught (3) the names were Mary Martin, Aaron Burr and Dorothy Dix. The prizes are $1 per letter for every three and four letter word and $2 per for every one over five letters. Winner of each bout stays to take on the next contestant. Fellow named Claudian Curtis has been on three weeks straight, ever since the show started, and has now amassed more than $500 as the constant winner. This would be exciting achievement except that his competition has been garden variety housewivery with no noticeable talent for words. Nevertheless he manages to look good in winning.

The race to make words is dressed up with the standard suspense music (by Bob Trendler's six-piece orch) and by emcee Art Hellyer's excited whispering. While Northwestern English prof James K. Robinson figures up the scores, the commercials come in along with a scrambled wordgame for home viewers. This game merchandises the National Stores newspaper ads and really amounts to a lottery. Prizes are $50, $25 and $10.

Hellyer is generally satisfactory as emcee, although his interviews with the oncoming contestants—which give him his best opening for a show of personality—are perfunctory and unrewarding. Carmelita Pope is a visual asset and is pleasant on the blurbs. Best casting, though, is Prof. Robinson who, as one of those good-natured but square-ish academicians, has the right balance of warmth and reserve and who, more than the others, seems to enjoy the whole thing. Les.

SPECIAL PASSOVER PROGRAM
With Ruth Jacobs, Merrill E. Joels, Bobby Breen, Lee Fields, Stan Porter, Sue Coleman, Jody Lane, Miriam Kressyn, Seymour Rechtzeit, Zvee Scooler, Abe Ellstein, Jan Bart, Temple U. choir directed by Cantor Leopold Edelstein
Producer-Director: Sholom Rubinstein
60 Mins., Thurs.; 3 p.m.
Participating
WATV, N. Y.

In observance of the festival of Passover, regularly scheduled Jewish programs were cancelled by WATV, N. Y., Thursday (3) in favor of a "gala one hour holiday celebration." Taking part in the program were all of the station's Jewish artists who ably caught the mood and spiritual atmosphere of the occasion.

While the gala presentation obviously was of more interest to Jewish viewers, nevertheless it had values for those of other faiths who may have been unacquainted with the ritual of Passover. Perhaps the program's highlight was a reenactment of a Seder or traditional family gathering, where the Haggadah or the story of the Exodus from Egypt is recited.

Ironically, this special religious airer may well have been a farewell for the participating talent since National Telefilm Associates, which recently bought the station from the Irving Rosenhaus interests, has expressed intentions to drop all foreign language shows upon its formal takeover.

Ruth Jacobs, who along with Merrill E. Joels conducts "The Jewish Home Show," was a pleasant femcee. There was lotsa group singing to mark the joyful season of the year, and a 40-voice choir from Philadelphia's Temple U. also provided a vocalistic lift. Visually, however, the choristers were handicapped by their black robes which made an overly dark background.

Picking up the tab were several participating sponsors including Maxwell House Coffee, Mott's Apple Juice and Sunsweet Prune Juice. Credited for the table setting was Black, Starr & Gorham and an imposing one it was. Gilb.

NO WARNING!
(Emergency)
With Elisha Cook, Peggy Webber, others
Producer: Al Simon
Director: Fletcher Markle
Writer: Harold Swanton
30 Mins., Sun., 7:30 p.m.
ROYAL MCBEE, P. LORILLARD (alt.)
NBC-TV (film)
(Y&R, Lennen & Newell)

There may just be a mite more strength in "No Warning!" at 7:30 on Sundays over NBC-TV than there was in "Sally," but this half-hour telefilmed drama did not seem sufficiently powerful in its first outing (6) to effectively counteract the competing hourlong dramatics, in the form of "Maverick," on ABC-TV.

"No Warning!" is a continuation of "Panic," the skein which played on NBC for part of last season. Royal McBee, which co-sponsored "Sally" with Chemstrand, has teamed up the latest show with P. Lorrillard to present 14 films never shown before and eight reruns of "Panic."

The first stanza, called "Emergency," was only briefly suspenseful. It stretched credulity and once the gimmick was sprung, it fell into the category of under-par melodrama. "Emergency" was the tale of a taxi driver who falsely identified an accident victim as his son, so that the doctors could proceed with a life-and-death operation.

Hope was that audience interest would hinge on whether it really was his son or someone else's. Yet the excitement lay not in that but in the almost inadvertent effectiveness of Elisha Cook in essaying the role of the taxi driver. Perhaps from long association in the role of weak-willed neurotics, it was nigh impossible to think of Cook as a principaled well-doer. Instead his shifty portrayal created a more definite impression of a potent crank who could as easily have destroyed a boy by his arbitrary action as saved him.

Few persons were likely to "buy" the idea that duty-bound medics would not pursue critical surgery on a minor without the consent of the parents. While in certain places, this may actually be the case, "Emergency" didn't develop the point with conviction.

Photography, and the general level of acting and direction was good in this McCadden Production. And the McBee ads seemed both reasonable and effective. Art.

THE COUNT DOWN
With Peter Ustinov, narrator
Producer: United Nation TV
Director: Arnold Rabin
30 Mins., Sat., 2:30 p.m.
WCBS-TV, New York

This was a masterful documentary pointing up the urgent need for effective controls in disarmament agreements and a searing pictorial account of the ravages of war. It was the first 30-minute production fashioned by UN-TV and was presented as a public service by WCBS' Public Affairs Department. UN-TV produced "The Count Down" expressly for the Educational Television and Radio Center, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Many of the film clips were seldom seen before, thus contributing considerably more impact in relating the story of man's almost inevitable destruction of himself with such relentless weapons as the rocket and other missiles equipped with thermonuclear warheads.

The USSR and the U. S. provided special newsreel clips for "The Count Down," the former with film of the launching of Sputnick I. With Peter Ustinov as narrator, it went on to trace the various proposals for disarmaments in the Western Plan, the Plan of the Soviet Union, the Open Sky Plan, the Eden Plan, etc. Pros and cons of the many recipes for disarmament were discussed in film clips of UN debates featuring Selwyn Lloyd of the United Kingdom; Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., of the U. S., V. V. Kuznetsov of the USSR, and Sir Leslie Munro of Australia, president of the 12th General Assembly.

Particularly telling were the shots of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, the previous nightmare destruction of civilian life in China, Ethopia and Spain. Ustinov traced the attempts of both the Hague Conference, the League of Nations and the present Disarmament Commissions of the UN in the almost hopeless battle to curb man's mastery in the not-so-fine arts of death.

Ustinov did an illuminating job and "The Count Down" deserves as wide an audience as possible both here and abroad. Its message directed against the cackle of atomic annihilation of civilization rates more than a Saturday afternoon playdate in one American city. Rans.

WINGO
With Bob Kennedy, emcee, others
Producer: Dave Brown
Director: Kevin Joe Jonson
30 Mins., Tues., 8:30 p.m.
SELF HOME PERMANENT
CBS-TV, from New York
(North)

"Wingo," in its original form, isn't going to precipitate any great changes in CBS-TV's Tuesday-at-8:30 status. There were three faults with the half-hour as viewed during the premiere (which fell on April Fool's Day): The format was confusing, and didn't promise much hope of a contestant ever reaching the $250,000 grand prize; the master of ceremonies, even allowing for first night jitters didn't seem particularly suited to his quiz chores; and, in a third point which had nothing to do with the show itself but is important if the sponsor, Self Home Permanent (a Toni division), expects to get any merchandising mileage out of the sponsorship, it had better see to it the commercials are improved, and improved immensely.

Unlike other big money giveaways, "Wingo," on the assumption that ordinary minds should have a chance to win the moolah too, gives away all but a minute percentage of its dough on a gamble and not for knowledge. But the complicated way the show is organized, it's highly unlikely any contestant would go for the big sum. Odds against it are high. Being aware of this the first "champion," a lady named Mary Walsh, settled for $11,090. Gimmick is too fuzzy to explain in detail, but it had to do with blindly matching letters on a big board in an effort to duplicate all the letters in the word "Wingo." To get this far and also in the first $1,000, a contestant had to beat out a competitor in a series of especially difficult questions.

Bob Kennedy once made a pleasant mark on New York television as the singing host of an afternoon variety show on WPIX. Show didn't last long for any number of reasons, none of which particularly had to do with Kennedy, who was good. But as the emcee of a giveaway, he was just plain out of his class. When it came to talking about the big money to be won, Kennedy pitched so hard that he sounded like one of those downbeat caricatures of the quiz show m.c., and to some viewers it wasn't any too certain that he understood the game any better than they. Part of his own confusion may have been due to the fact that the format had been poorly defined in the first place, but the whole role made him appear unusually uncomfortable.

As for the blurbs for the permanent wave, they were incomparably boobish. Photography was standard, but the copy line . . . See for yourself: (A model petting her hairdo and saying) "I love myself—You'll love yourself, with Self," making it look as though Toni named the stuff Self only after a copywriter had gotten to work on the ad message. Art.

Easter Shows on TV Run for Cover as Rain Puts Damper on Parade

Heavy rains put a damper on tv coverage of the traditional Easter Parade along Fifth Avenue, but a dial spinner in N.Y. on Easter Day was fed both religioso programming and light chitchat that helped turn the living room into a warm, sheltered enclave.

Lively WATV had the perfect format in light of the miserable weather, a "brunch" 90-minute live telecast from the Hotel Gotham, titled "Easter '58." The show, which began at 1:30 p.m., also had location shots of Fifth Avenue. The co-hosts were Arthur Van Horn and Phyllis Battele. Guests included a roster of N.Y. newspapermen and show biz personalities.

The gab was best when the guest was interesting. Mary Tremain sang a score from "Finian's Rainbow" to not so good effect, apparently troubled by bad mike placement. Wendy Barrie did nicely with chitchat and so did Hildegarde. Leon Leonidoff, producer of the Radio City Music Hall's "Easter Pageant" show, also proved an interesting guest.

WPIX found itself hard put to cover the Easter Parade when there just wasn't any. John Tillman, the drenched-on-the-street commentator, strugged valiantly and he had a model posing some new Easter bonnets, despite the rain. Vocalist Kaye MacDonnell was on hand at the studio for a smart rendition of "April Showers." A short sermon by Rev. Dan M. Potter opened the show.

In the strictly religious vein,

COSI FAN TUTTE
NBC OPERA CO.
With Phyllis Curtin, Frances Bible, Helen George, John Alexander, Mac Morgan, James Pease
Producer: Samuel Chotzinoff
Director: Kirk Browning
Music and Artistic Director: Peter Herman Adler
Librettist: Lorenzo da Ponte
English version: Ruth and Thomas Martin
120 Mins.; Sun (6), 2 p.m.
NBC-TV (Color), from New York

The NBC Opera Co. wound up its ninth season Sunday (6) in a blaze of glory, offering a vibrant and beautifully-sung version of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" (Women Are Like That). Not only was the opera moulded into a tv event that had charm and humor, but it was a vocal and musical achievement that rivalled anything that could be heard on the boards of the Metropolitan Opera.

"Cosi Fan Tutte," sung in English as is the custom on this series, makes great demands on the singers. It requires not only fine voices, but the kind of vocal teamwork that is difficult to accomplish. This tv opera offered a superb cast which sang brilliantly. The long string of duets, trios, quartets and sextets in this, one of Mozart's most tuneful operas, came off with clarity and precision, a tribute not only to the singers but also to the musical direction of Peter Herman Adler, who also conducted.

In many respects, this was probably the best of the NBC Opera presentations this season. The singing was matched by the acting and the simple but highly effective sets. Viewers got a front-row seat for a memorable performance that simply couldn't be outdone. Everyone connected with the show deserves kudos and NBC has good reason to be proud. This was television achieving its highest purpose.

Though the cast was uniformly good, Phyllis Curtin, stunningly gowned and a pleasure to eye and ear, stood out. Her soprano voice soared with ease and she sang with dignity, charm and imagination. She was matched by Frances Bible. Between them, the sisters Fiordiligi and Dorabella, put to the test of their faithfulness in this period spoof, concocted a profusion of vocal beauty.

As their suitors, John Alexander and Mac Morgan outdid themselves. Not only did they sound good, but their acting had a lot of merit. James Pease as Don Alfonso was excellent and so was Helen George as the maid, Despina. With the exception of a brief break, this small cast was on continuously and Mozart's music never sounded so good.

Story of this comic opera is a simple one. Ferrando and Guglielmo, engaged to Fiordiligi and Dorabella, bet their friend, Alfonso, that the girls would be faithful in all circumstances. They pretend to go to war, but return disguised as noblemen and woo the ladies. Latter first refuse their attentions, but eventually give in and are almost ready to marry them when the boys stage a return. There's embarassment all around till the moral is plain and all's forgiven in the happy ending.

Ed Wittstein designed the sets and costumes in exquisite taste, giving the cameras a perfect chance to move in and out at ease. Since it was a cast of attractive people, the whole thing was a pleasure to watch as well as to listen to. Kirk Browning directed with a sure and ingenious touch, merging story and music to allow both to flow continuously. It's to Browning's great credit that he found just the right balance between the tv form, in which visual action is important, and the musical content, which was never disturbed, but rather enhanced by the camera movement.

Adler's musical conception of the show brought out all its charm. Only once in a while did one of the singers run away from the orchestra. On the whole, Adler deserves a deep bow, for the artistic values of this performance were tops down the line and the coordination of the voices was the best ever heard on the air. This "Cosi Fan Tutte" was truly an event and it sparkled with freshness and youth. Ruth and Thomas Martin's English text caught the humor of the Lorenzo da Ponte libretto, bringing a better understanding to the mass audience. Hift.

BOB HOPE IN MOSCOW
With Oleg Popov, Moiseyev Ballet, David Oistrakh, Galina Ulanova, Arkadi Raikin, Ukranian State Ensemble, U.S. Ambassador Lewellyn Thompson, others
Executive Producer: Bob Hope
Producer: Jack Hope
Director-Writer: Mort Lachman

NBC-TV (film)

Bob Hope translated his visit to Moscow into a fascinating and entertaining hour television show for U.S. audiences, which was shown on NBC-TV Saturday (5) night. As the first U.S. variety show ever to originate in Russia, the filmed entry was a jampacked, swift-moving 60 minutes of top-level Soviet show biz, punctuated by Hope's own running commentary and his inevitable standup comedics.

This portion, delivered during a show in Spasso House, Moscow residence of U.S. Ambassador Lewellyn Thompson, before an audience of U.S., British and Canadian staffers, comprised a nearly 15-minute sequence which found Hope in top fettle for his topicalities in his inoffensive joshing of Soviet customs and mores, counterparted by some equally ribtickling one-liners on the Dulles Set. It was comedy off the top layer of the Hope chest both for the U.S. home viewers and the Spasso pewholders.

But the show's major fascination was in the fore and after-parts, with Hope wisely eschewing any intrusion save for appropriate commentary (and in spite of a single demerit for some needless needling and ridicule which jarred with the impact of the show's panoramic opening), as the cameras ranged over the best that the Soviet has to offer in the way of entertainment.

Crammed into the opening minutes were some revealing shots of Hope's quickie tour through Red Square, the university, a nitery with its all girl-orch and into the Macy's of Moscow.

From a theatre whose stage seemed to dwarf the Radio City Music Hall, came what corresponded to a Soviet spectacular—a Dance of All Nations, with Georgians, Tartars, Wild Cossacks, etc., both in solo and ensemble putting on an awesome exhibition. Then to some of Russia's major show biz personalities: its renowned clown Oleg Popov doing a tightrope turn; comedian Arkadi Raikin, with the Groucho Marx mask and the Sid Caesar brand of artistry; violinist David O'strakh in a demonstration of his world-famous virtuosity and an eye-filling sequence of ballerina Galina Ulanova backed by the equally renowned Moiseyev Ballet.

And the topper was yet to come—some fascinating circus sequences of tightwire acts, aerialists, acrobats, trained bears, the Soviet Olympic tumblers and a Ukraine Spear Dance that, for finesse, dexterity and spirited formations, created movements of fervor and force. In fact, all of the dances had a nationalistic distinction that was unique and exciting theatre.

With the cameras panning on some remarkable shots of kids, Hope closed on a sincere note and a plea for understanding and a peaceful world for these youngsters. A grand show. Rose.

THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION
(Tsar to Lenin)
With Kevin Kennedy, host, Westbrook Van Voorhis, narrator; others
Producers: Herman Axelbank (film), Walter Engels, William Cooper, Jack F. A. Flynn
Director: Herb Homes
Writer: Eldorous P. Dayton
Music: Harry Glass
60 Mins., Tues. (1), 9 p.m.
WPIX, N.Y.

The New York Daily News indie presented an electrifying pictorial panorama of the "10 days that shook the world," to borrow the book title phrase of a buried American in the Kremlin, John Reed.

The footage, initially assembled by Herman Axelbank and shown theatrically in 1937 in N.Y. as "Tsar To Lenin" is remarkable memorabilia of one of the most significant periods in world history. The new narration, as penned by Eldorous P. Dayton and spoken by March-of-Time Westbrook Van Voorhis, was shrill, cliche spotted—yet effective.

For the narration, like everything else about the show, the editing, music, etc., had a real pro touch. And even the scripting and narration—which has an interesting historical sidelight—had its positive sides, interlacing all the multiple facets of the revolution thrown on the screen. If that interlacing was superficial too often, using slogans for want of more

Radio Reviews

LUNCHEON AT THE ASTOR
With Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald; guests
45 Mins., 12:15 p.m. Mon.-Fri.
Participating
WOR, N. Y.

The housefraus in Newark, Neposit and New Rochelle can't help but sop up an abundance of fashion news, theatrical and movie goings-on, household hints galore via the colorful and fast-paced "Mr. and Mrs." delivery of Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald, those two venerable, widely-informed mikeside personalities.

In their new broadcasting quarters, "Luncheon at the Astor," and bearing the subtitle "45 Minutes on Broadway," they corral the cream of the Gotham talent crop for strictly informal powwows, the type of kaffeeklatches that can't help but endear the Fitzgeralds to a new audience, not to mention a legion of old fans, who remember them from 'way back.

Pegeen, when caught, appeared to be carrying the major load of interviewing; Ed being heard not too frequently. Pegeen hasn't lost her bounce and enthusiasm; in fact, she's more ebullient than ever. Fitzgeralds, on this occasion, chinned with James Donald, who plays the pacifist doctor in the Academy Award-winning film, "River Kwai"; Carol Burnett, whose version of "I Made A Fool of Myself Over John Foster Dulles" rocked embassies with considerable laughter, and Ilka Chase, actress-novelist.

Both Miss Burnett and Donald held up well in their quizfest with the Fitzgeralds, but it was Miss Chase who, as always, proved the stimulating, challenging guest of the day. Pegeen, with a keen eye on the tastes of her midday listeners, soon veered the subject to fashion and before one could cut the cloth on the bias, the femmes were knee-deep in palaver re the sack, chemise and trapeze look. It was sufficiently interesting to engage the attention of male listeners, too.

Program originates from the Astor's Hunting Room and there is a babble of voices in the background, but not loud enough to irritate listeners. There are a number of plugs for the hotel's dining facilities with special emphasis on the room as an after-theatre party attraction. Fitzgeralds have a warmer affectionate approach to their new daytime assignment and should fetch a ready, steady audience among daytime dialers.

WHISPERING STREETS
With Bette Davis, host-narrator; Janet Waldo, Sam Edwards, Barbara Fuller
Producer: Ted Lloyd
Director: Gordon T. Hughes
Writer: Margaret E. Sangster
25 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 11:05 a.m.
Participation
CBS Radio, from Hollywood

The cross-the-board soaper, introed last week in the morning hours on CBS Radio, appears to have two distinctions. Bette Davis, in fine voice and an actress of talent does the intro and commentary. Each day's outing is a complete story.

Other than that, judging from Wednesday's (2) episode, the series is cut from the same sudsy cloth, cliched situations, tragic occurrences, and pat solutions with a underscored moral. Wednesday's outing had Janet Waldo, thinking she has only a short time to live because of a lung infection. She meets up with a man, portrayed by Sam Edwards, who within a few minutes after meeting her marries the gal to cure her.

It went on and on in that fashion, moving at a fast pace, through her cure and to her realization that there are more important things in life than material things.

Barbara Fuller played the girl friend. Acting and direction were competent.

LIVING OPERA
With Alan Wagner, guests
55 Mins., Sun. 10:30 a.m.
WNYC, N. Y.

New York's municipal radio operation, WNYC has long been dedicated to the proposition of raising the cultural level of its listeners after its municipal functions have been fulfilled. With a minimal talent budget and a lot of ingenuity, the station has built up an audience that drifts between its other classical expounder, WQXR. It's latest excursion into opera is the 55-minute session by Alan Wagner, a serious student of the art, who has long contributed to the Metropolitan Opera News.

Wagner's series, "Living Opera" discusses one opera per session with some well-thought out commentary to go along with it. Wagner's problem, one that is met fairly well, is one of sounding learned to the regulars, who have long roamed in the operatic realm, while not being too pedantic to the lay-listener. His choice, in the initial show, Ponchielli's "La Giaconda," wasn't an optimum choice, inasmuch as this infrequently performed work is not a top musical and literary effort. Wagner stated as much in his prolog to the show. In addition, selection of this work had him playing the recorded works which represented one dramatic highlight after another. It seemed like a tumultous musical session unrelieved by softer and orchestral interludes.

Show closed with an interview with Julius Rudell, general director of the N. Y. City Opera Co., currently in its annual festival at the City Center. Plugs and all, the interview came off.

METROPOLITAN REPORT
With Ed Myers, moderator; Wally O'Hara, anouncer
Producer: Myers
30 Mins., Tues., 9:30 p.m.
WEEI, Boston

This ambitious public affairs bash is initialer in series pointing finger at Hub's met problems. There is nothing particularly new in that. Boston has been breast beating from the time old John Winthrop stepped into Blackstone's Garden of Eden on Louisburg Sq. in 1629. Moderator Ed Myers fastened on the commuter rail transportation problem astutely for opener. Guests were Patrick B. McGinnis, prexy Boston and Maine RR; George Alpert, prexy, New York, New Haven & Hartford; Herbert Harwood, exec rep to prexy Boston & Albany; and Joseph Turley, faculty member Boston College, in charge of B. C. Seminar.

A not so surprising accord existed betwixt the RR execs, revolving about eight hours pay for three hours work, tremendous terminal taxes, and ICC strictures binding railroads, but not their unregulated competitors, i.e., trucks, barges, planes, steamships.

There was no word from the commuters. Chief virtue of the program could be that it brings commuter transport problems before a wider aud and lets commuter know the railroads are in real trouble and why. Productionwise the WEEI boys did a smooth and pro job. Participations of guests were pretaped and woven evenly into the narrative to give effect of live broadcast, without the hemming and hawing. The RR pitch was fairminded and exposed their plight on many fronts. Kudos to Myers and co-producer Bill Buchanan for smart programming.

Radio Followup

DOROTHY & DICK

Dorothy (Kilgallen) & Dick (Richard Kollmar) took off on Brooks Atkinson Friday (4) morning in no unsubtle manner as result of his pan on "Say Darling." They also harked back to his pan on "Who Was That Lady I Saw You With?" —Miss Kilgallen observed that she wondered, after reading his review, whether they were in two different theatres—but Kollmar was most vehement about "Darling." His opinions, he conceded, can have no force like the powerful N. Y. Times but that was his only way for rebuttal. His observations ran the gamut from calling Atkinson "a destructive force to the theatre . . . does definite damage to the theatre . . . can't understand why the N. Y. Times is keeping this guy (sic!) . . . he encourages only the nasty things in the theatre . . . gives encouragement only to the Tennessee Williams brand of writing . . . he should be tarred-and-feathered and run out of town (figuratively) . . ." There were other references to the Krafft-Ebing school of dramaturgy being encouraged; "idiot characters"; "heaven forbid that nice people will please Atkinson"; he did a critique on "Garden District" (Tennessee Williams) and then followed it up with an extensive Sunday piece . . . "last night's play was in good taste, nice clean fun to which you can take anybody . . . go and see it, you'll love it, and we have no other interest in 'Say Darling' . . . "unless it's with an Oedipux complex, homosexuality or treats with depravity does it click with Brooks Atkinson . . ."

Miss Kilgallen got her husband off with a commercial "before your blood pressure goes any higher." Kollmar made no reference to his own legit production activities although, while "Body Beautiful" was concurrent on the Broadway stage, he naturally did, as the impresario thereof.

In Wacky Waikiki

Honolulu, April 8.

Wackiest party of the year was dreamed up by former staffers of Henry J. Kaiser's KHVH-TV, and KHVH radio operations, with some 75 members of the "Kaiser Alumni Association, Unilimited" gathering at a Waikiki nitery to roast rather than toast their erstwhile boss.

Association membership is open to those who were "fired, resigned, ordered to resign, or resigned and then fired."

Surprise guest turned out to be Kaiser himself, who was introduced as "the gentleman who has done more for this gathering than any one else." Kaiser, who manufacturers aluminum foil among other things in his industrial empire, was presented with a "gift" box of Reynolds aluminum foil. He accepted the "gift"—and bought a round of drinks for his "alumni."

Heffner's 'Open-Mind' In 3-Part Exploration Of the Fourth Estate

Second anni of Richard D. Heffner's "Open Mind" program on WRCA-TV will be ushered in with a three-part series dealing with various aspects of the fourth estate.

The May 4 broadcast will concern itself with "The South And a Fair Press" featuring Rep. John Bell Williams of Miss., who claims the south can't get a fair shake in Northern dailies, and James A. Wechsler, editor of the N. Y. Post, who'll defend the northern position.

Heffner's "Open Mind" on May 18 will deal with "Our Courts and a Free Press" and will feature Florence Kelley, chief of the criminal division of the Legal Aid Society; Morris Ernst, author-lawyer, as well as a Gotham newspaper executive to be announced shortly.

Final program on daily journalism will be aired June 1. Titled "All the News" it will probe the question; do the dailies print all the news? Speakers will be I. F. Stone, political columnist and editor of a weekly newsletter, and several British and American editors yet to be chosen.

CBS Radio O&O Slot For Carroll Hansen

Carroll V. Hansen has been named to the new post of program coordinator for CBS-owned radio stations. Hansen, who moves over from the job of coordinator of news and sports for CBS Radio, will now work with the program directors of each CBS Radio o&o on policy and program development. He reports to Jules Dundes, v.p. in charge of station administration.

Prior to moving into the network area in 1955, Hansen was director of news & public affairs for KCBS, the CBS o&o in San Francisco. He joined the station when its call letters were KQW, back in 1940, and was an on-the-air personality for the station as well as an exec.

Loretta's 'Who, Me?'

Hollywood, April 8.

Loretta Young and minority stockholder Robert S. Shewalter filed an answer in Superior Court yesterday (Mon.) in the suit brought by Tom Lewis March 13 that affairs of Lewislor were being mismanaged and wasn't receiving any dividends.

Lewis' charges of mismanagement were denied, with the declaration that books are open for inspection and profits were represented by accounts receivable therefore the corporation had no assets to declare a dividend.

FCC MARCHES THRU GEORGIA

Pity the Poor Piano

Editor, VARIETY:

There used to be a time when the networks took great pride in having their studio pianos always in proper tune. As I recall, expert piano tuners were under contract to constantly visit the various studios—on a daily basis if I'm not mistaken—and keep the instruments in perfect pitch. More recently, though, it would appear that this practice has been forsaken for being blessed (or cursed) with "perfect pitch" I have become appalled at the seeming negligence in keeping "on the air" pianos in tune. It has become more noticeable in recent years, I think, as many broadcast studios, both in radio and tv and at indie stations as well as at the networks, utilize the spinet-size instruments which, far smaller than the concert grands, lose their pitch much more rapidly, what with the change of room temperature overnight and particularly in tv with the temperature rise and fall when studio lighting is used for telecasting.

Perhaps the publication of this letter will serve as a reminder to those in charge of studio(s) operations that "their slip is showing" in this department. I won't point my finger in any particular direction but merely suggest that those programs which include the use of spinet-type pianos be given a "check and double-check." Keeping all pianos in proper tune, I'm certain, will win the plaudits of many like myself who "jump out of their skin" whenever they hear any type of music—vocal as well as instrumental—"off pitch."

Yours for a happier (musical) life.

Non-Profit Social Orgs Finding It Rougher Going Getting Cuffo Plugs

Non-profit outfits, such as the Red Cross, Cancer Fund, March of Dimes, etc., are currently taking it in the solar plexus when it comes to snaring guest interviews on the rapidly diminishing women's programs on both AM and tv.

Many of the radio-tv programs once presided over by knowledgeable femmes and rated a lotus land for public service pitches are now as dated as the hoop skirt. As one shrewd executive secretary in the non-profit agency field expressed it, "there are fewer and fewer daytime women's shows around for women who think."

In the past, agencies in the non-profit field managed to get their dedicated workers and committee chairmen on such worthy local female talk soirees as Nancy Craig, Margaret Arlen, Wendy Barrie, Arlene Francis, Adelaide Hawley, Mary Margaret McBride and others. Majority, if not all of these personalities, todate have been completely excised or drastically slashed in time and format.

Consequently publicity and special events staffers working for the public service organizations now have a meager few outlets at their disposal, such as Martha Deane on

ABC's Pubaffairs Sets 'Report Card'

ABC-TV news and public affairs department has been working on doing additional hourlong pubaffairs specials, and last week came up with plan for a 60-minute report on "new, experimental directions in education." Show, using the web's top commentators, is targeted for Monday, May 5, at 7:30, the week after Max Factor's "Jack and Jill" finishes its cycle in the 8-8:30 slot. The Monday 7:30-8 anchorage has been sustaining for several weeks already.

Show will be called "Report Card, 1958," and will be both filmed and live. Format calls for picking up in detail six toprated education experiments in various U. S. communities—Rock Island, Ill.; Hagerstown, Md.; Joplin, Mo.; Hicksville, N. Y.; Lyons Falls, N. Y., and Portland, Ore.

It'll be the first weeknight special on ABC-TV in sometime. News boss-commentator John Daly, Robert Fleming, Don Goddard, Quincy Howe, Edward P. Morgan and John Secondari will front the stanza.

It'll be produced by Mary Laing, and Robert Northshield, who produced "Adventure" for CBS-TV, will handle the film segs of "Report Card."

GF Expands on 'Wife'

General Foods is establishing a substantial franchise in the daytime ABC-TV'er, "Do You Trust Your Wife?" Advertiser just bought another two alternate-week quarter-hours of the half-hour strip, giving it at this point the equivalent of three full quarter-hours a week.

The two new alternate quarters were added to an original four alternate week quarter hours. New segs are Monday 3:45-4 p.m., which began Monday (7) and Tuesdays 3:45-4, beginning April 15.

Coulter Sees Chi as a Major Television Power

Chicago, April 8.

Chicago-Unlimited, local melting pot for station execs, talent and ad agencies, heard Thomas Coulter's prognostication last week that tv will follow the historical plot-lines of radio, with the networks reaching a peak of influence before giving in gradually to local, regional and spot programming.

When that happens, he says, Chicago will become a major television power because it is one of three "Continental" cities, the others being New York and San Francisco. And who more likely than Coulter would hold this view? He's chief executive officer

Fund for Republic's 'So Proudly We Hail Khrushchev Telecast'

Premier Nikita Khrushchev's exclusive appearance on "Face the Nation" over CBS-TV last June was a good thing for video journalism and a remarkable display of enterprise on the part of CBS' news staff, according to a Fund for the Republic report to be released next week.

The Committee of Consultants of the Fund For the Republic, headed by Prof. Eric F. Goldman of Princeton U., asked Herbert Mitgang, an editor of the Sunday N. Y. Times to do an in-dept study of the full significance of the interview with the Russian leader and to obtain the reactions of leading American figures to CBS' role

LICENSES OF 10 STATIONS IFFY

By SAM LUCCHESE

Atlanta, April 8.

Something akin to pandemonium reigned in radio circles hereabouts when 10 of the area's stations awoke to the fact their license renewals had not come through (automatically) as heretofore.

As a rule the Federal Communications Commission renews licenses for these stations as a matter of course by April 1. While some of them might have entertained the thought that they were being made the victims of an April Fool's Day joke, they soon found out the FCC wasn't joking—or kidding.

A check revealed that the report was going the rounds of the radio mills that the FCC was sending letters around to the stations to determine whether their programming fitted the FCC yardstick.

FCC requires programming in seven categories: entertainment, religion, agriculture, education, news, discussions and talks and that its licensees must function "in the public interest, convenience and necessity." In view of the fact that the 10 renewals were withheld it is pretty obvious FCC is not completely satisfied that their requirements are being met.

Ten stations whose renewals did not come through are continuing to operate as per usual pending their answers to FCC letters of inquiry. They are WAKE, WAOK, WEAS, WERD, WGKA-AM & FM (counted as two stations), WGST, WQXI, WTJH and WIIN.

Five Atlanta mills whose programming got green light are WSB-AM and FM (NBC), WAGA-AM & FM (CBS), and WYZE (MBS).

If stations "under fire" can prove their programming meets FCC requirements, their licenses will be renewed. If not, hearings will be in order on why licenses should not be renewed.

Meanwhile, until answers are spelled out to FCC, stations will operate on what is known as "deferred licenses."

Rumors in the trade hint that FCC action in Atlanta may presage a crackdown on radio stations that specialize in news and music only.

A spot check revealed that some of the 10 stations being queried by FCC had little or no educational, agricultural or religious programming.

'Why Me?'

Manager of 10 stations revealed they had received only routine telegrams from the FCC advising that letters of inquiry were on the way.

Morton J. Wagner, manager of WAKE, said "we absolutely expect to comply with what the FCC requires. If we're doing anything wrong, we have not planned it to be wrong. We have no agricultural broadcasting. We do have religious programming, maybe not enough. But we are loaded with educational programming, such as the Junior Achievement series."

WGKA Manager John P. Culver explained that his station's original application for license renewal was filled out incorrectly. Station's reapplication was three weeks late, he stated. "I think it is ridiculous that we're included among the 10 stations. I absolutely think WGKA is 'clean'." Asked about the significance behind the FCC action, Culver opined: "Other people around town think it's more serious than a routine action."

Zenas Sears, manager of WAOK, surmised that the study of Atlanta stations "is a test case, undoubtedly." He added that "three-fourths of or more of the stations in the country" would fall in the same category as the 10 Atlanta stations being studied.

"I don't know why WYZE doesn't conform to the letter. FCC's requirements recommend, but are short on specifics," said Sears.

He added: "We have no farm programming, very little educational programming—about two hours

AFTRA Proposes Joint Committee With SAG on Tape Jurisdiction

Hollywood, April 8.

A proposal has been made by American Federation of Television & Radio Artists to Screen Actors Guild that the two performer unions jointly organize a separate administrative and negotiating committee to control jurisdiction of electronic tape video. This compromise step would, in effect, set up a third bargaining unit for actors, one almost entirely apart from either SAG or AFTRA even though its members would come from both unions.

Measure has been proposed to prevent an allout war between AFTRA and SAG for tape jurisdiction. The AFTRA communique was reportedly sent to John Dales, SAG topper.

Proposed AFTRA-SAG committee would rule over tape video, a separate bargaining unit for working conditions and wages in all areas using tape instead of film or the live tv method.

AFTRA's national board met here on Friday (4) to blueprint the compromise measures, and they were reportedly delivered to SAG today.

Both the SAG and AFTRA contracts come up again for renewal in 1960. Hence, AFTRA has hopes the video tape bargaining will operate on a pro tem basis until then under the specified conditions and in 1960, instead of SAG and AFTRA separately bargaining with employers for tape, the joint committee become a permanent bargaining unit.

Until then, AFTRA is understood to have recommended the following temporary measures: Any film studio making tape or any operation owned by a film studio now engaged in making tv product (blurbs or programs) would fall under SAG's jurisdiction. Any network or owned & operated network station working in tape would go to AFTRA.

Another recommendation is that the joint SAG-AFTRA committee

O'Neill Vs. O'Neill

London, April 8.

The many people who urge that the BBC and commercial television should get together to avoid unnecessary clashes in their programs were given fresh ammunition as a result of the programming on Sunday (30).

The BBC presented the second part of Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," while ATV staged his "Emperor Jones." Even staunch O'Neill addicts, who would have been prepared to watch both plays were thwarted, since the two programs overlapped by half an hour.

Board's Reversal On TV-AM Actors' No-Job Insurance

Once more, an actor in New York State literally has to work 20 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance. State Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board, reversing its decision of last year, discontinued a ruling by which thesps could count a week in which a radio or tv performance was replayed as a week of work to be applied against possibly harder days.

Originally, American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and Screen Actors Guild won a precedental appeal to the board in the Rachel Price case. Miss Price had not actually acted during 20 weeks of the year, but was attempting to apply weeks during which replays of her performances appeared on the air as weeks of work. The Appeals Board agreed, and the new legal principle was then made applicable to reruns of all tv (kinescope), tv film and transcribed radio shows and commercials.

In short, the ruling that has been reversed stated that an actor need only have actually performed, say, seven weeks in one year, yet if the end product of his acting was repeated in any part of 13 separate additional weeks, he would have compiled the necessary

Hope Out-Trendexes Competition But He's Done Better Before

Apparently, the goings-on behind the Iron Curtain don't spur too much interest in the American audience. Bob Hope's made-in-Moscow NBC-TV special last Saturday night (5) came up with the comic's fourth highest Trendex rating of his six shows this season.

Hope pulled down a 28.8 average, with a 47.4% share of audience, enough to whip his competition but not enough to top the 35.2, 33.5 and 29.7 he's racked up on previous occasions this season. At 9 p.m., he drew a 30.7 rating, vs. 10.8 for CBS' "Oh Susannah" and 15.7 for ABC's Lawrence Welk. At 9:30, Hope dropped to 26.5 while "Have Gun, Will Travel" upped the CBS ante to 20.5. Welk dropped to 13.3 in this segment, averaging out to 14.5 for the hour.

The Moscow theme was provocative enough to whip up some excitement among those who did watch, however. NBC switchboard in N. Y. got about 150 calls after the show, many of them from teachers who felt it was good programming for American schoolchildren and who favored more interchanges like it. A few callers protested, but these were a small minority.

Gerald O. Kaye Prexies WNTA-TV

Gerald O. Kaye becomes the president of Atlantic Television, the company operating WNTA-TV, in Newark, for new owner National Telefilm Associates. Since Kaye has never before been involved in active station management, his appointment takes shape as an unusual measure.

Kaye was hired in 1936 by Bruno, New York, RCA distributor there, and when he left 17 years later he was a partner and general sales manager of the set distribution company. Later on, for a period of four years, Kaye was president of Gerald O. Kaye Associates, which distributed Crosley and Bendix sets and appliances in N.Y and N.J.

NTA said Kaye was hired principally because of his experience in dealing with tv and radio stations as an advertiser. While with Bruno and later with his own company, he placed approximately $2,000,000 a year in broadcast advertising, and, according to NTA, has become fully aware of programming and advertising problems.

Kaye, like Don Swartz in Minneapolis-St. Paul (at KMSP-TV), will be reporting directly to Ted Cott, NTA veepee in charge of owned & operated stations.

Cott and Kaye became business associates when Cott was program boss for WNEW, N.Y. radio indie, on which Kaye was an advertiser (for Bruno) and for which he was a consultant. Cott explained that Kaye is an administrative and merchandising expert.

Details of the new programming plans for the met area tv station were not divulged, but Cott stated that they would go into effect on May 7.

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau's latest reports on feature films and their competition covers 120 cities. Each week, the 10 top-rated features in a particular city will be rotated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained from a multiplicity of station and other data.

THIS IS NOT RADIO TO DO HOME-WORK BY

Because of programs such as "Gunsmoke" (and Jack Benny and daytime serials, Arthur Godfrey and CBS News)...Harvard College became a network radio advertiser the other night, sponsoring an hour-long special broadcast, "The Case for the College," over the full CBS Radio Network.

Its purpose, as Harvard's President Pusey put it: "...to call attention both to Harvard's ambitious plan and to the great needs of all our American colleges."

To call attention. Where else in radio would Harvard be as sure of getting it as from CBS Radio Network audiences? The programs are not designed to do homework or income taxes by. The entire network schedule, Godfrey to "Gunsmoke," each program in its own way, requires listeners to listen. They expect to give their attention...or else they don't tune in.

That's why Harvard, with its dramatic appeal for funds, came to CBS Radio. Just as the country's leading advertisers do. For the head start that audience-attention gives to sales effectiveness. And for the authority and importance that only attention-getting radio can generate.

Significantly, these program qualities work best for the listeners, too.

Year after year, the CBS Radio Network schedule gathers the largest audiences in all radio. Audiences in the habit of paying attention. Here is the first essential for selling a product, a service, an idea.

incisive analysis, it pulled the picture together and history will agree with scripter Dayton's conclusion: that the revolution in Russia unlike other upheavals of the past failed to gain greater essential freedom for its people. There, an exchange was made, autocracy replaced autocracy, notwithstanding Sputnik, Mutnik and what-nik.

The historical sidelight is that WPIX in rounding out an hour program erased the initial sound track for the film spoken by Max Eastman. Station contends the real reason is that Russia as seen from the perspective of '58 is different than the one seen by Eastman in '37. In addition, the station's presentation was more "factual."

The other reason—the unofficial one—is that Eastman was considered in '37 a Trotskyite, one of the Marxist splinter groups, and could be considered "tainted" today, despite Eastman's later year rejection of radicalism.

The film, edited down to 41 minutes from the original 67 minutes, was broken into three parts roughly covering the beginning of what was to be the major upheaval, Kerensky's rise to power, his fall and takeover by the Soviets, led by Lenin, Trotsky and Stalin. The vintage footage contained many fascinating highlights and sidelights.

Kevin Kennedy was on the grim side as interlocutor. The musical score by Harry Glass was excellent.

Station should be kudosed for its enterprise in taking up this "offbeat" material and fashioning an impressive show from it. For the record, according to a special American Research Bureau report, it was the toprated show for its time slot in the N.Y. market. A public service documentary that achieved a 25.8 rating trouncing all the escape programming of the other stations on April Fool's Day.

SCIENCE '58

WBKB, Chicago

It is true, apparently: you do have to get up pretty early these days to find a scholarly show on commercial television. In the Windy City the starting time is 7 a.m., and even then the pickin's are mighty slim.

WBKB has mounted three new shows for the longhairs, the first of them educational in purpose and the other two ostensibly cultural. But although the station is promoting them well, it seems to be treating the trio with some neglect, if not contempt. Not only have the shows been assigned to the limbo of the dawning hours, they are damned with production indifference, each of them cut with a single camera that spans the whole directorial range from dolly in to dolly out. They are cheapies, and they look it.

Easily the best of the three is "Science '58," worth getting up for because it is education for free, although from a creative consideration it is only a classroom lecture four days a week and a roundtable discussion on the fifth. "Science '58" undoubtedly will win some pubaffairs awards for the station before its 13 weeks are up, but not because it is imaginative or exemplary video. Pretty hard to miss when the purpose is education, the format a lecture, and the talent a pool of 46 science experts of the U. of Chicago's outstanding staff. Even at 7 a.m.—presumptuously early to ask anyone to feed his intellect—the content of the program is a credit to any station.

The other two shows, one a half-hour review of current books and the other a classical music show, are watered - down highbrow amounting to no - brow. For classical music "Norm Ross and Facsimile" presents a milkwater olio of waltzes, marches and excerpts, and for a video picture the antiquated facsimile technique gives out with news, weather, horoscopes and other paraphernalia of reading matter. Ross does the voice over, and for him the vehicle is a waste of talent. He's one of the most engaging personalities on the station.

Stuart Brent is neither engaging nor an expert in the field of letters, and consequently "Books and Brent" is one of the most static and wordy half hours on television. Brent is merely a bookseller with a bookseller's enthusiasm for the current titles. He makes his enthusiasm evident but doesn't transmit it. No Prof. Zulli he. Les.

With Bob Cottle
Producer-Director: Bill Shea
30 Mins., Mon.-Fri., 5:30 p.m.
Part cipating
WHDH-TV, Boston

Bearded Bob Cottle is winning a big following for his moppet show with a formula of "Adventures of Jasper," carrying the talking puppet idea out into space with script, voices and line drawings on the screen. Caught Thursday night (3), Jasper had a big do with fish people on a planet in outer space marked by good continuity and suspense.

Show, strictly for moppets, opens with Capt. Bob docking an imaginative boat and coming ashore. Here, he chats with "Mr. Answer," a sort of a face in a mailbox, and camera stays full on face which moves as questions are answered. Queries are of the scientific and "why" category, i.e., "Why is the grass green?" and everything is on a serioso vein. Cottle is nicely relaxed in tone, manner and gestures in dealing with his moppet aud, and everything is quite proper, nothing flip or macabre. Program should rate kudos from parent groups and those concerned with moppet fare in tv.

The WHDH-TV moppet program, which Cottle auditioned for and won from a large number of entrants, has been drawing heavy mail both from mothers and children alike.

As a production for the children, this show has spark and pace. It moves quickly over the distance route and it is easily seen how fascinating the show could be to youngsters of preschool and primary school age. Mr. Answer is a nifty gimmick to get some good educational facts into the youngster's minds, and Jasper's adventures give 'em the right dose of excitement. Bob Cottle as Captain Bob conducts the proceedings excellently and seems to have captured the flavor of children's presentation. Poised, pleasant and distinctive looking in the beard, he's a video natural.

This show shouldn't have any trouble getting a raft of participators or sponsors. WHDH-TV and all concerned merit high praise for this well conceived children's show. Guy.

SPOTLIGHT
With Milton Metz
Director: Ed Turner
30 Mins., Sun., 3 p.m.
WHAS-TV, Louisville

New local program dealing with traffic safety, series will include six to nine programs on consecutive Sunday afternoons. Milton Metz wrote, produced, and was moderator for the show, which was a comprehensive examination of traffic safety in all its aspects. Actually the programs, judging by the teeoff effort, represent weeks of research, interviews with police officials, and screening of thousands of feet of film, much of it shot especially for the program.

Metz included on his show, and promised for subsequent ones, all tv techniques, including specially filmed interviews and statements, excerpts of films from various agencies (AAA, Safety Council, Auto Manufacturers, and insurance companies), specially staged examples on streets and highways which have been filmed; posters, charts, graphs, in-person appearances of traffic authorities, etc.

Appearing with Metz on the first show were Don Sturgill, Commissioner of Public Safety for the state of Kentucky, and Capt. Cecil Melvin, administrative assistant to the Supt. of Indiana State Police. Brig. Gen. Franklin M. Kreml, Director of Traffic Institute of Northwestern U, an acknowledged top traffic authority in the country, also appeared in a special film shot for the first show. Cartoon on traffic safety drawn by the men who produce the "Mr. Magoo" cartoons, also appeared on the first show.

Aim of the series is to show people how easy it is to violate the law and become a statistic in the injured and fatality list, pointing out the chief dangers, and the best ways to avoid them. Metz has a dedicated approach to his subject, and turned in a friendly, straightforward job of interviewing.

Metz introed an average housewife on first show. Her husband never arrived home from his job as a musician. While going 85 mph in a 35-mile zone, car hit a tree and broke his neck. Wife was left with three small children. These in-person stories carry a strong impact, and must have a warning to all drivers looking at the show.

Easter Shows

CBS-TV provided morning Catholic services via a telecast from the Holy Cross Cathedral in Boston. It was the first such service to be seen on network tv and it proved interesting, even to those not of that faith. The Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, Archbishop of Boston, officiated and delivered the sermon.

From Cincinnati, NBC-TV picked up Episcopalian services, telecasting the services at Christ Church. WABC-TV in the early afternoon had the Very Rev. James A. Pike, who delivered a sermon, engagingly reflective of his faith. WOR-TV opened its day at 11:45 p.m. with a film on Easter Horo.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Omnibus

Maybe it's because Robert Saudek & Associates are free of the inevitable complications that arise from subsidization for the first time. Maybe it's just a change in operating philosophy. Whatever the reason, "Omnibus" this year has dropped the pretentious trifles it used to fool around with and has concentrated on one property per show, more often than not picking exciting and provocative plays and subjects.

The result has been, in the overall, nothing short of virtuoso television, and "Omnibus" has been a drama-lover's delight. Sunday's (6) production of Christopher Fry's "The Lady's Not for Burning" (first U.S. telecast of a Fry play) was just the latest example in a stream of tip-top-flight Broadway-and- elsewhere adaptations that have proved highly rewarding viewing for the habitual theatregoer and a rich compensation for those millions who never get to make the Broadway rounds.

"Lady" had its weak moments, a tendency to heighten the rhythm of the direction into farce-paced comedy that left the viewer sometimes hard-put to savor Fry-whenwry. But this was a minor point in the overall delightful impact of the finely-acted, flawlessly produced comedy. Christopher Plummer, who's rapidly setting a television standard for the calibre and versatility of his acting, was in excellent form as the world-weary ex-soldier who insists on being hanged. And Mary Ure, the British import currently starring in "Look Back in Anger," turned in a superb attractive performance as the witch of the title.

A topnotch supporting cast, including Geoffrey Lumb as the regulation-bound mayor, Ann Shoemaker as his self-centered but wordly sister, Gerald Hiken and Edwin Sherin as her two rambunctious offspring, John McGiver as the justice, Noel Leslie as the sleepy chaplain and Bryarly Lee and Stephen Joyce as the young lovers, gave color and spice to the situation. Add a fine bit by Bob Geiringer as the town's ragman.

Double director credit; Stuart Vaughan and John Desmond, leaves some doubt as to who rates what, but apart from the pacing, they got clear-cut and colorful performances from their cast and brought off their technical problems without a hitch. Henry May's sets were realistic without being obtrusive, and Alistair Cooke's urbane hosting set the right tone for the presentation. Walter Kerr's adaptation left the author unFryed. Chan.

Playhouse 90

A merry romp that had many delightful touches, stretches which compensated for the duller moments, was served up by "Playhouse 90," CBS-TV, Thursday (3) night.

Titled "Turn Left at Mt. Everest," the farce of Army life in the Burma theatre of operations, had a cast which sparkled. The technical production was tops, the home screen reflecting simulated flight, a strange terrain and outdoor location shooting, no mean trick for "live" presentation.

Fess Parker, who was plummeted into the popular spotlight via his "Davy Crockett" role, evidenced a flair for comedy in the 90-minute outing. He had the male lead role, playing an Army GI, in love with a pretty British gal, in Calcutta. The time was the immediate postwar days. He played his attempted seduction scene with aplomb, and showed finesse in his quarrel and his scheming against fate.

Peter Lorre built up nicely as the native Kunming helped. Paul Ford, Sergeant Bilko's topper in the "Phil Silvers Show," had a nifty role as a Churchill-smitten American colonel writing his memoirs and taking up "number-painting." Patricia Cutts was fetching and effective as the British PX lass. Arnold Stang got some yochs as the harried GI.

The running story of the "star-crossed lovers" had many madcap twists and turns, some falling flat, but others coming off well. It's a tribute to the play that, in the midst of all those commercial breaks, the viewers could be held at all.

Show was adapted by Del Reisman from a play by Lowell Barrington. Dan Petrie's direction was tuned to the proceedings and the supporting cast was quite competent. Horo.

Person To Person

A relaxed, amiable atmosphere marked both ends of "Person To Person" last Friday night (4) on CBS-TV when the cameras went into the homes of the Bennett Cerfs and Anna Maria Alberghetti. Ed Murrow, who is usually better attuned to more portentous subjects, carried off the light domestic and personal chitchat with complete ease.

Phyliss and Bennett Cerf, at their New York home, spoke mainly about books while Miss Alberghetti and her family, from their new Hollywood ranch, spoke about music. The Cerfs, together with their two sons, chatted about their respective literary chores, she as a columnist and he as Random House chief. Cerf touched upon such sundry literary topics as the RH "Landmark" series, the screening of new book material and the great demand for a humorist of the order of E. B. White and James Thurber.

Miss Alberghetti, together with her mother, her younger sister, Carla, and her 13-year-old brother, Paul, made an ingratiating family ensemble. After the standard career questions, the two Alberghetti sisters, accompanied by their brother on the piano, charmingly vocalled an Italian number. It was the high point of the half-hour. Herm.

Alcoa Theatre

The 30-minute production of "Loudmouth" on Alcoa Theatre over NBC-TV (7) with Jack Lemmon in the major role proved immensely viewable. Christopher Knopf, who scripted "Loudmouth," turned in a far-above-average assignment. But major honors go to Lemmon for his keen portrayal of a practical joker who becomes the hapless victim of his own cruel joke.

This is the drama of one, Wally Mail, an assistant auditor in a bank and a braggart of no mean proportion, who during a party conversation about an unsolved murder decides to occupy the center of the stage by calling the police and informing them that he's the killer. The cops soon trace the call and carry Wally off to headquarters and before the curtain is rung down, Lt. Oran Nelson, played exceedingly well by Harold Stone, pins a couple of murders on show-off Wally. There's a good deal of suspense in "Loudmouth" and Lemmon shines throughout it as Mail.

Highlights of Harris Report

On FCC Relationships With Industry

"Some members of the industry . . . have followed a practice of providing excessive entertainment for the members of the FCC and the Commission staff. The Subcommittee feels that such entertainment does not lend itself to the establishment of a proper relationship between the independent regulatory agencies and those who are subject to regulation by such commissions.

"To the extent that members of the FCC find it necessary, in the course of the performance of their official duties, to attend meetings sponsored by industry organizations, the Subcommittee feels very strongly that such attendance should be at Government expense.

"The hearings have revealed the unsavory practice engaged in by representatives of some industrial concerns of charging business expenses and using the names of members of the FCC as justification for such expenses, while actually such entertainment did not occur. These practices, the Subcommittee feels, are utterly indefensible. They blacken the names of members of independent regulatory agencies who have no way of defending themselves against such practices.

On Acceptance of Per Diem When Industry Pays Hotel Bills

"The question of the propriety and legality of such conduct is of concern not only to members of the FCC but to members and the staffs of other independent regulatory commissions and executive agencies. The rulings and testimony of the Comptroller General in this respect . . . are ambiguous and in conflict. The Subcommittee feels very strongly that there is an urgent need for clarification by the Comptroller General.

On Delays and Pressures

"Pressures brought on some commissioners in the channel 10 Miami case cannot be tolerated. It is the purpose of the Subcommittee . . . to relieve the FCC from pressures of an improper character.

"The Subcommittee is concerned about the long delays which have many times occurred in rendering final decisions . . . Such delays have contributed to an increase in pressure of the kind referred to . . . It will be the purpose of the Subcommittee to submit additional legislative recommendations aiming at eliminating some of these serious delaays.

On Furnishing of Color Sets, Etc., to Commissioners

"The Subcommittee believes that the present practices with respect to furnishing such facilities are undesirable. Furthermore, the Subcommittee has serious doubt whether some of the equipment which has been made so available would meet the test of being needed by the members of the Commission, in the public interest, in order to enable them to follow new technical developments. Finally, the Subcommittee feels that the furnishing of some of these facilities to the Commissioners was not in the public interest but in the interest of promoting the business of the industrial concerns which furnished the equipment.

"The Subcommittee believes that the Commission itself should examine into this subject, applying the most stringent standards of propriety, and take such action as will remedy a situation which has brought on much public criticism, and provide an orderly and well publicized method of obtaining such equipment.

On the Recommendation For a Code of Ethics

"The Subcommittee desires to caution . . . members of the FCC that no code of ethics, no matter how detailed, can relieve the individual members of the necessity of being sensitive at all times to the urgent need to maintain public confidence . . . by avoiding actions of any kind which might create the impression that their official decisions are or may be influenced by improper considerations."

D.C. Probers

criticism, and provide an orderly and well publicized method of obtaining such equipment."

In making public the report, Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.) told a news conference that the Subcommittee has concluded that phase of its inquiry concerning with misconduct charges against members of the FCC. But he emphasized that the Subcommittee is not through with the Commission. The staff, he revealed, has gathered data on 20 to 25 other channel cases which will be studied. He indicated that the Subcommittee will probably "go into" three or four of them.

Harris said that further hearings will not be held "until we develop the facts and are ready." He noted that other regulatory agencies are also occupying the attention of the staff.

Questioned on whether Subcommittee revelations would lead to prosecutions, Harris said he "assumes" the Dept. of Justice has more information than the Congress and that it has the responsibility of acting on violations. Doubtless, he said, the question of perjury will receive attention, as well as a provision of the Criminal Code which prohibits attempts to influence Federal decisions.

Social Orgs

WOR or Tex and Jinx on WRCA, and as for the latter, it's getting tougher to plant a guest on this program unless it's a Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther or someone of similar stature.

As a result of the disappearance of the major station femme shows, the smaller outlets are beginning to get a greater play from the social service and other non-profit organizations. Alma Dettinger on WQXR, Estelle Sternberg on WLIB, Alma Johns on WWRL, to mention a few, are now flooded with requests for interviews.

Furthermore, with the moving of the Dodgers and the Giants to the Coast, the important public service plugs allocated by the Ad Council between innings and between games are no longer to be had here by interested agencies. Previously, the spots available during the ball games of Dodgers and Giants were invaluable to volunteer bodies.

Curtailment of daytime interviews shows also has forced the public service organization publicity outfits to be more creative in tieups with radio-tv. For one, they're now concentrating on fresh news and feature angles for radio-tv news programs and considerably more original public service air spots.

CBS Strike

though it's going to end soon," one union executive declared yesterday CBS have been suspended.

Hollywood's Action

Hollywood, April 8.

Los Angeles Central Labor Council met in emergency session yesterday (Mon.) following the IBEW walkout, to determine the policy of other unions whose members would have to cross picket lines at Television City to get to their CBS jobs, but failed to arrive at any immediate conclusion. Motion was made to support IBEW in the strike but was amended by further motion to postpone action until various orgs in attendance could contact and get support from their International offices.

Attending were reps of IATSE, AFL Film Council, Transportation Drivers Union; AFM Local 47; Radio, TV Directors Guild and the Teamsters Joint Council. Since there's a no-strike clause in the present contract between CBS and members of RTDG and AFTRA, members must go through with assignments already contracted for.

While eastern web supervisors are keeping live daily shows beaming, West Coast brass, relatively unschooled, won't attempt to keep major live dramatic shows on the air as skedded, replacing such programs with films, kines and tapes.

Look Ahead in Anger

To give an idea of just how the engineers' strike has dislocated the lives of some CBS execs who've been assigned to standby technicians status, here's the schedule of one CBS publicity executive for this week (apart from trying to keep the press abreast of the situation):

Flack - turned - cameraman was assigned to "As the World Turns," which never made air on Monday. On Tuesday, he had to report for rehearsals at 8:30 a.m., was through at 1 p.m. Ditto on Tuesday and Wednesday, with the additional chore Wednesday night of handling the live "Leave It To Beaver" commercials. Thursday, he's scheduled again for "World," but Friday, he's due to be in the studio at 5 a.m. to handle camera work on the WCBS-TV, N. Y., "Sunrise Semester" segment at 7 to 7:30 a.m.

a week—but a great deal of religious programming."

"With the number of stations on the air, it's impossible for all of us to fulfill FCC's requirements. I can't compete with WSB. We try to offer the type of programming others do not."

Ben Akerman, manager of WGST, owned by Georgia Institute of Technology and operated by Georgia Board of Regents, said: "This is the first time this kind of study has occurred. We feel we've been discharging our public responsibility. I have no doubt we will come out 'clean'."

George Oliviere, manager of WIIN, says "we run a great deal more public service programs than any other station in town. According to my understanding of the FCC's regulations, we do meet its requirements."

J. B. Blayton Sr., of WERD, branded the FCC study as "unusual." "I bought this station in 1949 and this is the first time our license has not been renewed automatically. I think WERD does conform in every way to the FCC requirements. We do very little agricultural programming. We're only a 1,000-watt station and our audience is urban. But, in other areas—educational and religious—we do more than is required."

WEAS Manager Warren Roberts commented: "It's hard to say what the FCC requirements are. We make a real attempt to do public service. As far as I'm concerened, we fall within the regulations. We have plenty of religious programming. Perhaps we are lax on the educational side. We don't do any agricultural programming as such." (WEAS operates only in the daytime.)

Robert Rounsaville, owner and operator of WQXI, said: "I'd rather wait and see what the letter says before I make any statements. It was a surprise to me to get the telegram. We think we are operating in the public interest."

After calm deliberation, station managers by weekend were satisfied that none of stations will lose its license. "Business as usual" characterized modus operandi to avoid any admission, even tacitly, that station was not conforming to FCC requirements.

Job Insurance

20-week minimum for unemployment insurance.

The reversal was handed down quietly in New York several days ago. Since then, AFTRA and SAG lawyers have been conferring on an appeal of the latest decision to the State Appellate Division court.

Appeals Board, according to a union lawyer, reversed its decision because the year-old unemployment credit system for performers created administrative problems for the State. He believed the Appeals Board failed to reverse the principle of law on which the original favorable decision was based.

A court of law, he said, was forced to render a new decision purely on the basis of the state law and not, as the Appeals Board allegedly had, rule on the grounds that the initial decision was unworkable. "The first and second decisions of the Appeals Board are irreconcilable," he stated.

FIRST AMPEX UNITS FOR JAPANESE TV

First overseas shipment of the Ampex videotape recorder is going to Osaka, Japan, where the commercial TV Broadcasting Corp. will install one unit in its Osaka studios and a second at its Tokyo plant. Units are the same being used in the U.S., since Japanese television operates on the same technical standards.

The Japanese firm doesn't have fullscale microwave relay facilities between Tokyo and Osaka, and plans to use the machines to record Tokyo originations for playback on its Osaka outlet.

He is casting the other two permanent panelists. There will be guests and audience-participation prizes as part of the tv package.

The prospectus filed with the SEC for the agency's approval consists of an offer of debentures and cash for capital stock, warrants and outstanding debentures of AAP. The total transaction would involve about $35,000,000.

Under terms of the deal, affiliate United Artists Associated would exchange $6 of debentures and $6 in cash for each outstanding share of AAP stock, terms essentially the same given to Chesler group. Under the prospectus, UAA also would exchange $24 of UAA debentures for each outstanding warrant for the purchase of four shares of AAP stock and $13 in cash.

membership a voice in collective bargaining.

"We must, everyone of us, work for essential reform which is long overdue," the letter addressed to N.Y. members said, Caucus demanded "a New York branch which participates in a meaningful way in the business of getting for the performer not just a patty-cake result, but a fair share of the advertising dollar for his time and talent.

"We must work to elect Council members who know what's going on in television today and, what's more, care enough about the performer to seek out solutions which are good for him and then to fight so that these solutions get into future agreements.

"The time to join with us is now. We cannot afford to miss the bus again, as we did in the case of the new agreement, because of a late start."

(By May or June, the N.Y.branch nominating committee will meet to name a slate for the nine vacancies due for reelection to the 27-man council. There is a possibility more than nine seats will be open by November election time, due to usual retirements or relocation of some officers.)

NEW YORK'S PRESTIGE INDEPENDENT STATION WPIX TELEVISION

'Music Til Dawn'

indies are bought individually. But the program often hits nearly a 1.0 rating collectively, which is an unusually large audience for that time of night and that kind of money.

Each station uses its own personality and programs the show itself. Bob Hall is the deejay-emcee at WCBS, the CBS flagship in New York, and has been since the start. Hall is assisted by a director, John Chanin, who programs the music as well. Chanin sends logs out to the four other o&o's, which use them as a guide for their own musical programming for the show, since it's no mean feat to program 38 hours a week of any kind of music. The four indies program independently, but with an assist from the agency (which incidentally has access to the WCBS logs).

American uses the soft-sell on the show and likes it that way. It programs no more than four or five commercials (usually under a minute each) per hour, and two of these are wrapped around the five-minute news shows on the hour, leaving only two or three commercials for the other 55 minutes. These, American instructs the station, are not to interrupt the music—if there's a full symphony on. It's not interrupted and the commercials are forgotten; no makegoods in the following hour.

Some of the blurbs are flight-information types, pitching specific American routes. Others are institutional, praising the smaller feeder lines in the area, pushing air travel in general, stressing air safety features and service. Hall and the others are given general copy themes and allowed to ad lib around them. "Music 'Til Dawn" audience, according to surveys, is varied—students, doctors, factory workers, writers, truckdrivers—but in today's universal acceptance of air travel, it pays off. Since the show went on the air, American has had passengers voluntarily writing on those suggestion cards in the seat packets that they picked American through the show.

Those clear-channel outlets late at night provide a major advantage too; they can blanket the country (WCBS consistently gets into 40-odd states in the wee hours, and as far north as Canada's maritime provinces and to Costa Rica in the south). The five CBS stations are WCBS, WBBM, Chicago; KMOX, St. Louis; KCBS, San Francisco, and KNX, Los Angeles. Indies are WBZ, Boston (American initially bought CBS' WEEI, but switched to the Westinghouse outlet), WWJ, Detroit; KRLD, Dallas, and WTOP, Washington. Initially, it bought this way because of its limited routings (network would have involved purchase of markets it never gets into), but this type of lineup has paid off far beyond its geographical pattern.

ABC Fri. Shuffle

avoiding further early evening contact with dramas of the hour long variety.

Another night that came into focus quickly for Moore—at least at 10 p.m.—is Saturday. The new program veep at ABC-TV says that he's going to anchor Screen Gems' "Tales of Frankenstein" at 10 with or without a sponsor.

"Frankenstein" will be replacing "Mike Wallace Interview." Wallace has another year to go on his contract, which is said to call for his services and not for a specific format. So it's entirely possible that "Interview" will not be back for 1958-'59, although the web is looking for a new sponsor and new slot. The other way ABC can acquit its obligation to Wallace is to sell him in the previously reported role of narrator of a half-hour vidfilm anthology, for which the pilot has already been completed.

Schaffner

tiveness of the mass audience." They base their estimates of what an audience will like at home on what they would have to pay money to see in a theatre, and this, to Schaffner, is a false standard. That's why television too has swung into its own variation of a "star system," where the important thing is not whether so-and-so is right for a part but whether or not "he's boxoffice." That "star system" philosophy has caught up with tv's better shows too.

The answer for television, says Schaffner, is to "take the lid off our best people. Put the Fred Coes, the Tony Miners, the Herb Brodkins, back to work. Let 'em do what they like to do and want to do, to create without everybody sitting on them. Don't make them desert television for motion pictures and the theatre because that's the only place they can work the way they'd like."

It's not merely a case of quashing and frustrating the creative writer or producer or director by a series of don'ts," Schaffner points out, but a wholesale degrading of the quality of television programming by underestimating the audience. Part of it is due to the tendency to "take the easy way out; everything can't be high quality 24 hours a day and seven days a week, so we like to use that as an excuse for not doing anything good." But just as important is the tendency to bury the writer, to spend money for stars instead of scripts, to judge a piece of work not on its quality as a property but "who can we get that's a name to raise the rating" instead of who would do justice to this part.

"Sometimes I think the best thing that could happen to television is if Harry Ommerle (CBS programming veep) told all his people, 'We won't consider anything that's budgeted over $15,000 because we won't be able to sell it.' That's when tv will have to start looking for ideas again."

Schaffner's in N. Y. for a brief visit, after which he returns to the Coast to do three more "Playhouse 90" shows for CBS-TV.

have also made their impact on U. S. and U. K. tv markets, include Arthur Hailey and Hugh Kemp, Toronto; Joseph Schull, Montreal. Actors this season have included such Canadians as Lorne Greene, Christopher Plummer, William Shatner (latter with Paramount Pictures); plus David Green, director, who tossed in his job this season with "General Motors Theatre" series and ABC to take over a similar directorial chore with CBS in Hollywood. Plan is for ABC to pipe in the Toronto-emanating series just as the CBC pipes in such weekly American drama productions as "Kraft Theatre" and "Studio One."

not being more tv stations on the air today. They would be happier, she said, "if there were only a hundred."

Relating her activities on the Commission in behalf of educational tv, she said she devoted many weekends to making speeches to arouse support for the reservations. Frequently, she said, she spent far more for trips for this purpose than she collected for expenses.

Miss Hennock indicated that manufacturers who provided her and other commissioners with color sets didn't do them much of a favor. Her set, she said, "crowded" her living room and, besides, there were few programs to watch. She said she paid $200 for the set she had when she left the Commision.

But questioning about color sets, phone calls, expenses, etc., she said, seemed " a little silly."

The whole problem of influence, she suggested, lies in the caliber of officials appointed to office.

between Americans on one hand and Asians and Europeans on the other" will begin with the next three months. Key stations from coast to coast have indicated they will present the overseas programs in an effort to better world understanding. Similarly, overseas broadcasters will carry the non-propaganda programs from this country on an exchange basis.

From France will come a flock of one-hour features with outstanding conductors at the helm of the French National Orchestra; Italy is fashioning a concert and opera series under the auspices of Radio Italiana; India, via Radio Madras, is at work on a series of 30-minute program dealing with Indian music.

Other countries currently engaged in special works for the BFA project are Austria, Korea, Japan, Israel, Norway and England. At the outset these programs will be offered free to a limited number of quality outlets in large cities in the U.S. A small service charge for the programs will be made later. Stations subscribing to the "international conversation" series will be expected to broadcast the programs on a regular basis.

ABC

Couple of swift surprises within a two-week span (completely apart from the attempt to resolve the network radio predicament) was the naming of Jim Riddell as exec veepee in charge of AB-PT's broadcasting division, with tv prexy Ollie Treyz and program boss Jim Aubrey reporting to the ex-Detroit o&o chieftain. Then the switch of Aubrey back to CBS, which perhaps wasn't too much of a surprise since, in his Columbia days on the Coast, he was regarded by the network high command as "someone to watch" and considered to be cut out of the CBS cloth. Hence his return to the Paley-Stanton fold was considered in some quarters to be inevitable. But perhaps more surprising was the appointment of Thomas W. Moore to take his place as the No. 1 programming man since Moore, out of the CBS Film Sales org several months previously, was regarded basically as a salesman. At ABC they say: "Don't underestimate his talents in programming and other areas."

of the info by WOR-TV. RKO New York flagship also maintains that it has two clients with options, as the play-ball signal approaches on Tuesday (15). Five sponsors would mean a virtual sellout.

WOR-TV hasn't disclosed any plans for pre and post-game shows. Station is committed to about $600,000 for the Philly telecasting and only via a sellout is recoupement seen.

The Bankers Trust will sponsor all the "Showcase of Sports" programs with Red Barber seen for 15 minutes before and 10 minutes after all Yankee home games. Colgate-Palmolive will sponsor "The Inside Pitch" with Bob Wolff following all Yank road games. The 10-minute filmed program highlights inside interviews with top American League players. United Airlines has signed to sponsor Bill Stern's "Today in Baseball" 15 minutes before all Yank road contests. Yank games themselves are fully sponsored.

in lining up the interview with the major Russian figure.

The report raises many questions involving the rights of the press but draws the conclusion that tv journalism should be considered a part of the free press and an integral segment of the Frst Amendment. Mitgang's analysis also draws the broad conclusion that in order to achieve the "freeedom to see" one must have a general atmosphere of freedom in institutions such as the FCC and other governmental offices.

Mitgang reconstructed the origins as well as the subsequent results of the Khrushchev appearance on CBS and what it meant to the free press in this country. He covered all aspects of the story from Washington to Moscow and obtained reactions from members of Congress, the State Department, White House officials, etc. The final report is called "Freedom To See" and is one in a series on mass media to be issued by the Fund For the Republic.

The full report will be made available at a Fund for the Republic luncheon at the Hotel Biltmore, Monday (14). Both Mitgang and Prof. Goldman will appear at the luncheon.

No. Dakota Court Absolves Station In Political Test

Bismarck, N.D., April 8.

In a major test of the Federal Communications Act's controversial section 315, the North Dakota State Supreme Court has ruled that a broadcasting station is not liable for defamatory statements made by a political candidate using the station's facilities in accordance with the federal law.

It's the first time that an appelate court has dealt with the question.

Attorneys for the North Dakota Farmers Union, plaintiff in the $100,000 slander damage suit against Fargo, N. D., radio station WDAY, resulting in the five-member court's 4 to 1 decision, have indicated they'll appeal from it to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The decision followed more than six months' deliberations after the hearing of the Farmer Union's arguments in an appeal from an order of District Judge J. C. Pollack dismissing WDAY as one of the defendants, the other being A. C. Townley.

Townley was an independent candidate in 1957 for the U. S. senate against Republican Senator M. R. Young and Quentin Burdick, the Democratic candidate, and during the campaign made a speech containing the allegedly slanderous statement against the Farmers Union. Young won re-election and Townley finished a poor third.

During the state Supreme Court arguments counsel for the Farmers Union reproduced part of Townley's speech, marking the first time a film and projector ever had been used in the chamber.

WDAY admitted the speech's libelous character, but contended that under federal law it could not censor the talk.

It was argued that the communications act's Section 315 gives a radio or tv station immunity from civil actions based on false or slanderous statements uttered by candidates. Counsel pointed out that a station is required to give opposing candidates time and is prevented from deleting defamatory matter.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Proposed educational-tv program on WOR-TV, N.Y., will come into sharper focus when Chancellor John F. Brosnan of the New York State Board of Regents calls a special meeting of his colleagues in Albany on Thursday, April 24.

A five-member committee, headed by Dr. T. Norman Hurd of Ithaca, will be in charge of the educational-tv unit created by the Regents. This committee, aided by Chancellor Brosnan, plans to establish an advisory council on educational-tv. Former Regent Jacob I. Holtzmann of N.Y.C. will head the group of advisers.

It is anticipated that the upcoming meeting in Albany will result in the appointment of five to seven additional advisers, drawn from the ranks of education, journalism and professional broadcasting.

Meanwhile, Holtzmann, who was largely responsible for consummating the deal with WOR-TV for its daylight hours to broadcast programs to school classrooms, is planning a brief trip to Israel where he will examine the country's educational system.

Metropolitan Educational Television Assn. finds itself busy with special projects. In addition to the upcoming "Concept" WCBS-TV, N.Y., shows, it has arranged with indie WPIX, N.Y., for a series of two Saturday afternoon programs devoted to "The Challenge to American Education." The kines were produced by META recently when members of the Educational Policies Commission of the National Education Assn. participated with several sets of guest experts at META headquarters. Kines are to be released shortly for general distribution. The first WPIX showing will be Saturday (19).

Another project, apparently designed to clear the air of the unsettled educational tv situation in the New York area, also will be via WPIX, META's regular morning outlet. Titled "Report from META," series of 15-minute programs starting at noon on Mondays, is designed to acquaint the public on educational tv goals, financing, etc.

Segment from one of this season's CBS-TV "Conquest" specials will get double billing at the Brussels Fair this summer. First photographs ever made of an atom, featured in the last "Conquest" show on the web, have been requested for exhibition at the International Hall of Science and at the U.S. Pavilion at the fair.

CBS public affairs is currently working on the language problem, and will either do a new voicetrack in French, with host Eric Sevareid or will use a combination of French dubbing and subtitles for the segment.

WBBM radio in Chi is taking advantage of the abstruse boundaries of public affairs to extend it to jazz. Station has tapped Alan Merriam, professor of Anthropology at Northwestern U., to give an education to a show which is otherwise simply recorded music. Merriam's first outing, this Saturday (18), will focus on four versions of "Lady Be Good," those of Andre Kostelanetz, Benny Goodman Trio, Artie Shaw, and Count Basie.

Says producer Len Schlosser: "Public affairs programming, especially on radio, has become all talk."

A House Commerce subcommittee has under advisement radio broadcasters' proposals for more comprehensive presentation of traffic flow information for motorists on the highways.

The House Special Subcommittee on Traffic Safety heard representatives from WIP, MBS affiliate in Philadelphia, the National Assn. of Broadcasters, Mutual, and others outline radio's present role in traffic and safety control activities. All joined to urge greater supply of consolidated information for radio broadcast.

John Daly's Global On-The-Spotters

ABC news chieftain John Daly took off on Monday (7) for a three-week junket around Europe and the Far East, with reports to ensue from Paris, Tokyo, Hong Kong, Saigon, Laos and Cambodia.

Don Goddard is subbing for him during the swing on his nightly quarter-hour ABC-TV newscast and his 10-minute ABC Radio stanza: Daly's on-the-spot reports will be piped back for inclusion on his shows. Essentially, the tour will enable the network veep and commentator to satisfy demands of network radio affiliates for more on-the-spot reporting during audio news stanzas. He'll also have a chance to o.o. the web's foreign bureaus.

Itinerary called first for Daly to fly to Paris for a three-day study of the continuing government and Algerian crises. Thursday (10), he'll wing to Tokyo (via the new polar route being started by Air France), and then on south through Hong Kong to Southeast Asia. He'll be back April 28.

BRITAIN MULLS TV 'SELL' FOR ELECTIONS

London, April 8.

The use of television for propagating politics is causing headaches for all parties. None, it seems, has yet hit on the ideal formula which will be highly necessary when the General Election takes place.

When the Conservatives give their next political program, on May 7, in connection with local government elections the party intends to borrow some ideas from commercial tv. Announcements will be made on the lines of commercials, including animated cartoons and slogans. There is no intention, at the moment, of using singing jingles, which are a familiar part of U. S. television election campaigns.

Burlington, Vt.—A daily educational television program will be launched next fall by the Vermont Department of Education. WCAX-TV will donate the time for the half-hour programs, which will be designed for the elementary grades.

Albany—Marvin Gottlieb has been appointed local sales manager of WOKO. He formerly sold for WPTR, and before that for WROW.

BBC Clamps Down On Summit, Missile Gags

London, April 8.

The BBC is clamping down on jokes about the summit talks, nuclear weapons and efforts to preserve peace. It is also thumbing down on gags about British or foreign statesmen. This decision follows the recent banning of a proposed impersonation of the Prime Minister by comedian Peter Sellers. A BBC spokesman said: "There are thousands of other subjects about which comedians can be funny. We think jokes of the kind we have banned are in bad taste and would hurt many viewers and listeners."

Independent Television Authority is not, at the moment, coming into line with the BBC. ITA says: "We expect individual program companies and producers to use common sense."

Coulter

of Chicago Assn. of Commerce and Industry, number one drumbeater for the city's virtues and prospects.

Coulter cites the fact that radio had its best year in 1957 despite the tv boom. He says network shows accounted for less than one-seventh the dollar volume. "Right now in tv," he points out, "local and spot shows account for almost half the dollar volume. In the past two years local and spot shows have gained ground." He sees as the reason for this the increased costs of networking, a poorer ratio of cost to returns than in local buys, and the fact than "only certain items (such as soap) can be best promoted on a nationwide scale."

According to the Continental City Concept (a term coined by market analysts, he said), Chicago, New York and San Francisco may be likened to London, Paris and Rome as markets of influence for whole land areas in shaping styles, thoughts and symbols. Chi's zone of influence, Coulter says, especially after it becomes "the greatest world port" with the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in 1959, will extend to Cleveland on the east, Denver on the west and as far south as New Orleans. This is bound to increase the city's stature in the communication arts, he says.

negotiate all tape working conditions and wages among new companies (such as Howard Meighan's outfit) installing tape video equipment. (Hence, it is quite possible that these new firms will be operating under labor rules and regulations that do not resemble those in effect at either networks or film studios now in business.)

Then, in 1960 at the time of the new contract dickers, the joint committee would bargain for uniform rates and working conditions in all tape video locations.

SAG's reaction to the AFTRA proposals has not been made known yet.

If the compromise offers by AFTRA are rejected, the live tv union can resort to action before the NLRB. AFTRA recently called upon NLRB to arrange for a referendum on control of tape, but the vote will not be activated unless AFTRA (or SAG) make a final demand for it.

Argentine B'casters' Bid for Return Of Free Enterprise Hits Some Snags

Buenos Aires, April 1.

Last week a Cabinet crisis almost scotched Argentine broadcasters' hopes of a quick return to the free enterprise commercial system. Divergent viewpoints on foreign capital exploitation of the country's oil resources, sparked the resignation of two ministers, and for a time Communications Minister Angel Cabral was believed to have gone with them. It is on him that the broadcasters dispossessed by Peron pin their hopes of getting a just return of their licenses, assets, or true value in payment for them.

On March 6, amid bureaucratic fuss and fanfare, Dr. Cabral presidcd over opening of bids for 55 radio and 10 tv channels put up for tender. The Government Notary was there with six Naval, Army and civilian members of the Committee for Dispersal of the Peron Press and Radio empire. This was expected to be the final act of that dispersal, as the newspapers were assigned to new owners before the Feb. 23 Presidential election.

The radio situation is too complex and the former private owners of the radio outlets have valid claims in litigation which could invalidate new titles. Consequently few responsible groups bid for the radio channels.

Background

Some relation of the past is essential to understand the present situation: To seize control of radio, back in 1945, Peron had to work in secret so the public would not realize that what went on the air was not the genuine expression of free channels. As tool in carrying out this plan, he had the cooperation of the late Jaime Yankelevich, owner of LR3 Radio Belgrano, who was ready to play ball with anyone, if there was money in it for him. As Peron's envoy he visited each broadcaster in turn, and either by cajolery or other devious means, forced each to surrender his outlet on bare payment of the assets. Some rebelled, but paid the price of their temerity by having their licenses "suspended" on a futile pretext, only to be forced to capitulate when at the end of six or seven months they could no longer stand the strain. One of them did actually die a few months after he was dispossessed, and his friends believe the shock killed him.

All this came to light under government probe after the Revolution, but what those probes don't recognize is that there were three groups of broadcasters: Those who through luck or influence got fair compensation, those who contented themselves with payment received but continued as managers or salaried "collaborators," or those who resigned from all radio contact, accepting the imposed price under protest. Of the latter, Alfred B. Dougall of Radio Excelsior, had a clause inserted in the deed of sale stating that all he was paid was for physical assets, minus goodwill, or the prestige value of his station. He actually was paid $25,000 for property now valued at $600,000.

Once Peron had all outlets "in the bag," he proclaimed a need to reconstruct and modernize the radio system and had his rubber-stamp Congress pass a law voiding all previous licenses and calling tenders for creation of three "independent" networks. These were awarded to "front men" who stooged for Peron, as was brought to light under the post-Revolutionary probes. Unfortunately for the non-collaborating broadcasters, the probes tarred them all with the same brush the Provisional Government being persuaded by communication officials (with axes to grind) that all were of the same calibre as Jaime Yankelevich. Consequently they can't get a hearing for their claims or return of the despoiled assets, and have had recourse to the Law Courts.

The probes did reveal that the high-sounding title "Radio Belgrano and Primera Cadena Argentina de Broadcastings S.A." was merely a blind to cover transfer of Yankelevich's properties to the State, leaving only the shell of a corporation, now in liquidation. Therefore the Belgrano wavelength henceforth will pertain to the B. Aires University for educational purposes. Belgrano transmitted from a Municipally owned building. Creation of this University outlet is believed to cover a Provisional Government yen to reward Dr. Pages Larraya, who has been its director of Radio affairs, with a cushy job running the University outlet.

When the Govt. called tenders for acquisition of the 55 radio outlets, those at issue in the lawcourts were included, the basic sales prices divided into two factors viz: Price of physical assets and key or market value. Since the swindled broadcasters were paid only cut down prices for bare physical assets, they claim the market price belongs in all justice to them. These claims are now being studied and the broadcasters await the verdict with patience not exempt from confidence that General Aramburu, a man of his word, will return them their rights.

Identification of all the bids on March 6 took six hours, and at the final count there were 108 bids for the radio and 15 for the 10 tv channels. However, no one bid for radio outlets in Mar del Plata, San Luis, La Rioja, or Corrientes. Another proof of over-centralization which keeps Argentina's provinces undeveloped. No one wants to pioneer.

The Mundo outlet is expected to go to the Editorial Haynes publishing group, to which it rightfully belongs. Haynes bid $1,800.000 for the channel and physical assets, where as a cooperative of Mundo workers bid an inadequate $25,000 for the channel alone, one understands for what purpose.

Some of the bidders for other B. Aires outlets are closely linked with money-lending enterprises, and it's doubted whether they will be considered.

P&G'S 'RIFLEMAN' AS A FALL ENTRY

Procter & Gamble this week inked with William Morris for a new half-hour telefilm drama, "The Rifleman." Bankroller has not settled on a network or a time slot as yet, but reportedly is once-overing all locations.

Series stars Chuck Connors, the actor and former football player. "Rifleman" was taken out of one of the segments on "Zane Grey Theatre," which Four-Star produced for CBS-TV this season.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Elvis Presley (RCA Victor). "WEAR MY RING AROUND YOUR NECK" (Rush-Presley†) is in Presley's familiar swinging grove and he can't help but stay on top with it. "DONCHA' THINK IT'S TIME (Presley†) rocks in an ordinary fashion.

The Chiefs (Greenwich). "APACHE!" (Marguerita*) is a wild instrumental in an Indian motif that shapes as a winner right from the start. "DEE'S DREAM" (Marguerita*) will develop into a must instrumental for the teeners who want their terp beat soft and close.

Roy Hamilton (Epic). "CRAZY FEELING" (Aberbach†) sets Roy Hamilton in a hot swinging groove that is sure to bring the side to the top of the spinning heap. "IN A DREAM" (Eden†) puts him back on a ballad and he's good at that, too.

Jack Pleis Orch (Decca). "RUN SILENT, RUN DEEP" (Hecht, Lancaster & Buzzell*) is a solid instrumental that shines through this r'n'r era and is due to grab a good slice of spinning time. "GIGI" (Lowal-Chappell*) gets a rich and colorful reading from Jack Pleis' boys.

The Beavers (Capitol). "SACK DRESS" (Ardmore*) is a hot rhythmic number with a topical viewpoint that the Beavers chase for top spinning results. "ROCKIN' AT THE DRIVE-IN" (Ardmore*) rocks for lotsa juke action.

Della Reese (Jubilee). "C'MON, C'MON" (Zodiac†) is an intriguing ballad that gets a strong spinning chance because of Della Reese's meaningful vocal handling. "I'VE GOT A FEELIN' YOU'RE FOOLIN'" (Robbins*) comes back in an updated lively vocal treatment.

Eileen Rodgers (Columbia). "CAREFUL, CAREFUL" (Witmark*) has a melodic breeziness that Eileen Rodgers swings into a good spinning item. "I'M ALONE BECAUSE I LOVE YOU" (Witmark*) puts the old-fashioned shuffle beat into a good light.

Doles Dickens Band (Dot). "PIA-KUKAUNGCUNG" (Merge†) was picked up by Dot from the Indie Lincoln label and it looks like a good buy. It's a fiery instrumental that could stir up a lot of terp action among the teeners. "OUR MELODY" (Merge†) has a strong instrument drive that programmers will go for.

The Emanons (ABC-Paramount). "WE TEENAGERS (KNOW WHAT WE WANT)" (Figure-G&H†) uses the best to give the teeners what they want in music today but it seems a little strained. "DEAR ONE" (Ninny & Ethel Byrd†) is an average ballad set against a rocking tempo which the group makes spinnable.

Tony Martin (RCA Victor). "TRY TO LOVE ME JUST AS I AM" (Stratford*) is the right kind of ballad for Tony Martin's romantic styling and the jocks will give it a spin. It's from the Broadway production, "Say Darling." "SAY DARLING" (Stratford*) is the show's title tune that comes across as a pleasing item.

Dickey Doo & The Don'ts (Swan). "FLIP TOP BOX" (Dee Dee†) follows the weirdo wax pattern set by "Dinner With Drac" and it should do as well in the crazy mixed up juke circuit. "NEE NEE NA NA NA NU NU" (Deane & Doc*) mixes up a crazy title and hot terp beat for teen appreciation.

Dakota Staton (Capitol). "THE PARTY'S OVER" (Stratford*) has been around for some time but Dakota Staton's workover gives its best breakthrough chance. It's from "Bells Are Ringing." "INVITATION" (Robbins*) features another of Miss Staton's individualistic interpretations. It's slow but effective.

Teresa Brewer (Coral). "SATURDAY DANCE" (Chatham*) swings swings according to current teenagers' taste and Teresa Brewer gives it the right touch. "I THINK THE WORLD OF YOU" (Merbaid†) is a travelog that makes you want to stay at home."

Dinah Shore (RCA Victor). "IT'S THE SECOND TIME YOU MEET THAT COUNTS" (Stratford*) works a neat beat and a slick lyric into a nifty item for Dinah Shore's vocalistics. Tune's from "Say Darling." "THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS" (Manchester*) has a fetching theme and lyric angle but it will be a tough disk to peddle in today's market.

The Rays (Cameo). "THE MAN ABOVE" (Conley†) is a rock 'n' roll spiritual that the kids may believe. "RAGS TO RICHES" (Saunders*) became a hit with Tony Bennett on Columbia a few years ago and it's still his song.

Twin Tunes Quintet (RCA Victor). "RUN - AROUND, RUN-AROUND" (Gil†) has a nice swinging feel that makes it easy to slot for spins. "DREAM FACE" (Peer†) is in a comfortable swinging tempo with a touch of the rocking groove to attract the younger set.

The Big Ben Banjo Band (Capitol). "SWISS KANTON POLKA" (Zodiac†) is a perky polka that bounces along at a happy gait and should attract spins in beerhall jukes especially. "HAPPY BIRTHDAY POLKA (Witmark*) is also the lively polka idiom.

The Coeds (Cameo). "LA LA" (Pemora†) has a nifty terp beat for the juke crowd and it could roll on from there. "JUKE BOX" (Lowe*) is a fast-paced swinger that runs ahead of itself.

Randy Starr (Dale). "PINK LEMONADE" (Republic†) is a good swinging attempt to attract the teenage listener. "COUNT ON ME" (Republic†) counts on its rocking beat to bring it across and it could work.

Jack Lewis (Arwin). "HURRY HOME TO ME" (Daywin†) gets the most out of blues tempo and could pick up some spinning friends. "THIS IS MY LOVE" (Daywin†) is missing some of the material peaks that a ballad today needs to get ahead.

Addie Lee (End). "PLEASE BUY MY RECORD" (Monument†) fools around with some speed gimmicks and a rocking beat to make an interesting novelty entry. "C'MON HOME" (Monument†) sets Addie Lee in a rocking blues form and she belts it effectively.

Kuf-Linx (Challenge). "EYE-BALLIN'" (Sherman†) has enough of the beat and the current teen vernacular to make some noise in the market. "SERVICE WITH A SMILE" (Golden West†) features John Jennings in a rock 'n' roll vocal group pattern that offers little that hasn't been done before.

The Drinking Gourds (Counterpoint). "EVIL WENCH BLUES" (Serena*) showcases Michael Larue in a stylized blues pattern that some jocks will go for. "JOHN HENRY" (Serena†) gets a moderate revival in a duet by Larue and Alex Foster.

PLATTERS' 300G FOR SIXMONTH O'SEAS TREK

Paris, April 8.

Yank singing group, the Platters, arrive April 19 to begin a six-month Continental and North African tour under the aegis of Bruno Coquatrix, head of the Olympia Music Hall here. After their record-breaking stint at the Olympia last October, Coquatrix signed them for personal handling.

Guaranteed $10,000 to $15,000 per week, with an anticipated overall fee of $300,000, the Platters will hit most of the French key cities, and then Italy, North Africa, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Scandinavia, West Germany, two weeks at the Brussels World's Fair, and wind in Paris in August for a three-week headlining stint at the Olympia. Since they are known in France, West Germany and Scandinavia, bookings are harder in other countries where their disk popularity has not penetrated.

Album Reviews

The Jonah Jones Quartet: "Swingin' On Broadway" (Capitol). The swinging trumpet of Jonah Jones after a dozen tunes out of Broadway musicals and he gives 'em a jaunt and bounce that makes the set a sure bet for the bestseller lists. Heading up a lively quartet, Jones brings a lot of musical wit in his approach and adds a swinging step that's just right. Tunes are culled from such tuners as "The Music Man," "Oh Captain," "My Fair Lady," "Bells Are Ringing," "The Pajama Game," "Kismet" and "Oklahoma" to make a fine representation.

Eileen Rodgers: "Blue Swing" (Columbia). Eileen Rodgers makes a socko solo album debut in "Blue Swing." Peg for the package are swingers from the standard catalog with a touch of the blues feel that the thrush knows how to get across with full impact. Ray Coniff helps her convey the message.

Patachou: "International Soiree" (Audio Fidelity). This package is culled from the repertoire in Arthur Lesser's "International Soiree," which had a brief run on Broadway last month. In Patachou's hands, the set becomes a spinning item good for a long run. She's a stylized chanteuse who makes the Gallic offerings easy to take. More of the French touch is supplied by Joe Basile's accordion and orch.

Cy Walter: "Plays Gershwin Classics" (Atlantic). Although the "Gershwin classics" in this package are culled from only two shows, "Funny Face" and "Of Thee I Sing," it still adds up to quite a repertoire. Cy Walter has taken 14 tunes from both shows and given them a sure and deft keyboard treatment that will make the showtune buffs happy and will please those who need a slick piano backing for their living room activities.

Hildegarde: "A Souvenir Album" (Decca). This is a fine recap of Hildegarde's career under the Decca banner. The diskery has put together some of the best stuff she recorded in their studios and it works into a handsome item for the collector's shelf. In the package are such Hildegarde memorables as "Darling, Je Vous Aime Beacoup," "The Last Time I Saw Paris," "Lili Marlene," "Paris Wakes Up And Smiles" and "It's A Big Wide Wonderful World."

Jill Corey: "Sometimes I'm Happy, Sometimes I'm Blue" (Columbia). There are two Jill Coreys in this package. On one side she's in a mellow, romantic mood, while on the flip she changes personality and goes into a breezy 1920 flapper style with an uninhibited zest. It's a showmanly set using a solid repertoire for the romantic mood and a captivating honky-tonk approach for the segue. Glenn Osser's orch works both moods with her.

Sid Bass Orch: "With Bells On" (Vik). This is a novel musical presentation utilizing a bell backing on 10 standards and two originals by maestro Sid Bass. The tintinnabulation is used with discretion and taste to give the melodies an added measure of appeal. It's done with celeste, vibes and chimes added to a full-bodied orch and it works up an interesting sound.

Buddy Holly: "That'll Be The Day" (Decca). Buddy Holly, a click in the singles market with his blending of rock 'n' roll and country music, puts in more of the same in this package. He's got a good musical styling but the main appeal still remains with the teenage contingent of rockabilly fans.

"The Long, Hot Summer" (Roulette). Alex North has written a dramatic score for the 20th-Fox pic, "The Long, Hot Summer," which holds up effectively in the groove without the crutch of pictorial action. It's a full-bodied composing effort presenting in sound a vivid representation of the people and places William Faulkner was writing about. As an added fillip, the package has the title song sung by Jimmie Rodgers. The lyrics for this, by the way, were written by Sammy Cahn.

Screamin' Jay Hawkins: "At Home" (Epic). Screamin' Jay Hawkins doesn't present music to do anything by but listen. It's that demanding and almost that unbelieveable. Hawkins literally uses a screaming technique to get his songs across and he makes 'em all virtually unbearable but somehow fascinating. The way he tears up "Orange-Colored Sky," "Temptation" and "I Love Paris" are examples of his tune-destructive techniques. Leroy Kirkland and O. B. Masingill work the orchs as best they could.

Knuckles O'Toole: "Plays Honky Tonk Piano" (Grand Award). This is the fourth in a series of honky-tonk piano demonstrations by Knuckles O'Toole and it continues in the vein that has brought the honky-tonk style to the attention of the hi-fi bugs. His style remains sharp and vigorous as he plows through a swinging standard catalog.

Med Flory: "Jazz Wave" (Jubilee). This is a big-band dance set that's enhanced by the influence of West Coast Jazz, bop, and other forms devised by the musical progressives. Flory and his orch have blended it all into a hip-happy delight that also can be used for dancing. He's mixed up some oldies with some special instrumental pieces and they all move in the right way.

JOCK JURY STILL OUT ON R&R

Celler Blasts BMI at ASCAP Dinner Where Web Execs Are Honor Guests

By ABEL GREEN

Congressman Emanuel Celler (Brooklyn, D.), chairman of the House Antitrust Subcommittee, whose probe into radio-television station and network affiliation with Broadcast Music Inc. have figured in the public prints ever since the initial "Foley Square Follies," sounded a strong, partisan note at the 44th annual dinner of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers at New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel last Tuesday night (1).

In fact, even the maturer pro-ASCAP reaction later on, despite the spontaneous applause that greeted his frank pitch for the Society and against the broadcasters-BMI tieup, pondered whether Congressman Celler's ardor unwittingly hadn't gone too far for the occasion.

In no uncertain terms, and pointing to the NBC and CBS network representatives, also seated on the dais, in the second tier of the double-phalanx of guests of honor, Celler's enthusiasm for a segment of the Society's members, in a pending $150,000,000 damage suit, made many wonder. For one thing, it was embarrassing to some since CBS veepee Lawrence W. Lowman, Harold Fellows, prez of National Assn. of Broadcasters, and NBC general counsel and veepee Joseph H. McDonald were, like Celler, invited guests. Ostensibly it was a festive occasion.

The fact that ASCAP prexy Paul Cunningham, who toastmastered with good humor, had some judicious dais-dressing via another

A Staggering Income

Reappraisal of ASCAP's status and stature, in light of its more than $20,000,000 net income distribution annually, may be appreciated when it is explained that there are few businesses in the world which yields that sort of a "net" profit.

At nominal 4% income yield it would require an estate of a half billion dollars—500 millions—to realize that income, which a performing rights society like ASCAP now distributes every year.

Sorias' RCA Deal On Longhair Sets

Dario Soria, who recently exited his post as prexy of Angel Records after a five-year tenure, and his wife and business associate, Dorle Soria, are reentering the disk business via an unusual longhair packaging deal with RCA Victor. They will act as independent producers of deluxe classical albums under terms of a pact negotiated with George R. Marek, Victor v.p. and disk division general manager.

The Sorias will record both here and abroad for a series to be titled "Presented by Soria," to be launched in the summer of 1959. The Sorias will use RCA's facilities as well as such Victor artists who are needed for specific projects.

New pact was worked out just before the Sorias sailed for Europe last week enroute to Spoleto, Italy, where they are assisting Carlo Menotti with "The Festival of Two Worlds," which takes place June 5-29. While abroad they will do preliminary research for the forthcoming Victor series.

The Sorias, who first became prominent in the disk business via their Cetra-Soria operatic label, took over the revival of the Angel label five years ago under the English Electric & Musical Industries (EMI) banner. During that period, they made Angel a leading company in the longhair field, contributing several packaging innovations. They left Angel last Jan. 1 when that label's distribution was transferred to Capitol Records, another EMI subsid.

SOME SWING TO 'ADULT' POPS

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Uncertainty is the key word in today's pop music biz. In tempo with the slowdown of platter sales for the past several weeks, new hits have failed to break through on a national basis to take up the slack while the disk makers and disk jockeys are now wondering what the buying public really wants.

Music biz execs, after going through several ups and downs over the past few years, are wary of predicting that rock 'n' roll has had it, but they see definite evidence of a shifting in the disk jockey accent away from r&r recently. At the present time, the nation's deejays are in a state of flux, neither laying on rock 'n' roll with the intensity of yore nor switching over as yet to a sharply defined pattern of so-called "good" or "adult" pop music.

The deejays' betwixt and between status is seen hurting disk sales in many areas of the country where impact of the general economic recession has been pinching as well. "When the disk jockeys after returning from a cross-country tour are afraid to expose a tune consistently," one disk exec stated, "even the kids who have a buck to spend on a record nowadays aren't sure of wat to buy."

The radio stations, with their

RIAA in Drive For Status Quo On Copyright Act

The Record Industry Assn. of America is prepping a campaign to hold the status quo on the 1909 Copyright Act. Org has been primed into action by Ernest S. Meyers, counsel for the RIAA, who informed the directors that he believes a repeal of the compulsory licensing provision is in the offing and that attempts are also being made to eliminate or to increase the royalty rate established by the statute. (Current royalty rate provision is 2c per side and the publisher-writer contingent is pressing for an elimination so that it can bargain independently with the

Move to Nix BMI Ties for ASCAP Pubs Sparks Cleffer Cheers, Board Support

SPA's 'Oscar' Peeve

An alleged brushoff of songwriters on the recent "Oscar" award television show from Hollywood has brought a squawk from the Songwriters Protective Assn. Burton Lane, SPA prexy, in a letter to George Seaton, prez of the Academy of Motion Pictures, Arts & Sciences, protested that "the names of the writers of the nominated songs and even of the winning song were not announced."

Lane stated that he was particularly disturbed "because this is not the first time that names of the writers in the song category have been omitted from the 'Oscar' award telecast."

A proposal to prohibit ASCAP publishers from having any affiliation with Broadcast Music Inc., has struck a loudly responsive note among most songwriter members of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers and some publishers. Recommandation was made on the floor of ASCAP's membership meeting last-week by Barney Young, a perennial storm center of the music biz who, this time at least, was greeted with strong applause from the Society's membership.

It's known that ASCAP's board is also strongly in favor of preventing publishers from having dual licensing affiliations. Over 80% of ASCAP publishers, but none of the six or seven top firms, also have BMI subsidiaries, and these firms would be badly hurt by any ukase forcing them to sever their BMI ties or get out of ASCAP.

ASCAP's legal department is responsible for failing to give the greenlight to the move to outlaw the dual publishing setups. But the ASCAP legalites' minds could easily be changed given the right set of circumstances.

It's been pointed out that no ASCAP writer can place songs with BMI firms or even collaborate with a BMI cleffer if he wants to receive ASCAP performance money. While publishers differ from writers insofar as the former usually setup corporate entities, one lawyer stated that it would be simple to "pierce the corporate veil" in order to estab-

MGM 1st Qtr. Up 53%; 500G March

MGM Records has rolled past the first quarter of 1958 at a 53% dollar sales increase over a similar period last year. Company billed $500,000 in March, the biggest month in diskery's 11 years. LP's increased in sales by 9% and single records and EP's jumped 144%.

Most of the single sales activity was accounted for by Connie Francis' "Who's Sorry Now," Joni James' "Nothing Will Ever Change," David Rose's "Swinging Shepherd Blues" and Sam (The Man) Taylor's "Big Guitar." Sparking the LP's were Joni James' "Ti Voglio Bene... I Love You," the three "Gigi" albums (soundtrack, David Rose instrumental and Dick Hyman jazz), and Ray Charles Singers' "Winter Wonderland."

Arnold Maxin, who took over as MGM prexy the first of the year, plans to help maintain first-quarter sales pace by initiating special promotions for each month of the year.

London Label Ups 45's

London Records has finally bowed to the price hike swing established by RCA Victor several months ago. Diskery has upped the price on its 45 rpm singles to 98c from 89c.

The price increase also will be carried over to Felsted Records.

Too Many Orbit Labels, MGM Makes a Cub Out Of R&R Line; Up Drayson

MGM Records couldn't stay in Orbit with its new subsid label. Diskery is switching the tag on its rock 'n' roll disk outlet from Orbit to Cub after discovering that there were four other Orbit lines on the market.

All disks thus far released under the Orbit banner will continue to be sold, however, but additional pressings and new releases will carry the Cub tag.

Harold Drayson, who has been handling syndicate store sales for MGM, has been set as national sales manager of the Cub line, reporting to Irv Jerome, veepee and director of sales for MGM and Cub. Drayson will continue to work on the syndicate stores situation. Jerome currently is setting up distributors for the new line.

The Cub line will be priced at 98c for 45 rpm singles. Parent company's 45's product will continue at 89c until May 1 when the MGM disk then goes up to 98c.

DEALERS GET A DIVVY ON CAPITOL CLUB PLAN

Capitol Records will cut in the dealers in its disk club operation. Diskery launched its club several months ago without a dealer participation program.

The new Cap club plan, which went into effect Friday (4), will be similar to the other disk club operations whereby the dealers get credit for all purchases made by club members they sign. Under the new program dealers will receive 20% of the selling price for each record one of their members buys.

Disks Not to Queens' Taste, D.A. Goes After 6 Stores; M&L 'Sneaker'

Spotlight was thrown on "obscene" records last week when the district attorney's office in Queens (N. Y.) swooped down on six retailers for peddling "smutty" wax. The disks under fire were albums produced by the Joe Davis Record Co. and a recording of a vulgarity exchange between Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis which was made from a recording that some engineer lifted several years ago when Martin & Lewis were pards and rehearsing a commercial for a pic plug.

Davis' attorney Warren Trosb said that there's nothing salacious or lewd about his client's package product and that they were not in violation of the law. He also added that the Davis album covers were no worse than the art work adorning other albums out of major or indie disk producers.

Case was adjourned to April 15.

FRIEDLANDER TO UA AS NAT'L PROMO MGR.

Buddy Friedlander, promotion chief of Epic and Okeh Records, has joined United Artists Records as national promotion manager.

New appointment is part of a general expansion of the recently formed picture company label, which has begun to operate with various indie disk producers. Dick Gersh had been handling UA's promotion on a freelance basis.

Kellem's Cap Post

Capitol Records prexy Glenn E. Wallichs has named Manuel "Manny" Kellem as single records producer for label in New York.

Kellam, with Cap since 1952, started out as a promotion man for the local branch in Philadelphia, following which he was advanced to eastern promotion man of the National sales division of CRDC in N.Y. Most recently he was national sales manager of Prep, subsid of Capitol, but with suspension of that label was transferred over to new post.

Mills O'Seas Hop

Music publisher Jack Mills is sailing April 25 on the SS Nieuw Amsterdam on annual music business. There are a number of renewals coming up, along with contacting his affiliates in London (where he has a British subsidiary), Brussels, Amsterdam, Madrid and also in Germany and Italy.

He will be gone two to three months.

Al Bryan, Tin Pan Alley Lyricist Of Over 1,000 Songs, Dies at 87

Alfred Bryan, the oldest active songwriter on the Tin Pan Alley scene and author of numerous hit lyrics, died April 1 in Morristown, N. J., Memorial Hospital at the age of 87.

Until recently, Bryan was often seen around the Brill Bldg., New York's music publishing centre, where he was always a highly respected pop lyricist and special material writer. Bryan was a charter member of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, having joined at its formation in 1914.

Bryan wrote the lyrics for over 1,000 songs, many of which were credited to other writers. In the years immediately before and after the first World War, he turned out lyrics at a prodigious rate, sometimes writing five a night. He often gave lyrics away to other writers who weren't doing so well. On numerous other Bryan songs, moreover, publishers cut their own names in as collaborators, a more common practice then than now.

Bryan wrote such songs as "Peg O' My Heart," "Josephine In My Flying Machine," "Puddin' Head Jones," "Who Paid Rent For Mrs. Rip Van Winkle," "Brown Eyes, Why Are You Blue?" "Daddy, You've Been A Mother To Me," "There's Danger In Your Eyes, Cherie," and "My Mother's Eyes" (which Georgie Jessel made popular).

'Soldier' Starts Fuss

One of his songs, "I Didn't Raise My Boy To Be A Soldier," written before America's entry into the first World War, stirred up a storm of pacifist-militant controversy. Bryan also wrote the English words of the French song, "Madelon," and the lyrics of "Dardenella," another big hit out of the World War I days. Bryan was not credited as writer on "Dardenella," since he was under contract to another publisher, but he collected royalties on the song nonetheless.

Throughout his career, Bryan wrote numerous straight poems. When a young man in Chicago, where he had come from his native Brantford, Ont., he had a column, "Poet's Corner," for the old Chicago Interocean. He also reviewed opera for that newspaper. It was during this period that a music publisher suggested that he write song lyrics and his first published song was "When The Harbor Lights Were Burning."

Wrote for Anna Held

He came to New York in 1905 and worked as a staff member of several publishing firms, including the company owned by the late Fred Fisher who was billed as co-writer with Bryan on numerous songs. During this period, Bryan met the actress, Anna Held, and wrote "I Want To Be Good But My Eyes Won't Let Me" for her which she performed in the show, "Follow Me." Subsequently, he wrote songs for Shubert musicals and Hollywood films.

Other songs in Bryan's catalog include a tone poem, "Grand Canyon," "I'm On My Way To Mandalay," "The High Cost of Loving," "Joan Of Arc," "Lorraine," "Oui Oui Marine," "Please Mama, Buy Me A Baby," "Song Of The Nile," "Down In The Old Cherry Orchard," "The Irish Were Egyptians Long Ago," "Listen To That Jungle Band," "Blue River," "Red Lips Kiss My Blues Away," "I Want You To Want Me To Want You," "Near You." He also authored several books of poetry.

His son with whom he lived in Gladstone, N. J., survives.

'Condon's Uptown Now' Dixie Album for MGM

Eddie Condon has put some of his dixieland stuff into the groove for MGM Records under the heading of "Eddie Condon's Uptown Now." The album title stems from the recent move of Condon's nitery from New York's Greenwich Village to East 56th St.

The cutting session was held under the supervision of MGM prexy Arnold Maxin. Condon's most recent LP, "The Roaring '20s," was issued under the Columbia banner.

On the artist level, Thiele has brought in Manny Albam and Larry Sonn. Both previously recorded for Thiele at Coral.

Celler Raps BMI

solon (Congressman Donald H. McGannon) spoke for itself. So, too, was the presence of tv packager and indie station owner Martha Rountree and her husband, Oliver Presbrey, both of whom were pro-ASCAP witnesses in the Congressional hearings on the Smathers Bill before Sen. John O. Pastore's subcommittee.

Cong. Celler, of course, as chairman of a House subcommittee, has openly declared in the past his rap at the broadcasters and BMI. Celler also caused some uneasiness among ASCAP publishers by seeming to intermingle the damage suit, by a group of 33 songwriters against the networks, BMI et al., with the idea that it represented the uniform thinking of the entire ASCAP membership and board. In actuality the publisher segment within ASCAP has long since taken a dim view of the action and has maintained a hands-off policy.

Up until the Celler's political pitch there was the usual sentiment about the veterans; the presence of Elsa Maxwell and Arthur Godfrey, on the dais, as two of the newest members of the Society; a nod to Mrs. Saul H. (Bonnie) Bourne, widow of the late treasurer of the Society and the first and only distaffer on the board—a very decorative one; a nod and a scroll to Leonard Bernstein, a ditto to the venerable Otto Harbach (including a medallion presentation by Deems Taylor) etc.

The postmortems on the afternoon's business meeting were favorable as regards new board member Johnny Marks' report for the executive committee. There were, however, mixed opinions about board members L. Wolfe Gilbert's and Ned Washington's blast against Carmen Lombardo, John Jacob Loeb and Hans Langsfelder for taking what most felt should be strictly intra-ASCAP problems into the courts for public airing, "washing linen in the open," etc. Some felt that the effect could have been achieved just as well without Gilbert's need of having referred to the "three Ls" since the membership knows against whom criticism was directed.

ASCAPer-maestro Vincent Lopez conducted the show in which ASCAPer-singer Morton Downey participated.

Diskery Pactings

MGM Records went on a signing binge last week, adding six artists. They are Georgie Shaw, Donny & The Duke, Don Cogan, Lew Prince, The Tophatters and Bernie Early. All are being scheduled for a mid-April release.

Paul Livert, artists & repertoire chief for Seeco, tapped La Plata Sextet and thrush Gloria Wilson to exclusive pacts. La Plata group will cut for Seeco while Miss Wilson will etch for Dawn, Seeco subsid.

BMI Ties for ASCAP Pubs

lish that a given publisher has two subsidiary firms.

Young's recommendation was part of the "unity" note struck repeatedly at the ASCAP meeting. Johnny Marks, who was elected as publisher board member last year, made a strong defense of the Society in his report for the executive committee. Hitting at charges made by some members before the House Small Business committee, Marks said the Society is "harassed" by some members that "seek to create the impression that the Society is controlled by a small handful of unscrupulous writer and publisher board members." Marks stated that the large publishers and top writers "bend over backward to give the benefit of any doubt to the lesser writers and publishers."

Marks stated that "after having been in the board room with the 12 writer directors and 12 publisher directors I would say that it is impossible for them to engage in the manipulations with which they have been charged." He denied that there was any small group in ASCAP which controlled the other members on the board.

Marks, who was an observer for ASCAP at the recent Congressional hearings, lauded ASCAP general counsel Herman Finkelstein for his "masterful job" of defending "the most serious charges that ever have been made against the board of directors."

Defending the present distribution system, Marks stated that ASCAP is on a "virtually 100% performance basis." He said that "most of the complaints always come from those who produce very little and warned that the Society "cannot survive disunity from within." He advised that it was more productive to "write than to fight."

"Top 40" listings, are also being pressured from another direction to switch away from the almost exclusive accent on rock 'n' roll records. Advertisers, who now want to make their promotional dollar hit for maximum impact, are no longer impressed with the high ratings earned by the "Top 40" outlets, since it's been established that kids make up these audiences predominantly. The advertisers are now looking for more impact on the adult audience. The new outlook of many stations corresponds in varying degrees to the opinions expressed recently in Kansas City by Columbia Records' Mitch Miller who berated the broadcasters for a short-sighted and uneconomic policy of catering 100% to the kids who control zero percent of the consumer market.

The trend away from rock 'n' roll, while haphazard and sporadic, is nonetheless shaping up as a factor in the disk biz. More plugging of "adult" songs has resulted in heavier programming of album material which feature the oldies. Rarely, however, does an album song get sufficient repetitive play to step out as a single, and while more album plays may help the package market, it is cutting into the singles field where the kids are the most active buyers.

diskeries or for a hike that could bring the rate up to 5c or 6c a side.)

On a recommendation by Meyers,, the RIAA directors have appointed a special committee on statistics and legislation to develop material which will reflect the economic aspects of the industry and counter many of the "prevalent distortions" of fact dealing with the position of the record companies, as contrasted with the relative positions of composers, performers and other segments of the music industry. It's all aimed at holding the 2c royalty line.

The RIAA plans to send out questionnaires to all its members and other disk manufacturers on which they will be asked to report for the years 1956-57 their payments to composers, artists, musicians and other segments of the industry. A composite report will then be prepared which will serve as ammunition for the Congressional hearings. Report will be similar to the one furnished by the record companies to the Office of Price Administration in 1950. The RIAA plans to keep a tight security lid on the info to assure that there will be no disclosure of figures furnished by individual companies.

Org's seventh annual meeting will be held in New York later this month.

Disk Jockey Era Comes to an End At KLAC as 5 'Personalities' Quit

Hollywood, April 8.

All personality disk jockeys are exiting KLAC. Prexy Mortimer W. Hall claims that the day of the deejay is over and that his indie station is undergoing a complete revamp.

Dick Haymes, Gene Norman, Earl McDaniel, Duke Norton and Jack Smith are all exiting the station which is switching over to a new format of playing the top 40 tunes on the charts, system also being adopted by other AM stations in the country.

Previously, Peter Potter left KLAC after claiming that the new policies meant the day of the personality deejay was over and the radio stations were going into mechanical presentation.

Hall said: "In major marketing areas disk jockey programming will slowly but inevitably come to an end. The trend in this direction has already started. We have decided to go all the way and operate 100% without deejays." New format goes into effect April 14.

Kornheiser Abroading In May; Brussels Angle

Sidney Kornheiser, general professional manager of E. H. Morris Music, will make the European scene starting the first week in May. He plans to visit Morris affils in Germany, France, Italy and England.

During his trek, Kornheiser will stop off in Brussels to work on the preparation of Harold Arlen's "Blues Opera" there and to latch on to an American theme song for the Brussels Fair. He'll be in Europe about a month.

MGM GRABS 'GRETEL' FOR 1ST VIDEO TIE

MGM Records has latched on to original cast album rights of the upcoming telemusical version of "Hansel & Gretel." It marks first tv package tie for MGM, a leader in the film soundtrack field.

The "H&G" package features Red Buttons, Barbara Cook, Rise Stevens, Rudy Vallee and Stubby Kaye. Score for the production was written by Alec Wilder and Bill Engvick. It's set for a simulcast showcasing on NBC April 22.

Jo Stafford Plus Top AFM'ers—It's Great to Be 'Live'

After the third number in her "preview concert" at the Waldorf-Astoria's Starlight Roof (N.Y.) last Wednesday (2) Jo Stafford seemed so carried away by the hot band beat behind her and the enthusiastic response in front that she turned to the boys in the band and said, "What say we get a bus and go on the road." And the agency boys ought to take her up on it, for this half-hour stint pinpointed with effect how exciting "live" music can be when it's performed by a singer and tootlers who know their business.

For the nostalgic at the Starlight Roof it was a throwback to the "good old days at the Broadway Paramount" when the big bands and not the big beat kept the house jumping. And as one radio vet in the room said, "Its a shame that my kids can't get the opportunity to see this kind of stuff—live as we used to in the late '30s and early '40s."

The music biz gathering of radio-tv programmers, deejays, press, etc., however, was not a shill for a comeback of the band biz. It was a Columbia Records' bash to introduce Miss Stafford's newest album, "Swinging Down Broadway." The solid turnout and reception proved that Col got its message across with impact.

Miss Stafford, in fine vocal form, worked with her husband, Paul Weston, who was at the baton in front of a 17-piece orch made up of standout AFM'ers. Among the musicians who backed to the hilt and got every nuance out of the Billy May arrangements were Lou McGarrity, Will Bradley, Hymie Schurtzer, Billy Butterfield and Don Lamond. In the songbag were "The Gentleman Is A Dope," "Any Place I Hang My Heart Is Home," "Love For Sale," "Anything Goes" and "Tomorrow Mountain."

TO HEAR BMI MOTION VS. ASCAPERS JULY 1

The motion by Broadcast Music Inc. to dismiss the $150,000,000 suit brought by 33 ASCAP songwriters has been set for argument on July 1 in N. Y. Federal Court. John Schulman, attorney for the songwriters, asked for a 60-day delay in answering the BMI motion, which would have brought the issue to bat June 1, but the defendants proposed the July 1 date, which was agreeable to both sides.

The BMI motion to dismiss is based on the contention that the songwriters are not directly injured parties in the alleged conspiracy by BMI and the broadcasters to discriminate against ASCAP music. Their motion argues that the songwriters are only indirectly involved since they neither publish songs nor license their own material.

LOPEZ SPEAKING: 'MY ROMANTIC AUTOBIOG'

Citadel Press will publish vet bandleader Vincent Lopez's autobiography in the fall. It is tentatively titled "Lopez Speaking," his longtime radio signature dating back to the pioneer days of radio when he was long a Hotel Pennsylvania (now Statler) (N. Y.) nightly feature.

Maestro, also for a long stretch at the Hotel Taft, where he now is, indicates that the memoir has "more of a romance angle than a mere autobiography," hence his personal desire for a more definitive title which has yet to be worked out.

Recommend Self-Insurance Setup For AGVA Welfare Fund; Hamid, New Chairman, Answers 'Pressure' Story

Preliminary report by an actuarial firm has recommended self-insurance for the AGVA Welfare Trust Fund. A meeting of the trustees last week heard findings by the Martin E. Segal & Co. reps that the fund can become self-insured. Report didn't touch upon catastrophe insurance, which it's believed can be obtained from outside firms.

The step toward self-insurance is considered one of the most important to be taken by the fund, and trustees are expected to vote when the actuarial findings are complete. The fund presently is insured by Lloyds of London, which is being dropped so that the fund can do its own insuring.

Meanwhile, George A. Hamid Sr., president of GAC-Hamid, assumed chairmanship of the body last week upon the resignation of Georgie Price. The American Guild of Variety Artists is still to name a trustee to replace Price on the panel. It's possible that Joe Smith (& Dale), presently an alternate, will move up as a permanent member joining Cy Reeves and Johnny Woods.

Hamid, in a letter to VARIETY, has replied to last week's article which related the possibility of "economic pressures" on trustees representing employers who do not vote along lines desired by the AGVA administration. Hamid described how he got into the fund two years ago after having the fund's constitution studied by the attorneys who helped draft the Taft-Hartley act.

Hamid objected to a paragraph in the story which stated: "Thus far, the trustees have been fighting most of the encroachments, but how long they'll be able to hold out under an economic squeeze is speculative. They are awaiting the next move by Bright (Jackie Bright, AGVA national administrative secretary). Some fear that they may not even be able to resign when the time comes to vote against any AGVA proposal because of the possibility of retali-

Showbacking on Tape For Chevalier's One-Manner At Greek, L.A.; Lotsa Dates

Maurice Chevalier disclosed in New York last week that, as part of a busy schedule, he was planning to appear in a one-man show at the Greek Theatre, Los Angeles, June 30 with the entire musical accompaniment on tape.

He explained that this would give him a chance to "get the best musical backgrounds I've ever had." Chevalier said he had concertized in this fashion all over Europe with great success and that he would "break in" the act during his current Waldorf-Astoria Empire Room stint.

He'll use his European tapes, but will have some additional ones recorded, including songs from "Gigi," in which he appears. If his L. A. show is a success, "then I'll have something higher than I've ever accomplished in my line of work," the 70 year old Chevalier said. Show clicked on the Continent "but it's always a different story in the U. S.," he observed.

Chevalier had staged one-man shows in the States before, in 1946, 1947 and again in 1955.

On April 18, he appears on the Edward Murrow "Person-to-Person" show and he has several other tv guest shots lined up. He's talking about appearing opposite Debbie Reynolds in a film and is definitely skedded to play in "The Blessing," an MGM film, opposite Deborah Kerr. He's also discussing an appearance in a French picture. The only thing he won't do is tv spectaculars. "One man can't do that much," he explained.

Why does he keep on working? "As long as I have my health, it's my greatest joy to work in my profession," he said. "And anyway, if I didn't work, what would I do? Just drink and gamble, and run after girls. So I'm much better off working, and I'm very happy doing it."

Canada's CAPAC Sez Cafes Must Face Music Fees

Vancouver, April 8.

Neighboring Washington State's law, which relieves nitery operators, by fairly recent legislation, of the obligation to subscribe to ASCAP music licensing, is making some Vancouver impresarios ornery, says Ron Harding, the CAPAC (Canadian counterpart of ASCAP) western representative. "Just because the Washington night clubs don't have to pay, some club owners here feel they shouldn't," he said.

The Vancouver bonifaces in question are seemingly defying federal law, "the copyright act," said Harding, who states that one established club operator, who features regular floorshows, has been stalling so heavily on the matter of CAPAC's required "advance payment" that his license was lifted Jan. 1. CAPAC is suing "for using music without permission," Harding said.

Rep feels that the city's auditorium lessors could help plug the licensing loopholes, with casual show promoters, by telling the latter that a CAPAC docket must be obtained before opening the box-office.

"This new vaudeville house (obviously a reference to the Majestic), has no CAPAC license, and hasn't asked for one," Harding said. He stressed that the CAPAC section of the Canadian copyright acts requires, for premises featuring regular entertainment, a fee of $560 per annum, in advance, from operators spending over $20,000 and under $35,000. "In excess of $35,000, they have to pay 1½% of their year's entertainment expenditures," he said.

Advance levy is apparently based on the boniface's previous year's talent and orchestra overhead.

Dallas Century Room Closing for Summer

Dallas, April 8.

The Century Room of Hotel Adolphis here is slated to shutter July 1 for six weeks and will reopen in August with a show headed by Don Cornell. Room will be renovated during the summer hiatus.

Joe Reichman orch has been reengaged for the coming season. Lou Nelson has been set for a return Oct. 9. Comic closed at the spot last week.

Friars Fix May 9 For 'All Star' Fete

The Friars have substituted a dinner to be held at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria May 9, as a replacement for the N.Y. fete honoring the late Mike Todd which was slated for March 23. At a board meeting it was decided to bill the affair as an annual dinner to take the form of a frolic with a personality-laden dais and a big show.

New format was adopted following cancellation of the Todd dinner after the showman's tragic death while flying in from the Coast for the dinner. Feeling was that it would be difficult to get a stand-in as a guest of honor. Furthermore, the idea of a "memorial" was also dropped because of its inevitable gloomy overtones.

May 9 was selected inasmuch as it was one of the nights open for the Waldorf ballroom, and board felt that it had to be taken despite the fact that the Lambs would be holding its annual gambol at the Waldorf the following night. Stubholders to the Todd affair will get refunds should they be unable to attend on the new date.

WINCHELL & FILMITES SUB FOR ILL BEN BLUE

Hollywood, April 8.

Show business is coming to the aid of vet comic Ben Blue who underwent major surgery in California Hospital yesterday (Mon.).

Walter Winchell steps in to take over emcee chores at Blue's Santa Monica nitery beginning tonight (Tues.) and will be assisted by Billy Gray, Keenan Wynn and Jackie Coogan. Latter trio will do an act together, which Sid Kuller has written, as an added attraction to club's regular show.

Other volunteer talent includes Rhonda Fleming, Anita Ekberg, Tony Steele, Harry James, Betty Grable, Marie Wilson, Charley Foy and Harry Ritz. They are all expected to turn out on various nights at Blue's club to pitch in on the entertaining.

Winchell, while emceeing the show, will celebrate his 61st birthday tonight.

Vancouver Eyes Hangar-Coliseum, $3,000,000 Setup

Vancouver, April 8.

A new gimmick in arenas is blueprinted for probable downtown construction. New edifice will be a modified giant aircraft hangar akin to the one in operation at Vancouver airport. It will be 360x160 feet, to seat "from ten to twelve thousand," according to city officials.

"It will actually be a coliseum, not an arena," Mayor Fred Hume told VARIETY, "and not just for light affairs. It must be suitable for ice events and carnivals, as well as agricultural shows, fights and sports." Mayor estimates the arena's cost at $3,000,000.

Provincial solons in Victoria have earmarked $1,000,000 toward construction "at any location, if Ottawa (federal government) also pays the same." This cash was available a year ago for such a building, but a hassle developed between Pacific National Exhibition officials, the Downtown Business Assn., and city hall. DBA wanted coliseum downtown, adjacent to new civic aud, and a plebiscite over same defeated city hall/PNE intentions to locate arena at Exhibition Park.

City officials are ready to proceed, have sunk $200,000 into the downtown site, and are moving now to appropriate an additional 16 lots to accommodate the "hangar."

Otto Safir, the designer of the Canadian Pacific Airlines' structure, has blueprinted the changes needed to make the plane shed into a civic "coliseum."

The advantages of booking far in advance are emphasized by John Croft, operator of the Beverly Hills Theatre Restaurant, Newport, Ky. (Cincinnati). According to Croft, the advantages are many. The choreographer can design her routines to fit each performer; convention dates can be set on the strength of the bookings, and the local convention bureau can be notified of the nitery bookings and provide cooperation.

Croft, in New York for a quickie, also revealed that the question as to who will book the spot is now up in the air. Rocky Sennes, who set talent for many years, has moved to the Coast since the recent death of his brother Tony, who was also associated with the Sennes Agency. Whether Sennes will be able to take care of the nitery in his new location remains to be seen.

Presently, Croft is booked up for the remainder of the year, and some dates as far as August, 1959, are being worked upon. With that kind of lead in bookings, it may be possible for Sennes to continue to service the cafe.

Croft also stated that he had changed the name of the spot from the Beverly Hills Country Club to the Beverly Hills Theatre Restaurant, inasmuch as it's not a country club. Croft said that many, upon arriving, have inquired about the location of the golf courses. He also said that the Beverly's location will be plugged as Cincinnati, despite its location in Kentucky across the river. Actually, Croft said, the room is situated in a community called Southgate, and in order to avoid confusion, billing the spot as being in Cincy would tend to avoid any mixup as to location.

Swedish Circus Zoo 1st Western Big Top to Play Moscow Since Revolution

Stockholm, April 1.

Trolle Rhodin of Swedish Circus Zoo, now touring Poland, has been contracted to bring his circus to Moscow, where they will give performances in Gorkij Park, opening Aug. 1. It is the first time since the Russian revolution that any circus company from the western countries will give performances in the Soviet.

The Russians, however, accepted the Swedish circus with one condition, that there should be no rock 'n' roll in the planned iceshow ballet. In exchange, the circus will bring a troupe presenting old-time Swedish folk dances.

To bring some competition to the Russian circuses, which are described as some of the best in the world, manager Rhodin is planning to bring along the biggest tent ever used by any circus in Europe. Also some major stars such as Maj-Britt Ronningberg on the ice, opera singer Hasse Funck, etc., will be included.

Contract with the Russians is a result of private negotiations between Rhodin and the Soviet's State Head Organization of Circuses in Moscow. The latter was contacted two years ago by Rhodin, who asked about possibilities of engaging Russian clown Oleg Popov for a season. Visitors from Moscow who have seen Popov in action describe him as being tops in the world.

The Russians seemed very interested in Rhodin's interest in their leading clown, but did not seem too willing to accept. However, as negotiations went on, the Russians suggested a visit to Moscow by Circus Zoo and promised, in exchange, that Popov and maybe two or three other top acts from Russians circuses could be available for a season in Circus Zoo.

TALENT—FACES ON A POSTAGE STAMP; CAFE LACK FORCES ACTS INTO SMALLIES

By JOE COHEN

The paucity of New York rooms is becoming an increasing source of embarrassment to acts and agencies alike. Because of this shortage, there are acts on the roster of the major offices who have never been seen by the bulk of the staffers who sell talent not only to cafes around the country but to television, legit, films, etc.

As a result, some of the small rooms such as Blue Angel, Le Cupidon and several other intimate spots have attained a premium status because of their showcase possibilities. Many are not only getting acts at what is regarded as rock-bottom prices but the new talents displayed there, on the first time around, frequently bring in enough agency business to more than justify their booking.

Thus some of the eligible smallies have been able to get acts that would ordinarily go to some of the hotel spots or to a major room. In some instances, the dates are used to bring in teleshow buyers. For example, Mike Nichols & Elaine May got some excellent tv breaks as a result of their showings at the Blue Angel. By the same token, out-of-the-way rooms such as the Elegante, Brooklyn, and the Golden Slipper, Glen Cove, L. I., also serve that purpose. They are sufficiently close to New York to watch an act develop and far enough removed to discourage talent buyers from taking a peek before the turn is ready, unless they are dragooned out by the agents.

'Blind' Selling

Because of the lack of proper showcases in New York, the number of turns that haven't been seen by their agencies, especially those of major offices, is alarming to both the acts and to the buyers. Agents must therefore pitch a performer to an operator without first-hand knowledge of how the turn would fit, except on the basis of reports. The boniface frequently feels that he would take unnecessary chances on that basis, and therefore tends to buy acts that he already knows.

Some of the small rooms have even developed their own list of acts. The Living Room, for example, uses the Versatones for indefinite periods. The Bon Soir has its own stock company. The Blue Angel has its own roster and there are some femmes that can work Le Cupidon virtually any time they are in New York. The Village Vanguard's operator, Max Gordon, used to take a lot of chances, but since his switch to a jazz policy, the number of acts he needs is now at a minimum.

Many of the acts who have been bypassed in exhibition in New York feel put out because agents haven't been able to note, through observation, either their development since last viewed (possibly in an audition hall) or their new material and sometimes a new act.

Bulk of the talent feels that a N. Y. credit is still essential in getting dates and prestige in the provinces. Alternative they feel, is having the agents take to the road, obviously a greater drain on time and expense of the percenters, and at that a poor substitute for showdates in a town that still is the origination point for the great majority of the dates in virually all fields.

Producer-director-writer Barnett has wisely avoided overloading the revue with nostalgia.....

Barnett, who has been Jimmy Durante's writer for 11 years, makes his bow as a producer with this show. Since he's hit the jackpot in his first effort, he obviously is a potential giant in the industry.

...you must see "Newcomers of 1928," written, directed and produced by Jackie Barnet. Buster Keaton, Harry Richman, Fifi D'Orsay, Rudy Vallee and Paul Whiteman are in it. The production and direction is great, and while there's a certain nostalgia about it, the show doesn't depend on memories out of the past to achieve its success. The dance numbers are as modern as tomorrow, and the theme of the entire show is cleverly interwoven with music and fun.

B. O. at B'klyn Town & Country So-So After Judy Garland's Exit

Business has been mixed at Ben Maksik's Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, following the dramatic and well-publicized exit of Judy Garland after playing 11 days out of a 25-day engagement at a salary of $25,000 per week. With Denise Darcel as replacement, the business at the Brooklyn spot has followed a normal holiday pattern, but with some exceptions. On Good Friday (4), which coincided with the first night of the Passover holidays, the spot was closed and Maksik stated that he had a nice quiet weekend. However, pre-booked parties Monday (7) and last night got him over a hurdle.

Meanwhile, Maksik said that he had a communication from an attorney representing Miss Garland asking whether she had any monies forthcoming. Maksik claims that he gave her $40,000 in advances which

Some Clad Tidings From Scot Billposters' Assn.; Pasting Strips on Nudes

Edinburgh, April 8.

Billboards advertising a striptease revue at the Empire vaudery here were censored by the local billposterrs' association.

Strips of white paper were stuck on top of drawings of nude femmes.

Show was billed as "La Grande Parade des Streep-Teeze," and the posters depicted three scantily-garbed gals under sections "Les Modeles," "Les Nues" and "Le Deshabille."

Peter Robinson, acting house manager, said: "I was informed that the billposters' Assn. reserve the right to paste over a bill which they think is not suitable."

Over 100 uncensored miniatures of the posters were left free of cover-up in city hotels, shops and clubs.

The Edinburgh Empire, part of the Moss Empires" chain, plays many "nude shows." The paradox is that Edinburgh, a dignified and austere city, famed for its Festival artiness, is one of the last spots in the world where the vaudegoers would expect such stage layouts.

B.O. Men Square Off at Shopping Mart Theatre

Indianapolis, April 8.

A picket line may be thrown around the entire Meadows Shopping Center because of the scheduled move there of the Avondale Playhouse. The action has been threatened by the Treasurers & Ticket Sellers, Local 740, unless an agreement is reached with the stock operation.

The Playhouse, formerly located in the country, has a five-year lease on a one-and-a-half acre site in the Center. A 1,000-seat tent is scheduled for opening late in June for a 10-week season. The new operation, accessible by city transit service, will have parking facilities for 1,000 cars.

Mrs. Jo Rosner, Avondale producer, plans to go to New York soon to line up a resident Actors Equity company, stars and plays for the forthcoming season. William Tregoe will rerun for his fourth year as director and resident company member. Taylor Wilson is president of the Playhouse.

Hamid Aquacircus Set for Flushing

George A. Hamid Sr., president of GAC-Hamid, a GAC subsidiary, plans to open the Flushing Meadows, L. I., Amphitheatre June 28 with a show billed as Aquacircus. Display will comprise water acts and circus acts and a swim line. Russ Morgan has been signed as musical conductor and Tony Marvin and Jimmy Clark will be emcees. Choreography and production will be by the GAC-Hamid staff.

Last year Hamid sought to take over the layout, but was stymied by inability to make favorable deals with various unions. Hamid says that deals with all the theatrical craft setups are virtually completed.

Aerialist Wins $55,000 In Suit Vs. Hamid-Morton; Injured at Circus in Pa.

The U. S. Court of Appeals last week unanimously affirmed a lower court jury's award of $55,000 to Farris O. Anderson, an aerial acrobat, to be paid by the National Producing Co. and George A. Hamid for injuries sustained by Miss Anderson in May, 1952, during a performance of their circus at the Jaffa Temple, Altoona, Pa.

Miss Anderson claimed she was employed by Peaches O'Neill, who was retained by NPC to supply an aerial act for the circus. While performing, she fell 18 feet from a rig, claiming severe injury to her spine.

In opinion, written by Judge Edward Lumbard and concurred in by Judges Sterry R. Waterman and Carroll C. Hincks, the court stated: "As there is ample evidence in the record to sustain the plaintiff's theory that the injuries occurred because of the negligence of the defendants' riggers, the main question before us is whether there was sufficient evidence of Hamid's partnership with (the late) Col. Robert H. Morton (who actually ran the circus) to support the jury's verdict against Hamid as a partner.

"In our judgment, a review of the record discloses ample evidence from which the jury could find that Hamid and Morton, in the words of the Uniform Partnership Act, systematically carried on as co-owners a business for a profit."

The court pointed out that although Hamid contended that his only relationship with the circus was that of a booking agent, "many of the admissions he was forced to make, in his deposition and at the trial, supported the plaintiff's claim of the partnership interest."

The court ruled that Judge Walter Bruchhausen, before whom the case was tried in Brooklyn, properly exercised his discretion in denying a defense motion to amend their answer to the suit, made eight days after the trial had started. Jurist ruled it was made too late. "The other claims of error are so patently without merit that they do not warrant discussion," the opinion concluded.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Albert Whelan, 82-year-old vaudeville comedian who first introduced the signature tune to a British act, is convalescing in London from a recent operation in which he had his left leg amputated above the knee. Despite his age, Whelan is impatient to get back to the boards and has several summer dates lined up at Butlin's Holiday camps. Whelan told VARIETY that the gesture that most deeply touched him during his hospital spell was when Sophie Tucker took the trouble to telegraph flowers from Las Vegas.

Considering Vancouver a good bet for a branch of the American Guild of Variety Artists as result of his visit there last month, Irwin Mazzel, union's west coast topper, signed the Jack Card Dancers (8) into the union. Terpers, pacted for four-a-day at the Majestic vaud-film house, at $75 a week apiece, promptly put in for $125, via union's execs. Boniface Charlie Nelson, on grounds of "we're just getting started, we can't afford it," pinkslipped the danceline, finding it less burdensome to hire another act.

Milton Wagner, long associated with promotion of name bands at Edgewater and Jefferson amusement parks, Detroit, is convinced that name bands are a losing proposition there. "Big-name bands just don't have what it takes to stimulate traffic since tv came in," he said, adding: "Westerns seem to be what the public goes for the most, and on that basis we're angling to bring Wyatt Earp to Edgewater Park this summer."

Glasgow Vaude's 'Lend-Lease' Dip

Glasgow, April 1.

Vaude shows here, normally well attended, have been playing to poor biz recently. Lack of star names is one obvious reason, the steady run of top American name acts having practically ceased. English headliners are apparently not sufficiently strong in marquee value.

Acts like Johnnie Ray, Nat King Cole, Howard Keel, Danny Kaye, Betty Hutton, Billy Daniels and Bob Hope are now conspicuous by their absence. A few years ago they played here regularly, the Glasgow date being a favorite opening for transatlantic arrivals.

A long spell of extremely cold weather has also hit hard at the vaudery boxoffice. Many customers, particularly the older ones, now choose to stay indoors and read or watch tv rather than venture out to vaude layouts of doubtful quality. Added attraction of commercial tv network is also keeping many more at home.

BUFFALO'S TOWN CASINO IN LOW-TARIFF RETURN

Buffalo, April 8.

Town Casino reopened Saturday (5) for a trial run from now until the end of the season. When the spot closed two months ago, operator Harry Wallens announced that the cost of operation, particularly performers' salaries, was responsible for the shuttering. Later he issued a statement saying that the Casino would be reopened at Easter to see if a profitable policy could be evolved.

New policy just announced will be "no cover, minimum or entertainment charge (except Saturday) and spend what you like." Opening advertising features lowered prices for food and drinks with the management stating: "We love Buffalo and we want to keep vaudeville alive with your support by presenting an all-vaudeville show changing each week."

Tax Liens in Honolulu Vs. Mossmans, Akamuhou

Honolulu, April 1.

Federal tax lien for $65,000 has been filed against the estates of George P. and Emma K. Mossman. Figure involves income tax for two years and estate tax. Mossman was founder of the Lalani Hawaiian Village (no connection with the Hawaiian Village Hotel) and for several years pioneered in fostering Hawaiian nitery entertainment.

Territory of Hawaii has slapped a tax lien for $5,500 against William Akamuhou Dias, former bandleader at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel. Dias, who did business as Bill Akamuhou & His Orch, served a two-month sentence last year for failure to file a Federal income tax return.

Busy 'U.S. Dollar' Nitery, London's New Churchills Closed for Liquor Slip

London, April 8.

London has temporarily lost one of its few remaining niteries. For selling liquor after hours, and without a justices' license, Harry Meadows' New Churchills club has been shuttered. Spot was a favorite rendezvous of American tourists and brought in to the Bank of England a very healthy sum of dollars annually. Last year it produced $150,000 in U. S. currency.

The magistrate, Sir Laurence Dunne, decided that the New Churchills was not a club and ordered it to be struck off. He said: "It is practically impossible to run a business like this and comply with the law." But he added: "I hope that if the matter is later referred to the justices they will go deeply into the benefit to the country of an establishment of this type in attracting the tourist trade."

Meadows, a notable figure on the London nightlife scene, was personally fined $1,092 with $58 costs. Club itself suffered a $672 fine with $294 costs. Because the premises themselves have not been struck off, Meadows insists that he will be able to start a new club at any time and proposes doing so very quickly.

Hutton Vs. Ray in Walters-LQ Fight

The Broadway rivalry between the forthcoming Cafe de Paris and the long-established Latin Quarter continues. Eddie Risman, general manager of the Latin Quarter, has inked Betty Grable for a fall date. Meanwhile, Lou Walters, who will operate the Cafe de Paris, has signed Rod Alexander to do the choreography, and Buddy Clarke to head the orchestra. Cass Franklin will handle the booking.

The tentative opening for Cafe de Paris is May 6 with Betty Hutton topping. Latin Quarter will have Johnnie Ray around the time that Miss Hutton is at the Cafe de Paris preem.

Both spots are in the midst of huge building programs, Casino de Paris is being converted from a ballroom to a cafe that will be a virtual replica of the Miami Beach edition of the spot, while the LQ is enlarging the stage to the width of the room, will have rain curtains, Austrian curtains and a load of other devices.

Cass Franklin Sets Acts For Lorillard Fla. Show

Cass Franklin is producing the P. Lorillard show to be held April 16 at the Americana Hotel, Miami Beach, as part of the confab of the National Assn. of Tobacco Dealers. Rod Alexander will produce the layout, Tom Joerder is writing special lyrics and Nick Keesley of the Lennen & Newell Agency is supervising.

Cast will include the Szonys, Sam Levenson, Joe Sodja, Croft Sisters, Tina Robins, Marinette & Andre, a line and the Mack Davis orch.

Manager's Blow-by-Blow on Feeding Of Bally Material for Booked Act

Hollywood.

Editor, VARIETY:

I would like to take exception to the article in your March 5 issue carrying a letter by Gus Garber, director of advertising and public relations of the Windsor Hotel in Montreal. His comments may be well taken and I do not doubt that in many instances his contentions are well founded. However, I am sure that his comments do not apply to all personal managers and for this reason, I felt that some reply should be forthcoming.

When one of our attractions is booked by an agent or an agency for a personal appearance, we do our utmost to publicize the appearance. There is no question but that the promotion and publicity are a tremendous help and quite obviously it is to our advantage that our attraction does the maximum amount of business possible on every appearance.

Pronto Promotion

When a recording attraction is booked, we immediately contact the manager of the hotel or cafe, or club, or promoter and ask him to supply us with an up-to-date list of all the important disk jockeys heard in his area. We then have the performer write personal notes to each of these disk jockeys advising them of the forthcoming appearance of the attraction in his area. We solicit his help in spinning current releases and albums, and ask for his aid in promoting and plugging the engagement. At the same time, we offer the attraction for radio and tv interviews while the attraction is in that particular area.

We try to make sure that each disk jockey is supplied with the current recordings available on the artists, and if we find that he does not have them, we attempt to see that he receives them post-haste.

In many instances where the engagement is for a two or four-week duration, we suggest to the hotel that they have small stickers printed up, which can be affixed to the label of the record calling attention to the opening date and the length of the appearance, time, place, etc. We suggest that these gummed stickers be put right on the label of the record so that it will be an automatic reminder to the disk jockey to plug the engagement every time he spins the record. We also suggest that these stickers be distributed to the local one-stop dealers and the record distributors so that they perhaps can be affixed to the various jukeboxes in the important locations throughout the city—adding a number of other plugs to the forthcoming appearance.

We make sure that the promoter or the employer is supplied with an up-to-date list of the recordings and the numbers thereof so that he will have this information at his fingertips.

Pushing the Packages

In many cases, where we have appearances of recording artists who have current albums going for them, we order counter card easels which are actually reproductions of the album cover and we ship these directly to the hotel or place of engagement immediately following the actual booking of the date. In a separate letter, we suggest to the promoter or the employer that we have a gummed strip printed and affixed to the front of the easel and this then becomes a poster which can be used in all the retail record shops, schools, clubs, etc., to render another plug for the engagement.

We certainly try to make sure that the biography and the recording list are completely up-to-date and we attempt to see that the pictures on the attraction are all very current.

Mr. Garber sounds like an eager and very aggressive public relations man. Unfortunately, a great many hotels and clubs do not have his steam and enthusiasm. For Mr. Garber's information, we have found that in many instances our

Foreign Circus Review

Moscow State Circus
Paris, April 1.

Georges Soria-Spectacles Lumbroso present the Moscow State Circus in two parts, with Margarita Nazarova Tigers, Alibek Kantemirov Cossacks (7), Koch Sisters (3), Carandache, Beliakov (8), Raissa Nemtchinskaya, Zapachny (5), Papazov (2), Nina Logatcheva, Ivanov (2), Nazy Chirai; decors, Georges Wakhevitch; music direction, Moukoutch Tatevosian. At Palais Des Sports; $2.50 top.

The Moscow State Circus was in two years ago and made a definite dent with its more, balletic, sombre approach to the circus. This year it is back with all new numbers. Though the sheen has worn off, it unveils enough spectacular numbers to make this a showy, solid entry. More sawdusty and circusy than previously, it looks to do big here, but a trip stateside might be too expensive a proposition to bookers due to the bulky equipment and the intermittent qualities. It is worth a try, however.

Most sensational number is Margarita Nazarova Tigers. This pretty blonde treats the big cats like kittens. She has them chewing on her hand, jumping through flaming hoops, and licking her face. Rather than taming 'em this girl has learned to live with the tigers, and the audience reacts mightily for the lady and her charges.

Alibek Kantemirov Cossacks do some fancy trick riding on spirited ponies for a breezy number. Sabering objects and shooting from horseback wind this for big mitts. Raissa Nemtchinskaya ups to cavort gracefully on a trapeze for fine results. Shapely miss works some of her intricate no-hand spins on the trapeze bar sans the usual safety belt attachment.

Koch Sisters mount on a giant semaphore signal apparatus. Then they proceed to walk with the periphery in hoops, on a bike, etc., making for involved balancing setups and a solid, offbeat act.

Beliakov (8) do gymnastics with abandon and then mount a big swing which sends bodies bulleting into somersaults to land on the shoulders of their two-high partners. This is a solid, zesty act. Zapachny (5) do some smart handto handing and then throw a little girl into smooth, svelte airborne arabesques as they catch her and keep her aloft. It's a neat filler.

Papazov (3) do a silken aerial number. They are borne aloft in various difficult balancing postures and then go up on three trapezes to do a smoothly harmonized series of exercises. It is well mitted. Nina Logatcheva does a ballet dance on a tight rope. Suppleness and balance belie the intricacy of this bit.

Ivanov (2) have a girl going up long poles held by the man, drawing big mitts when she upends by only biting into a mouth bit on the end of the perch as he is doing likewise below. Nazy Chirai mixes gracious folk dancing with fast, dextrous juggling for standout eye values. Carandache is the perennial clown who breaks into acts, imitates preceding ones and has some very funny bits. But the more inventive, funnier Popov of two years ago is missed in this sphere.

The Moscow sawduster may lack the more dynamic aspects of Western counterparts, but it is a good show. Except for the tigers, it removes the risk from numbers. In for a month, show's reviews and word-of-mouth should have this in for solid biz at the big indoor arena the Palais Des Sports. Music, introing and general mounting and costuming are all tops, except for the lulls when props, etc., are being shifted about. A speedup would make this even better. With exchange setups 'twixt the U.S. and USSR in operation, Russia would be a fertile field for offbeat acts for the talent consuming video variety programs. Mosk.

Guest conductors will include Sir John Barbirolli and Robert Shaw.

Ringling Cuts Corners at MSG

The circus is cutting some sharp corners in an effort to save a lot of expenses. Of course, a lot of extras have been pared by the scuttling of the tent format and building the show for arena and auditorium presentation. However, the Garden run tops off some further cuts. One very much evident to the house is the new floor consisting of rubber mats, instead of sod, which took a couple of days to set down and which necessitated two days' rental of the Garden in advance of the opening. The estimated saving in this department alone is reported at $7,000, aside from rental of the two extra days.

Another fat saving is the new rigging which can be set up in a few hours, instead of having workmen start Sunday night at double time and triple time to assemble the rigging for the various acts. Not evident to the audience is the fact that backstage there are only two dressing rooms. They are very large, to be sure, one for men and the other for women. However, with no partitions to be erected and torn down, the reported saving here is about $6,000.

A heavy transportation item was saved by breaking the jump from Sarasota to New York, via a five-day stop in Charlotte which got them a record $115,000 for that date. Indications point to the fact that there will be more stops on the way north next year. One town being considered is Baltimore. Another advantage of breaking the jump is that the show is already broken in by the time it reaches the Garden. The fast runoff at the New York opening bears that out.

in the salary structure and to added pay for rehearsal time.

The producers have agreed to changes which call for a rest period of one and one-half hours between performances after a period of not more than five hours of performance. A portion of rehearsal time is to be set aside within the first three days for completion of contract changes, deputies and health insurance. Producers agree except for the phrase "health insurance." Producers have agreed to furnish transportation from show to hotel where distance is more than one and one-half miles. Dance captains are to get $25 more per week.

Producers are also fighting a clause which would have assistant stage managers members of the union. There is no opposition to stage managers belonging to Equity as prevails under the present contract which expires April 16. They partially object to standard coverage of hospitalization for an actor engaged for more than one week. They seek payments of three months instead of sixmonth periods and a clarification of the breakdown of the costs.

The major opposition centers on the demands relating to salary and rehearsal. Equity is seeking a rehearsal hour schedule which shall be seven out of 10 consecutive hours per day. Organization seeks the dress rehearsal schedule to be included. The union asks a minimum of $270 on dates of seven days for actors, chorus and assistand stage manager. It seeks $300 for stage managers, or $240, based upon size of cast and span of employment. The union demands that an assistant stage manager in a dramatic show and the first assistant stage manager shall not act, but may understudy where the cast numbers more than five persons. Producers accede to this request for future productions, but not for shows already on the road or contracted for.

ation which could work a hardship on any employer who is a trustee."

Hamid's letter said: "This is the principal disturbing factor. Since Mr. Price resigned on doctor's orders, and I have agreed to continue for the time being as the chairman, I wish to go on record as disapproving on behalf of the operators, the contents of this article.

"The only reason I have is that of the performers and that is the only reason why I became interested in the fund. After I was convinced that it was a good thing for the operators and a very worthy cause to the performers, I have spent as much time as I could to aid this fund and explained to performers and operators its purpose.

"One very important item for you, AGVA and performers to keep in mind is that 99% of the monies which are paid in are paid by the employers and no one else. Insofar as I am concerned, the welfare fund is sacred and should continue to be administered exclusively for the purpose intended.

"Mr. Silverstone (& Rosenthal, attorneys for the fund) has at all times acted in good faith and helped to steer the welfare fund committee to do the best job possible in keeping within the bounds of our charter and purposes. As long as I am chairman and have anything to do with the welfare fund, no one will influence me to act in any way other than that for the best interests of the welfare fund and performers.

Opposed to Self-Risk

"I am against self-insurance, recognize the risk and will not permit any influence to prevail, unless I am convinced that 'catastrophe coverage' is handled by a reputable insurance company and that we have sufficient funds, legal staff and doctors and many supervisory requirements, if a self-insurance policy is to prevail."

An internecine battle is being waged between the AGVA and employer trustees regarding a change in attorneys. AGVA has been repeatedly pressuring for the change of counsel to Harold Berg, who is also attorney for the union. The employer trustees during the chairmanship of Nat Abramson repeatedly resisted this change, Abramson's major income is from booking cruises. Recently AGVA instituted moves to change cruise minimums from $50 weekly to $125 weekly.

Shelton Quits McConkey; See Prager as New Prez

Chicago, April 8.

Dick Shelton has left McConkey Artists after 10 years as its prexy. He'll devote himself to his music publishing interests and law practice and is set to act as McConkey's legal adviser.

Agency, once thick in the band field, has confined itself in recent years to booking club dates and small units. Shelton's successor hasn't been named, but a likely propect is Arnie Prager, veepee in the Chi office.

Shelton, who led his own band here in the early '40s, owns 45% of McConkey's stock, which he indicates didn't give him as much control of the firm as he sought. He said he plans to sell his shares.

His publishing operations are Windy City Music and Lakefront Music, the latter with a currently warm entry in "The Drag."

Maksik anticipates fairly smooth sailing until the end of the season. He's closing June 29, at which time he'll start extensive alterations to enlarge his kitchen, add more dressing rooms and build another room for catering.

Jack Carter follows Miss Darcel next Monday (14) and Sophie Tucker, backed by the Amin Bros. and Billy Fields, opens April 21. Tony Martin comes in May 9 for four weeks and Tony Bennett opens June 6 to finish the T&C season.

Last week Miss Garland put up an estimated $35,000 in jewels and her nitery costumes, in lieu of bond, to guarantee appearance in court in the case started by the State of New York for payment of nearly $9,000 in taxes on her earnings at the Palace Theatre in 1951. Attorneys guaranteed the money would be paid by last night (Tues.).

Chi's Black Orchid Takes Play From Chez as New Comedy Centre

Chicago, April 8.

Black Orchid is going the route of comics (mostly standup), meaning the intimery is stepping where the brassy Chez Paree used to tread.

Time was when the Chez had a local corner on the comic market, at least for names of any consequence. But now it's the Orchid that more consistently echoes yocks, building a roster that includes Shecky Greene, Dick Shawn, Joey Bishop, Jack E. Leonard, Jonathan Winters and Buddy Hackett.

Bishop's the current headliner, with Shawn and Hackett due in soon. Greene preceded Bishop, and Winters, who did boff biz a couple of months ago in the wake of his tv guesting with Jack Paar, is set for an early return. It all points up the Orchid's sentiment that there's safety in comics, though the rule has an occasional exception, per the smash run last December of Johnny Mathis. Singer's due back, by the way, April 17.

Occasionally the Orchid's been burned when it's bypassed a topline comic. Mary Kaye Trio which headlined recently only did fair biz in relation to its paycheck, a puzzler since the kids are regarded as local faves from their nabe nitery days and, additionally, had plenty of tv exposure going for 'em.

Orchid's growing eminence as a showcase for comedians is another symptom of the Chez's vexing position. The flagship feels it can't coin it with the Orchid roster, a condition that further shrinks an already sorely-pinched talent market and has made for too-frequent repeats of Sam Levenson, Jimmy Durante, Sammy Davis Jr., et al., whose marquee draw isn't what it used to be.

Chez, therefore, has got to reach for the big sensations (e.g., Jayne Mansfield, Frank Sinatra etc.), who seem to prefer the dice-and-roulette climate of Nevada. Besides, the Vegas strip is a mere commuting distance from Beverly Hills.

'Capades' Big 96G, Omaha

Omaha, April 8.

John H. Harris' "Ice Capades" No. 1 unit grossed a neat $96,000 for seven days and nine performances at Ak-Sar-Ben Coliseum for week ending March 30. This is more than $20,000 up from last year, when snow clobbered the final weekend.

Icer moved into Chicago Stadium from here.

Honolulu's Village Gives Tahiti Stuff Heave-Ho; Heiress De-Coins 'Isle'

Honolulu, April 8.

A craze for Tahitian entertainment in Waikiki may be on the wane. Tiare Room in the Hawaiian Village Hotel has dropped its Tahitian musicians and hip-wigglers after a run of several months. Bernie Hal-Mann combo, fronted by Bernie Conception, is now featured in the room.

Village spokesman scoffed at a rumor that Henry J. Kaiser had decided the uninhibited Tahitian show was "too vulgar."

Heiress Shirley Louise Mendelson is no longer "angeling" the Hawaiian floorshow and operation of the Top o' the Isle Room above the Waikiki-Biltmore hotel. Hauna-ni Kahalewai, featured entertainer, is now producing the show. First thing the deep-voiced singer did was to vote herself a cut in salary.

Room at one time was losing $10,000 a month, with Miss Kahalewai drawing a salary of some $600 a week.

Ella Correa is the new femcee and featured vocalist at Hubba Hubba nitery downtown. Better known as a hula dancer, she explains she's given up dancing "because I thought singing was easier."

Sarah Vaughan Concerts To Debut Live Fare At London Odeon in U.K. Tour

London, April 8.

Sarah Vaughan will play two concert dates at Rank's showcase, the Odeon, Leicester Square. These will mark opening of her British tour Saturday-Sunday, April 12-13, two-a-day. This will be the first occasion on which the theatre has played live shows, and a spokesman for the Rank outfit said there was a possibility of more live entertainment in the future provided the attractions were suitable and of a big enough calibre.

He added that the Lew & Leslie Grade agency, which is presenting Miss Vaughan in this country, had originally booked the Dominion picture theatre, Tottenham Court Road, but as that venue was being equipped with the Todd-AO process, another suitable house had to be offered. Miss Vaughan's appearances at this first-run West End house will come at the tail end of the "Bonjour Tristesse" run.

There is also a possibility of the Odeon, Marble Arch, playing live shows as well as films, but no bookings have yet been made.

The singer's two Leicester Square dates will be followed by a tour of major cities in the Midlands, North of England and Scotland, with further London concerts towards the close of the tour. She'll be accompanied by the Ted Heath orch at the Odeon.

For the rest of the tour the backing will be by the Tony Kinsey Quartet and the Jazz Couriers, featuring Ronnie Scott and Tubby Hayes.

Tour is under the banner of the Grades in association with Harold Davison and is confined to a limited number of one and two-night stands ending April 27. Most of the dates will be in Rank-owned theatres in the provinces and London surburbs. She will, however, fill one engagement at the Granada, Woolwich.

Atlantic City Ramchecks Easter Sunday in Bid to Capture Trade

Atlantic City, April 8.

A chilling surprise rain drove down the coast early Sunday (6), washing out Easter Sunday here. Most of the thousands of visitors due for the annual fashion parade on the boardwalk remained home awaiting a better time to show their spring finery. Of the 250,000 expected, approximately 75,000 were on hand. It was estimated that the rain cost the city $3,000,000.

City Commissioner Richard S. Jackson said the resort would celebrate the Easter holiday the coming weekend by giving all who planned to come to the shore a "raincheck." He said that although awards for the 10 best women's hats and the 10 best dressed men had been made, another group would be honored the coming weekend. Jackson's department includes the city's press bureau.

To amusement, hotel, restaurant operators and the thousands of others who had expected to do top business with the big expected crowd, the weather was a bitter disappointment. It was the first time in 83 years that the Boardwalk Easter parade was a complete washout.

George Hamid Jr., who with his father operates Steel Pier, said the spot would be open this weekend as they cooperate with the plan for the "raincheck" Easter Sunday. Hamid said that while he expected they would do about 10% of a normal Easter business, it turned out that they drew 50% despite the rain. Plans to shutter the pier at 6 o'clock were abandoned and it was kept open as planned. Jimmy Dean with his tv group featured the vaudeville while Glenn Miller orch directed by Ray McKinley was in the Marine Ballroom.

Ted Lewis is slated for a two-week stay at the Century Room of the Hotel Adolphus, Dallas, May 5.

Nelson's Tex. Date

San Antonio, April 8.

Ricky Nelson will appear here April 25 under sponsorship of KTSA. He previously made two stops in the state last month, one at Dallas and the other at Houston under sponsorship of KLIF, Dallas, and KILT, Houston. All stations are operated by Gordon McLendon of Dallas.

Dallas and Houston were reported SRO.

Church Extends Invite To Paul Robeson After Vet Group Objects

Pittsburgh, April 8.

Soldiers and Sailors Memorial Hall here abruptly canceled a scheduled concert by Paul Robeson last week, whereupon a church in nearby Sewickley extended an invitation to the singer to appear there.

Rev. Charles R. Gordon, minister of St. Matthews A.M.E. Zion Church, said he was "quite disappointed" that Allegheny County officials had called off the Robeson booking the night of April 21. Gordon emphasized that he is not in agreement wth the political views of the 60-year-old baritone but "I respect his right to be heard as a concert artist. After all, this is America, where freedom is guaranteed, even to those with whom we might disagree."

Gilbert C. Cloonan, superintendent of the Soldiers and Sailors shrine here honoring America's fighting men, stated of Robeson "we don't want his type here. We don't think it's right to have a performer in this hall who won't salute his country's flag."

Robeson's concert was announced as having been arranged by the Ushers Alliance of Pittsburgh.

Maurice Chevalier, Emil Coleman & Bela Babai Orchs; $3 cover.

Maurice Chevalier, at 70, looking 15-20 years younger, may well become the male Fanny Ward. He'll probably start piling on the years to accentuate the affirmative. Chevalier, at 70, is the lone survivor of the three giants of the varieties and the musichalls—America's Jolson and Scotland's Lauder were the other two. Chevalier, at 70, is an indefatigable trouper, a poised, polished and undeniable personality, professionally and boxofficewise. Chevalier, at 70, is tireless, peripetatic and seemingly a Ponce de Leon for buoyancy and bounce as he thinks nothing of flitting from Paris to The Lambs Club, as he did, for a one-night salute to Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe; back within the same month to Hollywood for the Academy telecast, to Washington for the Radio-TV Correspondents as headliner in a variety show emceed by Ed Sullivan, with a Sullivan tv'er spliced in between his charity preview Monday (7) night for the New York Infirmary. Last night (Tues.) was the formal preem at the Empire Room.

Which brings up the degree of the Chevalier brand of 1958 showmanship which is lacking a shade for the reason that he has interlarded a half-century of highly commercial Chevalier charm and chansons with what he seemingly thinks must be an ultramodern leavening of his longtime, long-accepted values.

In short, Chevalier in trying to rewrite a hit—himself—has diluted the impact. Since it is a constant challenge for anyone on top to maintain parity, it is patent that the great Gallic musichall star felt it necessary to embellish his stuff. The record routine is not it. He does it three times, singing duets with disks or in accompaniment to a recording, as in the Tommy Dorsey platter. The other two items are pseudo-duets with Lena Horne ("All Right With Me") and Sallie Blair. He doesn't need it. For one thing, it can't be said he has not the time to rehearse with the full Emil Coleman orchestra because the Frenchman's own maestro-accompanist Fred Freed, along with the savvy and veteran Coleman, could easily overcome it. Besides, none of these three items are quite in the Chevalier character.

The answer is that the star's best moments came with the nostalgic reprise of "Louise," "Mimi," etc., and while he is correct in not relying too much on the nostalgic hit parade he has enough new stuff to offer. Certainly his three items from "Gigi"—incidentally a one-man trailer for that upcoming Metro film—are fresh. Certainly his mimicry and "impressions" and that socalled "French hit parade" (most of them so well-known now in the U.S. as to lose their identity, plus the fact he does some Yank pops in French) constitute a sufficient cross-section of the new values.

Slick showman that he is, Chevalier's literate, or-the-button English, impeccable in the choice of language and glamorized by his trademarked Gallic brogue, makes the language differential almost nil. He has several new French tunes—"Chapeau" is one of his outstanders—and by being able to consume over an hour it is evidence enough that he has ample room for editing himself down.

Chevalier plans a one-man show for a week at the Greek Theatre, Los Angeles, after his five-week stay at the Empire Room. This charity preview may have been something in the way of a previous audition. Then, too, a partisan French crowd kept him on but it was patent that, after all was sung and done, "Mimi," "Louise," "New Kind of Love" and "Valentina" had it all over the discotheque stuff. Withal, Chevalier remains a giant as an international headliner—it's just a case of too many courses to the banquet. Abel.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 8.

Tony Martin Allan Drake, Bert May, Don Kirk, Flamingoettes (12), Jack Cathcart Orch (20); staged by Hal Belfer; $3 minimum.

Tony Martin's latest turn in the Flamingo Room is draped with a colorful Caribbean motif, staged with imagination and flair by Hal Belfer. Star applies his w.k. savoir faire to the surroundings, and again shows why he's one of the best song stylists in the biz. With the voice that a femme first-nighter described as "beautiful and bedroomy," he offers such as "Fascination," "Gigi," "I Love All of You," "I Get a Kick Out of You," "All The Way," ("I borrowed that song from the other singer") "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries," "There's No Tomorrow," "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You," "Begin the Beguine," "Taking a Chance on Love," "Fire Down Below" and his theme, "I'll See You In My Dreams." Two Latin-type terpers, Alvie Corona and Diane Nellis, excitingly decorate some of the Martin production numbers. Conductor-88er Al Sendrey is the star's expert teammate with the Jack Cathcart orch (20).

Allan Drake has been away from the Strip for a year, and is back with all new material. He's one of the most refreshing standup comedians to play Vegas in many months—he kept first-nighters laughing heartily with his fast and well-paced gags. His singing voice is good, and the parodies exceptionally clever.

Bert May clicks as the featured terper in the productions, and he's given top-level assistance by vocalist Don Kirk and the Flamingoettes (12). Show is skedded for four frames. Duke.

Chase Club, St. Louis

St. Louis, April 3.

Johnny Mathis, Jimmy Dorsey Orch (17); $1.50-$2 cover.

This is goosepimple week at the Chase Club, with Johnny Mathis in charge of the thrill department. He's not much as to size and would probably be blown clear away in any wind at all, but the big mellow voice that comes out of him is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. And by the time he's through, he looks about 10 feet tall.

Luring some of the Chase's biggest crowds this season (which was no surprise to the management, banking on the record and Academy Award publicity), Mathis works hard in the two shows nightly with a varied string of ditties that's bound to get everybody somewhere down the line. He keeps the chitchat at a happy minimum and just stands there belting them out.

Most of the first-night turnout was obviously made up preponderrantly of crooner buffs well acquainted with Mathis records. Whenever he started the first bars of one of his hit platters, the applause rang the rafters.

The Jimmy Dorsey orch, led by trumpeter Lee Castle, continues with its own floorshow contribution, a fine nostalgic parade of tunes associated through the years with the Dorseys.

Mathis closes April 16, with Eydie Gorme and the Maxwells coming in for two weeks and the Paul Neighbors orch in for six weeks. Bob.

International, Houston

Houston, April 4.

The Modernaires (5), Shep Fields Orch (11); presented by Porter Parris; private club, no cover or minimum.

The Modernaires, dean of the nation's singing groups, showed at their opening here April 3 just why they have been around for so long and with such success. This is a top act, as smooth and solid as the Glenn Miller tunes they sing so well.

Their sense of comedy is highly professional, as is shown in "I Can't Carry a Tune" in which sweet-voiced Paula Kelly, only gal in the group, mimics with sandpaper-style tonsils that flatten every note that scratches its way past them.

To an audience largely new to the Mods, Dick Cathcart's trumpet playing is an added surprise to a vastly entertaining evening in this plush room at the Shamrock Hilton Hotel. Cathcart, ranking with the best, gives superb imitations of Harry James, Bunny Berigan and Clyde McCoy.

Top applause comes when group makes with their best known songs; those they made famous while with the old Glenn Miller outfit.

Shep Fields orch provides them with expert support. Act closes April 16, followed by Carmen Cavallaro. Harr.

Bolero, Barcelona

Barcelona, March 31.

Charito Leon & Ernesto Lapena, Paco Leon, Leo Heredia, Gerri Gale; $1 minimum.

Bolero, top local nitery, has Charito Leon and Ernesto Lapena, good Spanish dancers. Scotch reel by Leo Heredia is very agreeable also, and America's Gerri Gale, on her first tour in Spain—first she went to the Morocco in Madrid—brings to the show a new aspect.

Her style differs so much from local talent that the audience applauds with enthusiasm. Her dancing suggests ballet but her fruit-selling stint and others bits make for a hit. Cabo.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, April 1.

Earl Wrightson & Lois Hunt, Tippy & Cobina (Manuel & Marita Viera), Mata & Hari (with Fred Stamer), Martha Schlamme (with Frank Hamilton), Ben Arden Orch (10); $2 cover, $2.50 Sat.

New Empire Room layout is only an intermittently satisfying affair. Part of the fault may lie in producer Merriel Abbott's decision to pad the show as compensation for absence of big names. At any rate, response at first night (1) was less than enthusiastic.

Toplining Earl Wrightson & Lois Hunt offer fine voices and pleasant miens through their 27-minute recital, but little else. Act gets across the obvious sweethearts image, but it's a souffle that could benefit from some parody or satire stuff as condiments. Turn isn't helped any by insipid dialog, despite an economy of verbiage.

Most of the route is dueted, with each taking only a single solo. Wrightson's alone for a stout and predictable "It Ain't Necessarily So," and Miss Hunt longhairs her prime Metopera role of Musetta for the waltz from "La Boehme." Latter copped the best mitting, but with saxophones in back it was a jarring experience, even in a nitery. Among tandem chestnuts are "Lover," "September Song," "Where or When" and "With a Song in My Heart."

Satiric terp team of Mata & Hari shows generally good imagination that does not always hit the mark. Their blind date bit, for one, is a somewhat obscure burlesque, with the fault mainly in conception. It deals with a garish twosome, when it could have focussed with more point and humor on conventional modern teenagers. Dancers have a sock windup with a symphony concert, he batoning and she as virtuoso. Both simulate a full orch before it's over, with inventive "score" synchronization by 83er Fred Stamer.

Only mildly diverting are monkeys Tippy & Cobina, put through their paces (on the bongos and at a small electric organ) by Manuel & Marita Viera. Act, a tv guest-repeater, limps till Toto the chimp is brought on for some mimicry, getting the best rise with a Jimmy Durante impresh.

Room is experimenting with a between-shows "Little Show" slotting multi-lingual folksinger Martha Schlamme, who has built a local following off her Gate of Horn and recital appearances, and should mean some gravy biz for the hospice. Singer clicks with trained soprano pipes, plenty of warmth that comes over, and animation that's a big help outfront against the language barrier. Songs are native to such diverse regions as France, Ireland, Israel, Spain and the U.S. Excellent guitar backing for the 30 minutes from Frank Hamilton.

Main show gets competent musicianship from the Ben Arden orch (10). Layout remains through May 7, except for Wrightson & Hunt who leave after April 14, with French turesmiths Varel & Bailly with Les Chanteurs de Paris (7) replacing. Pit.

Murray Franklin's, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, April 1.

Murray Franklin, Terry Haven, Dick Havilland, Danny Rogers, Sue Lawton, Snuffy Miller, Linda Bishop, Eddie Bernard; two-drink minimum.

This pop all-nitery is a landmark for the natives, and a rendezvous for show bizites and the hip crowd when they're in town. Located opposite the Roney Plaza, the layout is an inviting one, with a rocking chair section to provide the house-party atmosphere and comfort. It's also been an incubator and springboard for talent looking for a showcase, namely, Roberta Sherwood, Don Rickles and lately Dick Havilland, who was found there by tv producer Nat Hiken and pacted for his new "Magnificent Montague" series.

Currently, a blonde, puckish panned gal with a penchant for sharp satire and incisive impressions of old vaude and cafe greats heads up the wacky-lined proceedings guided by Franklin, himself no mean raconteur, guitarist and ad libber.

Terry Haven is a solid standup comedienne as well as mimic. She works in fast, sometimes ad lib fashion to set herself with the crowd. Penchant for the situation invent is given full play in interchanges with almost-on-her-lap ringsiders. The build to her big items is a warm and giggly one and, when she hits into a special material bit penned by accompanist Ernie Held, she's on her way.

Takeoff on Martha Raye is as close to the original as an impressionist can get, as are her nostalgic Fanny Brice and Sophie Tucker. She's on for well over 30 minutes to keep the laugh rise on high level. Miss Haven has worked the biggeries here such as Fontainebleau, but in this setting her chance to get off the act-beam and indulge in free-wheeling sessions is allowed full play, for big results.

Havilland, a feature here for over a year now, is a Clifton Webbish type in looks, material and manner. His underplayed stuff is original in concept, offbeat in content, the breaks from quiet demeanor into weird song sounds in his lampoons on current pops sparking startled howls. He's made to order for the smarteries where eggheaders and the average Joes who become cultists of a particular performer abound.

Danny Rogers is a vet comedian and his work provides the contrast to a Havilland type. He's tops on the old softshoe hoofery, the panto biz, notably the oldie poker game bit which he has perfected to point of constant risibility perk-up; he's also funnily involved in a series of blackouts that thread the show, worked out on a small stage with mite-sized Snuffy Miller—there's no talk, just deadpan approach to some broadly funny quickie pantosketches in the old Club 18 manner.

Sue Lawton is a sweet-faced thrush—also a long-stayer here—with plenty know-how in the art of taking torch or ballad and making them sound like a personal lament; on a rising beat, she more than holds her own. Tall Linda Bishop serves as the gal singer who has her routining broken up by the blackout bits; on her own she is okay on a "Love For Sale" type of tune, or a rhythm belting.

Franklin is the big draw here He's a happy host as well as smooth, always nimble conferencier. Where there's a lull, he takes over for the pickup that might include anything from a personalized gag-series to a spoof on magicos. Eddie Bernard is an expert pianist who keeps musical matters on the full scale. Franklin holds acts for weeks at a time, with occasional additions when a likely looking talent seeking a Beach showcasing is taken on. Lary.

Black Hawk, S. F.

San Francisco, April 4.

Lurlene Hunter, Vido Musso Orch (5); 90c admission, no cover.

Lurlene Hunter, making her Coast debut, displays a strong set of pipes and a deft manner of selling the crowd in this hipsters' paradise. Working under the worst possible opening night handicaps (Easter weekend, and a band and pianist she met the night she went to work), she nevertheless handles herself in major league fashion.

Her show, well paced and effectively planned, consists almost exclusively of w.k. showtunes. Her patter between numbers is soft and easy on the ears and there is little of the usual record hustling that goes on today.

The Hunter voice is strong, jazz oriented and an effective vehicle for her selection of numbers. She is well gowned and handles herself with assurance, getting the audience on her side without stooping to any gimmicks or copping a plea on no rehearsal.

All in all, this is a good show and her presence in town should not only help her Vik albums but build her a following for future appearances. Vido Musso's orch does a workmanlike job of backing the singer and alternating with her. Feature solo spots are shared between the leader and trumpeter Allen Smith. Show opened April 4 for 10 days. Rafe.

Interlude, Hollywood

Hollywood, April 4.

Cal Tjader Quintet; $3 minimum.

It's questionable whether Gene Norman's current booking of the Cal Tjader Quintet at his Interlude will please all the nitery rounders, but it's surefire for the progressive jazzites. Tjader's opening was to a packed house comprised mostly of the jazz cult that breathes this type of music. This booking is not for patrons that expect to hear a song played as it was originally penned. The notes come out as each individual musician feels them and, accordingly, plays to that mood.

Tjader, like Lionel Hampton, is one of the best vibe men in the business and proves it. Throughout his turn he pounds both the soft and hard mallets in excellent fashion. Good backing is supplied by Vince Gerondi, piano; Al McKibbon, bass; Willie Bobo, drums, and Mango on the bongos.

At this session, selections heard included "Autumn Leaves," "Tenderly," "Mamblues" and "Guarachi Guaro." Tjader holds over indefinitely. Kafa.

Blinstrub's, Boston

Boston, April 5.

Jimmy Durante, with Sonny King, Eddie Jackson, Borden Twins, Sally Davis, Jack Roth, Jules Buffano, Line (6), George Carl & Arlene (2), Moro Landis Line (10), Michael Gaylord Orch (10), Lou Weir; $6 minimum.

Jimmy Durante tears up this 1,700-seater in a round of frenzied action, liberally laced with nostalgia, tv bits and Duranteisms to win one of the biggest salvos ever afforded a performer in this South Boston bistro. Caught Saturday (5) and in for a nine-day stand, he was on for 90 minutes to a jampacked house. With a $6 minimum and showtime moved back from 8:30 to 7:30 for first, the Schnoz looks to set a record in his initialer for the spot.

Durante's centerpiece is big Sonny King, who is given the greenlight to cavort, mugg, pipe like Durante and give out with his own style in a high-pitched voice. There's the usual mayhem with bandleader, this trip involving Mike Gaylord, plus Jack Roth and Jules Buffano. Despite all the frenetic goings on, first part wears a bit dull until Eddie Jackson struts on to spark new zing. The six-girl line is eye-filling.

The crowd gives whameroo mitting to Jackson on his strutaway turns, and a rock 'n' roll finale with King, Jackson, Durante as bebopers aided and abetted by three heavyweight femmes and line, has impact.

Durante scores in a single at the 88 with spot, "Young At Heart," and gets off his "Umbriago" bits with the characteristic strut. Jackson's "Bill Bailey" wins terrific mitting. Durante & Co. socks it to the aud for full measure, rating two encores.

Instead of usual four outside acts, boniface Stanley Blinstrub has only one for this layout. It's a nifty opener, George Carl & Arlene doing 15 minutes of comedy acro and pantomine. Reminiscent of an English music hall turn although strictly a U. S. team, Carl gets off some of the trickiest eccentric terping seen on any stage, rigged out in bowler and long jacketed black suit. In acro bits with blonde, well-stacked partner, the duo get into some ludicrous and unorthodox positions for aud yocks. They bob off to thunderous mitting.

Length of show cuts Moro Landis line to one number, "Entertainment." Gaylord cuts the show in fine style and is inserted into the act by Durante for big laffs. This layout exits Sunday (13). Eileen Rodgers opens next day. Guy.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, April 4.

Jackie Miles, Garwood Van Orch (11); $2-$2.50 cover.

Jackie Miles opened the plush Empire Room Jan. 19, 1956, and he's been overdue since. His initial three-week date cadged enough customers to cinch a repeat.

Comic is back in the same groove, with a gift of gab that fractures the tab-takers, and from his opening (3) reception he should reap a hefty b.o. in his fortnight here.

Miles has new material for his fans—he offers a treatise on juvenile delinquency "in its latest stages." He relies on a favorite, fictitious foil, Big Bill Thompson from Houston, to spin some yarns about Miami Beach hotels and also kids Bing Crosby and Louis Armstrong. Calm comedian wasn't perturbed by a rude ringside heckler at opening; Miles retorted with squelches that made the interruptions seem planted—but added to the hilarity. Windup of the sock 35-minute stint is a reprise of his disk, "I'm A Rollin'," and its strictly a begoff.

Garwood Van orch, in its first local date since 1938, cuts the show cleanly and impresses with neat ensemble work that fils the floor for terp sessions. Band is set for 12 weeks. Bark.

Bombay Room, Omaha

Omaha, April 5.

Marjorie; no cover or minimum.

Marjorie (Slightam) offers a plush act in the plush surroundings of the Sheraton-Fontenelle Hotel's Bombay Room. The attractive brunet, slinky-clad in a red lace gown, is quite adept at both the 88 and organ and plays both at the same time occasionally.

Her arrangements are clever and, at the 30-minute set caught, "Heartaches" was a particular standout. Biz is okay, but might be helped if Marjorie's act were elevated. As it is, she's lost visually to more than half the room. Trump.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y.

Sammy Kaye Orch (14) with Barry Frank, Sandi Summers, Wayne Tex Carroll, Jay Glassingame Bond; $1-$1.50 cover.

Playing the room for the third time in less than a year, Sammy Kaye's orch has developed a real following at the Roosevelt Grill. This is most forcibly attested to by the fact that the room was crowded on an off-night of Holy Week, when caught. And to follow Guy Lombardo, a fixture here much of the year, is obviously no mean task.

Kaye ideally fits into this room with his easy batoning and showmanlike array of unusual tunes, pops and standards, many of them from his Columbia-Records file. No showoff spot, the patrons of the Grill apparently just come to dance, enjoy the excellent cuisine and listen to the "swing and sway" crew.

Kaye's outfit is not content with playing just pop numbers and waltzes but quite often will vary the continuity with a "rock 'n' sway" tune, a novelty number or a calypso. He still has Barry Frank as his male vocalist and Sandi Summers as femme balladist. And it's not difficult to understand why.

Besides these two singers, the aggregation boasts Wayne Tex Carroll, who clicks best with his "Sweet Little Sixteen," accomped via his own guitar strumming. There is Jay Bond to lead the special trio and quartet combos. And Kaye boasts a new pianist, Larry Green, who not only fits in well with the combo but is deft enough to do solos. Of course, there any number of vocal and instrumental combos (with Kaye often joining on the clarinet) to vary the usual array of tunes.

Top number by Miss Summers is her smooth handling of "Tammy." While he has numerous other songs, Frank makes a big impression via the timely "Easter Parade." Standout novelty tune is "Girl Next Door, Wowie," which was a fave with the crowd here. Among the better liked song numbers were "26 Miles," "All the Way," "Dancing in the Dark," "Be My Little Sugar," "Time on Your Hands," "Charmaine," "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking," "It Isn't Fair" and "Dance All Night." Wear.

Hotel Nacional, Havana

Havana, April 1.

Betty Reilly, Bob De Voye Trio, Sonia Calero, Ray Carson; "Dancing Waters"; Walfredo de los Reyes Orch.

Two years ago Betty Reilly appeared at the Nacional's Casino Parisien, but had second billing under Chiquita & Johnson, dance team. Today, she is back with star listing, well deserved. "Irish senorita" has the type of act which answers the eternal problem of Cuban casino operators: whether to appeal to the U.S. or the Cuban trade. She sings in fluent English and then switches to fluent Spanish, accompanying herself on the guitar, like any senorita. From Spanish she effortlessly moves to a French number, and then Italian, a calypso (wiggling in a tight, highly visual outfit) and rock 'n' roll—as it might be performed by Bette Davis or by Marilyn Monroe for toppers. Easy on the ears, Miss Reilly is also easy on the eyes: blonde, blueeyed and shapely.

Bob de Voye Trio, highly competent acrobatic dancers, comprise two young men who toss and whirl an engaging redhead in a red outfit. She is held aloft on one sturdy arm of a partner and rapidly rotated, then she finds herself on a knee on the floor, being twirled like a top. She comes up smiling bravely.

The Nacional's permanent "Dancing Waters" a shapely chorus led by Sonia Calero, a longtime performer in Havana theatre and nitery shows, and emcee Ray Carson round out the show. Jay.

Crystal Palace, St. Louis

St. Louis, April 1.

Lovey Powell, Kenneth Rexroth, Brook Morton, Jimmy Williams Trio; $1 admisison.

Lovey Powell, a long, rangy chanteuse singularly unblessed with the attributes so dear to the hearts of Gina Lollobrigida, Jayne Mansfield, et al., manages to look sexy anyway and sells her songs of gaiety and tenderness Handsomely. This is a return for her at the Crystal Palace, where she packed 'em to the rafters last time around. She's continuing her winning ways this session, sparked by a capacity gathering on the Tuesday (1) opener, usually a very slow night of the week here. Miss Powell's accompanist, Brooks Morton, contributes considerable to the act with his accomplished keyboarding and an occasional blithe foray into song.

Poet Kenneth Rexroth, held over, has built up a fine hard core of loyal followers in the few weeks he has been here holding forth with his poetry-jazz concerts. For the new show he has added some provocative new thoughts from the avant garde rhymesters, including himself. The Jimmy Williams Trio, a young and cool local group, makes nice mellow sounds all the way.

Miss Powell will be headlined at Crystal Palace for four weeks, with the act to follow not yet booked. Bob.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 8.

Frankie Laine, Jack E. Leonard, The Belmonts (2), Nancy Dru, Shirley O. Mills, Ed Krieg, Wally Green, Ralph Keik, Alex Plasschaert, Cee Davidson Orch (21), Dunes Showgirls & Dancers (20); costumes by Bermon; $3 minimum.

Believers in the theory that you shouldn't change horses in midstream were surprised when the Dunes announced it was going to drop its highly successful Minsky revues (for four weeks only) and put in a show that could turn out to be a carbon of the other types of entertainment on the Las Vegas Strip.

The show in question headlines Frankie Laine, has Jack E. Leonard as its comedy star, features some exceptionally fine terping by the Belmonts (2), very good singing in the upper-note department by the pretty production canary, Shirley O. Mills, provocative body contortions by Nancy Dru who is covered by silver paint, and the beautiful showgirls and ponies (20) are plentiful. It adds up to a highly entertaining and handsomely mounted package.

Laine, an alumnus of the Desert Inn, makes his Dunes debut in this and is a crowd-pleaser with his stylized songology from the time he makes his entrance driving an MG auto. Numbers include "Luck Be A Lady Tonight," "Old Rocking Chair," "Shine," "Lonesome Road," "I Believe," "Jezebel," "Granada," "Moonlight Gambler," "Annabelle Lee," a dramatic and torchy medley, plus his trademarked "Wild Goose" and "Mule Train" requested by first-nighters. In an effective gimmick on "Ma'mselle" and "Laura," he sings to the Michel Legrand music which was taped in France. Conductor-pianist Al Lerner smoothly guides Laine with the augmented Cee Davidson orch (21).

Leonard returns to Vegas in this, after several years' absence. Some of his gags are familiar to Strip habitues, but his manner and delivery are so ingratiating, nobody cares. The yocks are consistent and generous, and his softshoe routine is good for heavy mitting. At opening show, he spotted a familiar face in the audience and said, "The next number is dedicated to Gene Austin, who did a good job of getting out of the business."

The lavish production numbers were staged by Madame Komarova, with musical arrangements by Joyce Brown. Show runs through April 30, then Harold Minsky returns with "Life Begins At Minsky's." Duke.

Ann's 440, S. F.

San Francisco, April 4.

Lenny Bruce, Gloria Padilla, Belasco Four, Johnny Price Trio; $1 admission.

Headliner at this North Beach nitery is Lenny Bruce, a wildly insane comic whose material is beyond surrealism, farther out than Mort Sahl and devestating in its attacks on the pompous, the pious and the phony in American culture.

Although Bruce is heavily oriented with motion picture gags and inside jokes of the music business, there is enough of his searing commentary that can be grasped by the ordinary club audience; he is currently doing the best business the spot has had in weeks.

Bruce is a good bet for any jazz club in the country; his humor is right out of a roadband sideman's perspective and delivered in a heterogeneous mixture of underworld argot, hipster slang and show biz patter. A standup comic who takes off from the daily paper a la Sahl, Bruce occasionaly strays into areas that will bug the sensitive but completely gas the rounders in the audience.

Almost completely unknown in Frisco except to a few hippies who had dug him in his extended L. A. appearances, Bruce has in less than a week via w.o.m. and column plugs built into the hottest sleeper comic in recent local history. Looks like Ann's 440 has a longtime hit on it's hands with this boy. He's in for a month and should last longer.

Sharing the bill are Gloria Padilla, a shake dancer, and the Belasco Four, instrumental and vocal combo. Rafe.

Moulin Rouge, L. A.

Los Angeles, April 2.

Helen Kane, Dominique, Toni Dalli, Donn Arden's "Pariscope," Dick Stabile Orch (12); $5.50 package.

While the little moons are beeping from their orbits, Helen Kane is booping for the terrestrial trade at the Moulin Rouge. It was 30 years ago that her baby talk swept the nation with her boop-a-doops, but times have changed and all that remains of her trademarked gimmick is the nostalgic memory. She's in for a week but will hardly catch much trade for the dual reason that this is one of the worst nitery weeks of the year and her appeal is only to those who can hark back to her three-decade past popularity.

She seemed a little uncomfortable at the stage mike and her voice has picked up the natural rust that accumulates over the years. Her repertoire is spread over the songs associated with her early days and lending themselves to the interpolated boops. She opens with "You Can't Keep a Good Girl Down" and then jaunts down memory lane to refresh the sitters that it was in 1928 she sang "Wanna Be Loved By You" in a Metro picture. Her monkey number and "Waitin' at the Church" allow for a certain cuteness that seem incongruous to her heft. Her booking by Frank Sennes was the direct result of her recent appearance as Ralph Edwards' subject on tv's "This Is Your Life." What she needs is an act. Just booping away won't get her many night club dates of the Moulin calibre.

Dominique, a shifty lad with fast hands, made patsies of his stooges by relieving them of their wallets, watches, shirts and socks. He works fast and shares the evening's plaudits with Tony Dalli, a power singer called back after a five-week stand to fill for the De Castro sisters, one of whom took ill. Dalli has been booked into the Desert Inn at Vegas and should boom his way into high acceptance as a younger and fresher replica of Mario Lanza.

Donn Arden's "Pariscope" is still an eye-filling extravaganza to lure the visiting on-the-towners. The Sennes showmanship is everywhere evident. Dick Stabile waves the orchestral wand and laughs it up. Show runs for 70 minutes. Helm.

Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Sheila Reynolds, Howard Beder, Ish Ugardi Trio; $3.50-$5 minimum.

Le Cupidon's stature as a showcase for femme singers is gaining in importance. The room is able to get singers that have been crowded out of the rosters of the topline hotel rooms, and thus the spot is being assured a standard of performer, this season, that's generally of a higher level. Newest to hit this room is Sheila Reynolds who was last displayed at the Maisonette of the St. Regis Hotel.

Miss Reynolds is a singer of ability who uses a well-groomed voice to maximum advantage. The tunes are well selected and seem to have been tailored for the hotel set. She has a line of standards that are colorfully treated and given excellent projections. Her subjects have a wide base, including a specially written effort on Gallic chantoosies, but her greatest strength is in her straight tunes which seem to bear the confidence of good voice that knows what to do about the composer's intent as well as her own outlook.

Miss Reynolds' titian tresses and tasteful coutouriering add lustre to her well-turned act.

Howard Beder, the permanent conferencier, warms up the audience, and Ish Ugardi's Trio provides good showbacking. Jose.

Fontainebleau, M. B'ch

Miami Beach, April 5.

Sarah Vaughan, Morty Gunty, The Szonys, Murray Schlamm, Sacasas Orch; $3.50-$6 minimum.

This is a sock holiday package. The Szonys, no strangers to this stage, click, per always, with feathery lifts and spins worked into ballet patterns. Big score comes with their "Sleeping Beauty" ballet version, an aud reaction builder that reaches show-stop proportions when the sister is spun like a top from a one-toe stand.

Morty Gunty is another familiar here and works like a vet, belying his youthful appearance. The lad's got his timing down to perfection, to sharpen the steady laugh rise as he limns his life with young wife, the in-laws, his standard schoolteaching days. He's doing more on the impressions end, and it becomes a big point in his palm pull. The carbonings are incisive, worked out to smart material with the "Clown" song as the underliner to the Danny Kaye takeoff. He's a winner all the way.

Sarah Vaughan is the third returnee, and she too could do no wrong at show caught. Her shadings and varied tonal workings that switch from one key to another; her carefully blended collection of the new, the old and the offbeat and record clicks add up to consistent high level. End result is a begoff. Arriving April 10, June Valli, Rowan & Martin, with the Szony's holding over. Lary.

Largo, Los Angeles

Los Angeles, April 4.

Connee Boswell, Doodles Weaver Band (7); $4 maximum.

Connee Boswell's Friday (4) bow at Chuck Landis' Largo nitery brought out the rounders that well remember this songstress when the afterdark spots were seeing better days. At opener, though the crowd was small, it was very responsive to her aptly chosen repertoire of songs. Miss Boswell, no stranger to the nitery circuit, can give the customers what they want to hear—and she did.

Her "Farewell To Arms" is tough to beat by any standards. Other tunes done in comparable fashion are "Birth of the Blues," "Martha," "Some of These Days," "Blueberry Hill" and "When the Saints Go Marching In." A takeoff on Sophie Tucker brought a heavy hand and kept her onstage to warble "I Ain't Got Nobody," done real well.

Video comic Doodles Weaver is co-billed, and in addition to bringing along his band for musical chores; supplies a few laughs for the patrons. Weaver is very, very corny; so much so that he can make one give with the grin and eventually the howl. The material he uses has seen better days but his presentation is the laugh payoff.

The Weaver band (7) comes through on the notes in good style. Show stays two weeks. Kafa.

Black Orchid, Chi

Chicago, April 1.

Joey Bishop, Pat Suzuki, Joe Parnello Trio; $1.50 cover.

New layout at the intime Orchid, where biz has been only fair of late, looks to clean up over the two-and-a-half-week stand. Joey Bishop's been a local fave since his nabe nitery days some years back, and Pat Suzuki rates as a stalwart attraction off some exciting network tv showcasing.

Bishop's a very funny guy, spewing a profusion of one-liners, topical gags and verbal darts at the tablers. He kids Ted Lewis, with tophat and toy horn, and comes up with an East Indian dance parody that's simply a peg for staccato asides. Comic's w.k. sober-faced delivery projects a sardonic quality that gives the stuff an extra fine edge and a total incongruous effect that generates abundant yocks. His joke skein's especially glib when he's grousing.

Still in use is his "sanctuary much" getaway, and really doing that, by the way, still seems to be a trial for Bishop. He returned for some more sallies and a reiterated tribute to Miss Suzuki, but seemed at loose ends for a begoff, finally hitting on the "God bless you" capper.

Pat Suzuki (reviewed in New Acts) clicks in her first nitery turn since her Seattle show biz incubation. Joe Parnello Trio backs sharply, per usual.

Layout sticks till Johnny Mathis and Gary Morton take over April 17. Pit.

Mocambo, L. A.

Los Angeles, April 4.

Ann Mason, Frankie Sands Trio, Paul Hebert Orch (5); $2 cover.

Last-minute booking of Ann Mason during Holy Week at the Mocambo is reason enough for the sparse crowd that turned up at Tuesday (1) opener. The songstress socked across her numbers as though it were a full house.

Miss Mason, making her first return to the Mo in a year, pleases in both vocals and looks. She opens on an uptempo "Get Happy" and wind 20 minutes later with "When the Saints Go Marching In." Chirp digs dixieland numbers the most, and belts them across in grand old southern style.

With mike in hand she wanders around the stage through such tunes as "Up a Lazy River," "It Might as Well Be Spring," "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "Darktown Strutter's Ball." Ringsiders, especially the male contingent, are treated to some shapely gams when singer peels off bottom part of costume for finale.

Frankie Sands Trio (holding over) and Paul Hebert's house band (5) both are topnotch in musical assignments. Roberta Sherwood opens for two weeks April 11. Kafa.

Carillon, Miami B'ch

Miami Beach, April 6.

Lenny Kent, Betty Madigan, McKay & Charles, Dick Sterling, Jacques Donnet Orch; $2.50-$5 minimum.

The management of this newery, after experimenting with high-budget ideas for several weeks during the late, unlamented season, decided on a reentry in the competition along the hotel circuit, albeit on a modified budget. It has come up with a smooth playing package for first shot; one that comes off to better biz and aud reaction than the earlier, more expensive tries.

Lenny Kent is a staple here, but has been absent from the area long enough to hit with strong impact on return both with familiar and a load of new stuff. He's much slimmed down, and with it has slowed down in gag-tempo for a more solid laugh pull. The insidey one-liners anent weird news items on show biz names this time gets him howls. He's come up with a new routine on Vegas, a tough switch from the standard, but he's made it, and should be able to hold on to the originals long enough to get full values out of the material before it's adopted. He winds into a big palm payoff for a tight 35 minutes.

Betty Madigan has taken on stature as a cafe performer, going on this showing. She's class-gowned, class-coiffed and has material and delivery to match. Arrangements of pops and evergreens are handled in full-throated style—needed in this oversized room—and she gets them working with her nicely in a calypso number. Biggest item and a wrapper-upper is her Jerome Kern medley; she's chosen some of his best tunes and works them out in balanced, clever manner.

McKay and Charles have themselves a bright idea for their terp turn. They work change-of-costume into a flowing continuity that allows them to add novelty, never leave stage, and keep the build mounting for their assortment of ballroom, modern and other bright concepts. Dick Sterling, a handsome guy with strong aud command, emcees in top style. Jacques Donnet and his crew are an ace showback group. Arriving April 15, Denise Darcel. Lary.

Living Room, N. Y.

Versatones (3), Bob Ritterbush, Morton Downey Jr.; $2.50-$3.50 minimum.

The Living Room is one of the more unusual drinkeries in town. It's an extremely informal spot in which easy chairs, loveseats, and furniture normally associated with the parlor is arranged in conversational groups, with drinks served on cocktail tables. In front of this arrangement are a piano and a small stage for a collection of singers and instrumentalists.

The basic idea of the room is sufficiently good so that operator Dan Segal is enlarging the spot to get more seats, is building a private room on the floor above and getting extra space by moving the restrooms to the basement.

The current collection has some name interest in this hospice. The Versatones (3) are longtermers there, and Morton Downey Jr., who had a night off when layout was caught. The Versatones are a versatile set of Negro performers. There are two guitars and a congo drum in the group to provide their own accompaniment, and their voices have sufficient strength and color to achieve excellent results. The trio give out with a wide variety of numbers from calypso to rock 'n' roll, the ballads that work out so well at the late stages of the evening, and pops. They stay on for 30 minutes and hit it well.

Other performer on tap was Bob Ritterbush a balladeer providing his own guitar accompaniment. His work has a tendency toward samoness, despite a good personality and a basically strong voice. He needs catalog correction. Jose.

Pitt's Penn-Sheraton Eyes Return to Acts

Pittsburgh, April 8.

Penn-Sheraton Hotel, which as the William Penn used to be one of the town's leading cafe spots, is returning to that field but on a limited basis to start. Dancing will be resumed first, on a small floor in the Continental Room, and Charles Carey, inn's general manager, has plans to put in one or two acts later.

Previously hotel had its club in the more spacious rooms, first Chatterbox, then Urban Roof and finally Terrace Room, but about 10 years ago dropped all bands and entertainment.

Portugal's New Law

buildings must have a restaurant, a bar, a nitery, a theatre, a cinema and a hotel. That is, with whatever money the gambling rooms can make the management must provide ample facilities for amusement for those who don't gamble, and to help artists and tourism. Foreign companies can take over the casinos, but must constitute a Portuguese company and cannot own, at least officially, more than 49% of the shares.

The rules for the casino in Estoril, which is the one geared for the largest profits, are very stiff. The present casino will have to be demolished and a new one constructed, with the above mentioned facilities, on the Atlantic Ocean beach. Also the hotel must be constructed completely anew and the cost of the two buildings must not be inferior to the equivalent of $2,000,000. Experts say that to comply with all the regulations, legal deposits and building costs, the future company that would run the new Estoril casino and hotel until 1983 would need at least a capital of $6,000,000.

William Inge's "Dark at the Top of the Stars" and one for William Saroyan's "Cave Dwellers." "Music" beat out the Arthur Laurents-Leonard Bernstein-Stephen Sondheim "West Side Story" after N. Y. Daily News reviewer John Chapman switched his vote from "Story" to "Music" to break a 9-9 tie.

The musical tally, therefore, was 10 for "Music" and eight for "Story." Louis Kronenberger abstained from voting in the tuner division. "Anger," produced by David Merrick, led the foreign play field with 13 votes, while Patricia Moyes' adaptation of Jean Anouilh's "Time Remembered" tailed with three votes, followed by two for Osborne's "Entertainer" and one for Peter Ustinov's "Romanoff and Juliet."

sales v.p. of Columbia Records and more recently head of Cabot Records, is moving into the picture company as director of operations. Taps will headquarter on the Coast while Wexler's office will be in N.Y.

Columbia's entry into the disk biz completes the Hollywood studios' platter lineup. In recent months, United Artists, 20th-Fox and Warner Bros. have set up their own labels. MGM has been in disks under its own label for over 10 years, while Paramount bought out Dot Records two years ago.

Universal is controlled by Decca, and RKO has the Unique label.

New Acts

BILL HAYES & FLORENCE HENDERSON

Songs, Comedy
45 Mins.
Hotel St. Regis, New York

No newcomers to show business despite their youth, the happenstance of Bill Hayes and Florence Henderson as a mixed singing team was spawned by a new tv gimmick of pairing them on the Oldsmobile television commercial and its touring industrial show. Benevolent result of this slick, class nitery act is a big score for the huckster set who have often been decried for what-do-they-know-about-show-biz. It just so happens that the Detroit ad agency of D. P. Brother, which handles the Olds account, foresaw the potentials of pairing a pop singer whose "Davy Crockett" platter, for a time, was something of a national disease, and a slick ingenue who clicked for over a year in "Fanny," legit musical which starred Ezio Pinza and Walter Slezak.

To Hayes' credit he foregoes "Davy" and, seemingly, it's nothing missed because (1) either the class Maisonette audience at the posh St. Regis knows little or cares less about such fleeting-fame highlights as a "golden record," or (2) has a very short memory. Long on appreciation, however, was the enthusiasm for an attractive juve and ingenue who know their way with the rich song cavalcades—especially that undeniable Richard Rodgers salute—and have the authority and polish of seasoned performers.

Utilizing the "This Is Your Life" format as a salute to a standout songsmith, their pot-pourri of Rodgers (& Hart) and later Rodgers (& Hammerstein) is a memorable medley. It's a cavalcade which must forever keep the composer's works green in memory.

Combo's songalog misses no trick and no vocal nuance. It ranges from yesteryear sentimental pop to rock 'n' roll, from operatics to throwaway impressions (Chevalier, Mary Martin, Jeanette MacDonald, et al.), and the finaleing socko Dick Rodgers medley. It has pace, bounce and humor. Miss Henderson is a looker with a pert comedy flair; by no means the 100% serioso songstress. Hayes is ditto. He's a personable baritone with an ease and cafe floor repose which, vis-a-vis his equally authoritative partner, suggests him again for any audience exposure—from legit musicals to tv. He was in R&H's "Me And Juliet" in 1953-54 and a regular on the old Sid Caesar-Imogene Coca "Show of Shows." (Was a time when "great for Broadway musical" was the ultimate accolade for a versatile juvenile but with the unilateral scope of show biz, as constituted today, when a headliner segues from the Met to a floorshow, from the stage to television with equal facility; the defining of professional territory is now academic.)

For the St. Regis, with its marathon of chanteuses—Yank and Gallic brand—this young American combo is also a refreshing booking for the next five weeks. Patricia Wilson finales the winter season before the June 5 opening of the St. Regis Roof. Abel.

LIL GREENWOOD

Songs
20 Mins.
Purple Onion, San Francisco

Lil Greenwood has been knocking around the fringes for some time working small clubs and as a vocalist with bands. Her solo act, now freshened and designed for the egghead bistro joints, has all the elements of a winner and with a few slight changes might propel her into the general entertainment area.

Her repertoire is mainly pedestrian with little imagination in selection of material. On the night caught she did tunes such as "St. Louis Blues," "You'll Never Walk Alone" and "This Train" topping it with a encore version of "Blowtop Blues" which brought down the house. However, even hung up with this material, she has such an electric personality and conveys so much direct emotional appeal in her voice that she grabs the audience right away and never lets them go. Given a little coaching and editing, Miss Greenwood could be a socko cafe act. Perhaps more spirituals would be the answer. Anyone who can make an effective cafe performance with "You'll Never Walk Alone" is 'way ahead. Right now she's a good bet for records.

She paces her show nicely, is a good judge of audience reaction and builds swiftly to a climax. Rafe.

BETTY KEAN & LEW PARKER

Comedy
25 Mins.
New Nixon, Pittsburgh

It figures. Take Betty Kean's background in comedy as longtime half of the sister team of Betty & Jane Kean (Jane's now doing an act with Ron Fletcher) and Lew Parker's ditto as a single in vaude, cafes, musicals and tv, and the double-harness know-how is bound to pay off. It does, too, in spades.

Any way you look at them, Kean and Parker are on the gold standard. Besides, they're something new since most of the comedy duos these days are of the strictly male variety. What's more, the two of them look as if they'd been working together for years and years. At the moment, the turn is still a little rough because the material hasn't quite been bedded down but the results even now are extensive and the potential is terrific.

Miss Kean's still an uninhibited clown who can shake loose some tremendous mugging and loose-limbed canters while Parker manages the almost unbelievable job of being both a straight and a crack comic. A literate, civilized and highly polished one besides. Act consists of a little bit of everything, starting in the gag department, shifting to some song and dance, then into an Actor's Studio bit with Miss Kean rushing back and forth, to big laughs, behind piano for some outlandish changes to take off Marilyn Monroe, Gloria Swanson, et al, as they would do a role via "the Method." It winds up with a clever Eliza Doolittle-Professor Higgins bit that has punch and laughs.

For a finish, Miss Kean and Parker pull a sheet up around their backs while sitting on two chairs to give the impression they're in bed and go into a few minutes of "The Bickersons" by Phil Rapp. It's a sharp, smart slice of Rapp's typical domestic comedy, delivered by a couple of real pros, and over big.

Add Kean and Parker to the turns that can't miss. They're perfect for every type of room and a cinch for every type of audience. solid, Jackson. Cohen.

EDDIE CANO'S AFRO-JAZZ QUARTET

Instrumental Group
20-30 Mins.
Avant Garde, L. A.

A vital but not strident beat marks the Afro-Jazz Quartet led by pianist Eddie Cano, that opened this week at the Avant Garde after a break-in at the Sky Room, Tucson. Group features hot and fast jazz arrangements (by Cano) with a Caribe touch that lifts it out of the ordinary. Even in this small low-ceilinged room, the combination of drums, bongo and bass, plus the piano, does not seem oppressive. It is a top attraction for one of the Vegas cocktail lounges, as an intro act in a bigger room, or for dancing in a small club.

Cano formerly headed up a sextet and before that a 22-piece orchestra, but the diminishing number of sidemen probably means a more marketable package. Larger groups have recorded for RCA-Victor. New combo has Eddie Aparicio on drums, Ralph Veasques on bass and Carlos Mejia on bongo and congas. Pour.

PAT SUZUKI

Songs
17 Mins.
Black Orchid, Chi.

Pat Suzuki is a thrush with an impressive vocal and visual identity that should make her a click in almost any situation. Mite looms as the newest pop vocal excitement off some solid recent tv guesting that certainly has been a big pre-sell factor. Miss Suzuki, a Seattle Nisei, was virtually nowhere outside her own burg till she was video-slotted less than a year ago with Lawrence Welk, and she has since been exposed on the Jack Paar and George Gobel shows. Bookings also stand to benefit from her standout stint at the recent deejay conclave.

The pre-sell hasn't oversold. She has large, belting pipes that are very well controlled, and excellent diction. Also, intense eyes, a long pony tail, and a look of immense vitality. Her songalog is a savvy choice of standards, most of them uptempo and allowing for some arresting chord pyrotechnics. Singer also makes points via ballads, although her "Sunday Kind of Love" tended to evoke a Judy Garland comparison. Her best offering was her tv-tested (and not found wanting) "From This Mo-

Palisades Park's Beatty, Cannon & $2.50 Top Vs. R-B

By GEORGE GILBERT

Cliffside Park, N. J., April 8.

Battle of the sawdust and spangles was renewed Friday (4) at Palisades Amusement Park here when the Clyde Beatty & Hamid-Morton Combined 3-Ring Circus opened day-&-date with the Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey show a few miles across the Hudson in New York's Madison Sq. Garden. Same booking situation prevailed last year when the Hamid-Morton-Hunt Bros. Circus faced "The Greatest Show on Earth."

While the Beatty & H-M outfit boasts a number of top performers and is billed as the "largest tent show in the world," it isn't in the class of RBB&B. But big top buffs with a yen for an "oldfashioned" circus and heads of families out to save a buck will find Beatty's three-ringer rewarding entertainment.

Recession has hit the N. Y.-N. J. area hard and the Beatty $2.50 top with 50c general admission for moppets has been wisely stressed by the show. "Why Pay More?" the ads read. Tariff, incidentally, includes free parking and admission to the Rosenthal Bros.' park, where "12 acres of tents" are pitched. In contrast, RBB&B has a $6.50 top and parking is a perennial problem around the Garden sector.

Clyde Beatty & Hamid-Morton Combined Circus

Irving Rosenthal-George A. Hamid production with Clyde Beatty, Emmett Kelly, Hugo Zacchini, Josephine Berosini, Alexander Konyot, Panicks, Ericks, Elephants-Ponies (Miss Rosalie & Miss Colleen), Dorothy Jordan, Lurline St. Varian, Golden Kids, Rentons, Gleno, Attilana, Webers, Mario, Senorita Antoinetta, Ajax, Joanides, Miss Wong, Helen Collins, Dorothy St. Leon, Spanicks Victors, Seguras, Great Huberto, Miss Ming Toy; equestrian director, Count Nicholas; musical director, Raymond Aguilar. At Palisades Amusement Park, N.J., April 4-May 4; '57; $2.50 top.

Dual Advantage

Obviously there's a two-way benefit in booking a circus into an amusement park. Circus patrons in this instance are bound to leave some change at the park's 150-odd rides and concessions because the sole exit from the tent leads through the midway. Then, too, the park visitors are always potential customers of the circus. That this is almost axiomatic is attested to by the current 30-day stand compared with last year's 16-day run. The arena seats 4,500.

Show this year has 26 displays counting the overture, clowns and grand entrance procession, or four more than last year. Top billing goes to Beatty himself and deservedly so. For the white-shirted trainer, aided by a blank cartridge pistol, chair and whip, adeptly puts more than a score of lions and tigers through their paces.

Battle of the Cannons

Concluding display is the "original human cannonball," Hugo Zacchini. Spectacle is still as dramatic as it was three decades ago when the Zacchini act preemed with the Ringling circus. Latter show, incidentally, has "modernized" the stunt via use of an "atomic" cannon which spews out "two human spacegirls" (see review).

Layout has a fine high wire turn in Josphine Berosini, Femme walks up a steeply inclined wire to the tent's dome, where she balances atop a bike and walks blindfolded on the wire, among other feats. Other aerial artists rating salvos are Dorothy Jordan and Lurline St. Varian, a coupla striking blondes who loop the loop on the trapeze.

Less spectacular is the wire walking of Gaono, Attilana and the Webers. Each turn works in one of the three rings. Attilana miscued on two back somersault attempts but clicked on the third try. Billed as Aerial Webs, nine girls do acrobatics whilst hanging from ropes, with varying success. This display also includes Mario whose head balancing atop a trapeze is well done.

Alex Konyot, noted dressage rider, contribs some sock horsemanship flanked by Miss Rosalie and Miss Joan on highschool horses in neighboring rings. There's no lack of novelties. Senorita Antoinetta, a trim brunete, does a teeth slide from the tent dome; the Great Huberto executes a foot slide from the same place. A Chinese hair slide, scheduled to be done by Miss Ming Toy, was omitted opening night.

Headed by Emmett Kelly, clowns take part in four displays. They commit pranks familiar to generations of circusgoers. Aside from Beatty's own animal presentation, the elephants and ponies cavort under direction of Miss Rosalie and Miss Colleen, while larger pachyderms are later put through their capers by Miss Colleen, Miss Audry and Miss Leona. There's also "Little Timothy," a separate display, said to be the smallest elephant in captivity.

Golden Kids, unicycle turn, score nicely — particularly a two-year-old girl who handles her cycle with apparent ease. Balance of the bill is rounded out by some standard acts including the Panicks and the Ericks, comedy acrobats; the Funsters, comedy tumblers; Ajax, a juggler; Joannides, juggler on a slack wire; Miss Wong, who does a hair hang; the Spanicks and the Seguras, teeterboard turns; the Victors, gymnasts, as well as a pony-dog act handled by Helen Collins and Dorothy St. Leon.

Raymond Aguilar's band plays with traditional spirit, but a few more musicians would improve its volume. Also in need of improvement is the inept seating of customers. It prompted apologies by management to the capacity opening night aud and also delayed show time. Heated tent is an asset in this chilly April weather.

Apollo, N. Y.

Dells (5), Freddie Scott, Fidelities (5), June & George Brady, Coasters (5), Beverly Ann Gibson, Spaniels (5), Flamingos (5), Fats Domino (7), Reuben Phillips Band (13), Tommy Smalls; "Hired Gun" (M-G).

Apollo this week has a fine enough card to keep the majority of the pews good and warm until Friday (11) when Sammy Davis Jr., Fran Warren & Co move in for seven days. Current spread is aided by a holiday week, emcee Tommy Smalls (who as a local deejay can provide lots of promotional mileage via WWRL), and a carefully chosen, wisely staged—thanks to director Leonard Reed—rock 'n' roll lineup.

Stanza has several minor climaxes and the in-between stuff isn't so bad either. From the start, with Reuben Phillips leading the house band in a lively "Tequilla," show gives signs of being nicely laid out. In some instances, the raw singing talents can be faulted, but invariably the right songs and the right routines are there to lift the bill above the ordinary.

The Dells are carried nicely by the right arrangements, and from there solo Freddie Scott takes over. The toneless warbler is something of a letdown, but not too much. Any objections are quickly dispelled by the Fidelities. Like the Coasters and the Flamingos later on, they click, and big, with the house; their songalog is clean and clear and not without humor.

June & George Brady are two ofay teeners, the femme a little older than partner, who try their hand at some of the currently popular breathless adolescent singing. Again a slight letdown, but the five Coasters lift the stanza to its moments, particularly in a very funny hillbilly travesty. Routine has a sophisticated flavor, and is terrifically delivered by the group's velvet-voiced basso and its clever scat.

Then it's Beverly Ann Gibson, who thrushes and looks like Leslie Uggams, a popular teenage soloist from these precincts. The Spaniels are just okay in two, but the Flamingos, starting slowly, build to a catchy closer, this also indicating the fine hand of Reed in the staging. The headlining Fats Domino and his six sidemen are steady, offering a raucous yet appropriate instrumental and song wrapup for a good show. Art.

Freed's R&R Sugar Bowl For Miami B'ch Teeners

Alan Freed, rock 'n' roll disk jockey (WINS, N. Y.), is prepping a nitery for teeners in Miami Beach. Club, which Freed will operate in tandem with Ralph Watkins, will be on the site of the old Vagabonds.

Spot, which seats about 600, will be run on a $1 admission and a soft drink policy. Rock 'n' roll entertainment will be dished out, of course.

Freed plans to call the teener room Alan Freed's Sugar Bowl. The Miami Beach operation will serve as a test for the building up of a string of Sugar Bowls around the country.

88 – Count 'Em – 88

Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey heralds the "88th annual edition" of "The Greatest Show on Earth." The arithmetic is good, but the succession is complex enough to rate a footnote.

For its 1933 season (then in the first year of the five-year Sam Gumpertz regime) the biggest of the Big Tops was trumpeting its 50th or Golden Jubilee tour, emblazoning the profile likenesses of the five founding brothers—John, Alf T., Charles, Otto and Albert. That made the start of the "upstart" Rungelings (changed to the now famous surname) occur in 1884, when the freres took to canvas for the first time.

A few years before that they were playing empty stores and other modest locations, but with a "concert" company, of which the brothers were the chief performers as well.

As the Ringling Bros. circus, the tagline was "World's Greatest Shows," but their under-canvas debut was made under the title (Yankee) Robinson's Great Show. Ringling Brothers' Carnival of Novelties and DeNar's Museum of Living Wonders. This year (1958) marks its 75th tour. Ringling Bros. went to rails about 1890.

When P. T. Barnum was well along in years—about 64—he and partners W. C. Coup and Dan Costello established the Barnum circus; they opened in Brooklyn in 1871. It is that year which is used now to proclaim the Big Show's "88th annual edition."

Barnum & Bailey didn't come into being until about 1880. The Ringlings bought B & B in 1906, after the death of James A. Bailey, but it wasn't until 1919 that the brothers merged their show with that of B & B to form Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows as one traveling unit. Dating from the consolidation, 1958 would be the circus' 40th year.

In 1929, when John Ringling, the last of the dynasty, found his opening at Madison Square Garden threatened by the opposition Sells-Floto Circus, a unit of the Mugivan-Ballard-Bowers five-show American Circus Corp., he overnight bought out the latter group; by so doing he saved the Garden for the historic Ringling name. Thus, this year is the 30th since the 1929 buyout, which was the biggest deal in circus history, reportedly $2,000,000, in depression currency.
